758. 'He persecuted the woman who brought forth the male'=that those who are meant by the dragon, from hatred and enmity would reject and calumniate the Church which is the New Jerusalem, because it has the doctrine of life. —², Ex.

—². By the dragon are meant all who are in the love of self, wherefore he is called 'a great red dragon' . . . and also 'the devil and Satan' . . .

764^a. In that Church there are dragons, who separate faith from good works not only in doctrine, but also in life; but the rest in the same Church, who live the life of faith, which is charity, are not dragons, although they are among them; for they know no otherwise than that . . . faith produces fruits . . . and that the faith which justifies and saves is to believe the things which are in the Word and do them; whereas the dragons deem quite otherwise . . . Hence it is evident, that the Church from those who are not dragons, is meant by the earth which helped the woman, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth. The quality . . . of the reasonings of those who are meant by the dragon, concerning the separation of faith from good works . . . will be revealed elsewhere; also, that these reasonings exist only with the learned leaders; and are not known, because not understood, by the people of the Church; and that hence it is that the New Church . . . is helped by these, and also grows.

767. 'The dragon was angry against the woman'=the hatred of those who are meant by the dragon against the Church which is the New Jerusalem, kindled by the perception of its being favoured by greater numbers.

—². The Church in which the dragons are, afforded assistance . . .

768^a. The hatred of those who are meant by the dragon . . . is hatred against the truths of doctrine which are with (those of the New Jerusalem). Ex.

817. 'He spake as a dragon' (Rev. xiii. 11)=in a like affection, thought, doctrine, and preaching to those who separate faith from the life of faith.

819^a. Hence it is that the dragon, by which is signified the heretical dogma about faith alone, is further described by the two beasts . . .

847^a. Hence it is evident that this faith alone, like a dragon, has swallowed down all the truths and goods of the Word.

A. 125. The men of the Most Ancient Church . . . were instructed by means of visions and dreams, which were most delicious and paradisaical. 1122. D. 3382.

597². The men of the Most Ancient Church had immediate revelation . . . by means of visions and dreams from the Lord; by means of which it was given them to know in a general way what was good and truth . . .

959. I had a sad dream. On awaking, the punishing Spirits were suddenly present . . . and miserably punished the Spirits who had laid an ambush for me in my sleep . . . D.4236.

994⁴. Wherefore, when a man is asleep, he sees in his dreams equally well as when he is awake . . .

1268^e. In these things (the Antediluvians) confirmed themselves by their dreams.

1966. On Visions and Dreams. Gen.art. Ad. 2/182.

1975. As to dreams, it is known that the Lord revealed the arcana of Heaven to the prophets, not only by visions, but also by dreams; and that the dreams were just as representative and significative as the visions; and that they were almost all of one kind; and further, that things to come were disclosed by dreams to others as well as the prophets; as by the dreams which Joseph had . . . Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzar, and others; from which it may be evident, that dreams of this kind, equally as visions, flow in from Heaven; with this difference, that dreams occur when the Corporeal is asleep, and visions when it is not asleep. How the prophetic dreams, and such as are in the Word flow in, may, descend from Heaven, has been shown me to the life.

1976. There are three kinds of dreams. The first kind come mediately through Heaven from the Lord; such were the prophetic dreams treated of in the Word. The second kind come through Angelic Spirits, especially those who are at the right in front above, where there are paradisiacal things; from this source the men of the Most Ancient Church had their dreams, which were instructions. The third kind come through the Spirits who are near when man is asleep, which are also significative. Fantastic dreams come from a different source.

—². The Angelic Spirits who are at the threshold of the paradisiacal abode are they who insinuate such dreams . . . They belong to the province of the cerebellum, because the cerebellum . . . is awake while the cerebrum is asleep. From this source the men of the Most Ancient Church had their dreams, with a perception of what they signified; from whom came a large proportion of the representatives . . . of the Ancients . . . 2179³.

1978. There are other Spirits besides who belong to the province of the left chest, by whom dreams are frequently introduced . . .

1979. Very often, after such dreams, it has been granted me to speak with the Spirits and Angels who introduced them; they relating what they had introduced, and I what I had seen.

1980. After I have awaked, when I related what I had seen in a dream . . . certain Angelic Spirits, not of those who are spoken of above, said that they completely coincided and were the same as what they had been speaking about together . . . not that they were the things of which they had discoursed, but their representatives, into which their ideas were turned . . . in the World of Spirits . . . They said, further, that the same discourse could be turned into other representations . . . with indefinite variety; and that the reason they had been such was according to the state of the Spirits around me, and thus according to my own state in which I was at the time: in short, that a great number of unlike dreams may descend and be presented from the same discourse . . . because the things which are in the memory and affection of man are recipient vessels in which ideas are varied and received representatively according to the variations of their form, and the changes of the state. D.4033.

1981. I dreamed a dream, but a common one. When I awoke, I related everything from beginning to end. The Angels said that they coincided exactly with the things they had spoken about together . . . 6319. D.3916. 4146. 4404.

—². There was a person, of whom I had the idea, that he was in natural truth . . . With the Angels there was speech about natural truth; wherefore that person was represented to me; and the things he said to me, and did, in my dream, followed in order representatively and correspondently from their discourse together; but still there was nothing which was quite the same.

2514. 'In a dream by night' (Gen.xx.3)=obscure (perception) . . . When perception is treated of, 'a dream'=something obscure relatively to wakefulness, and still more so when it is said 'a dream by night.'

—^e. A state less obscure as to the doctrine of faith, is signified by God coming a second time to Abimelech in a dream, where night is not mentioned. 2528.

3698. '(Jacob) dreamed' (Gen.xxviii.12)=foresight. 'To dream'=to foretell future things; for prophetic dreams, which were Divine, were predictions of future things. . . As these things are signified by 'dreams' and 'to dream' in the internal sense; in the supreme sense, in which it treats of the Lord, foresight is signified; for predictions come from the Divine foresight of the Lord . . .

4083. 'I lifted up my eyes and saw in a dream' (Gen.xxxi.10)=the perception of natural good in what is obscure . . . 'In a dream'=in what is obscure.

4085. 'And the Angel of God said to me in a dream' (ver.11)=perception from the Divine, and presence in what is obscure.

4125. 'God came to Laban the Syrian in a dream by night' (ver.24)=the obscure perception of that good when left to itself. . . 'A dream by night'=what is obscure.

4682. 'Joseph dreamed a dream' (Gen.xxxvii.5)=

preaching about Himself. 'To dream a dream'=to preach; and as the dream treats about Joseph, it=to preach concerning the Lord's Divine Human. The reason 'dream' here=preaching, is that in these two dreams of Joseph all things foreseen and provided about Joseph are contained in a summary . . . Moreover, in ancient times, Divine truths were manifested either by speech, visions, or dreams; and from these there were preachings. Hence 'prophets,' to whom Divine truth was manifested by either speech, visions, or dreams, = those who teach truths, and, in the abstract sense, the truths of doctrine.

4685. 'Hear, I pray, this dream which I have dreamed' =the contents of the preaching. 4695.

4693. 'And he dreamed yet another dream'= preaching again.

5091. 'They dreamed a dream, both of them' (Gen. xl.5)=foresight concerning these things. . . The reason 'a dream,' in the supreme sense, =foresight, is that the dreams which flow in immediately through Heaven from the Lord foretell future things, such as were the dreams of Joseph, the dreams of the butler and the baker, the dreams of Pharaoh, the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, and prophetic dreams in general.

5092. 'Each his dream in one night'=concerning the event which to them is in obscurity. 'A dream'=foresight, and thence prediction; and as it=prediction, it also=the event, for the prediction is about this.

5093. 'Each according to the interpretation of his dream'=the event which they had in themselves. 'The interpretation of the dream'=explication, and thence the Knowledge of the event, thus the event which they had in themselves.

5104. 'We have dreamed a dream'=prediction. 'A dream'=foresight, and thence prediction.

5110. 'The prince of the butlers told his dream to Joseph'=that the Celestial of the Spiritual perceived the event . . . 'A dream'=foresight, and thence the event.

5112. 'In my dream'=prediction. 5143.

5115³. The dreams which flow in through Heaven from the Lord never appear otherwise than according to representatives.

5121. (Revelation by visions and dreams. Ex.)

vided concerning the Natural. . . 'To dream'=the prediction of future things; thus, in the supreme sense, foresight. And as it=foresight or what is foreseen, it also=providence, or what is provided, for the one does not exist without the other. Ex.

5211. 'And he dreamed a second time'=what is provided.

5219. 'Behold, it was a dream'=in that obscurity. 'A dream'=an obscure state.

5233. 'We dreamed a dream in one night' (ver.11)= what is foreseen in an obscure state.

5252. 'I have dreamed a dream'=prediction. 'A dream'=foresight, and thence prediction. That 'a dream,' here, = prediction, is evident from what follows . . .

5282. 'Upon the dream being repeated to Pharaoh two times'=because it is foreseen concerning both Naturals.

5430. 'Joseph remembered the dreams which he dreamed of them' (Gen.xlii.9)=that the Celestial of the Spiritual foresaw what would happen concerning the general truths of the Church in the Natural. . . 'Dreams' =foresight, prediction, event.

6492. In a dream my father appeared to me . . . D.2821.

T. 606. An unregenerate man is like one who dreams . . .

D. 7 (Index). That Spirits induce dreams; and, when man sleeps, they dream in like manner. 1882. 2436.

8 (Index). Dreams from Angels are altogether different; beautiful, delightful, instructive, predictive.

180. This night I observed that it is Spirits who represent dreams, and that to do so is their life while man is sleeping; and that when a number of persons are dreamed of, each Spirit sustains the character of one person.

427. Of peculiar mercy, some are prepared in sleep by means of dreams. . . Some are put into such sleeps, in order that they may endure vastations by means of dreams . . .

664. On the dreams of Spirits. . . I awoke out of a dream, and there appeared to me a Spirit who still continued his dream; hence I could perceive the state of Spirits in dreams, which is almost like that of man . . . His externals were asleep, so that his internals were in a dream.

690. They were as it were in dreams, because they were in their phantasies . . . 774^o.

779. There were Angels who insinuated this dream . . . wherefore the like dreams come from Heaven . . .

889a. The existence and nature of the interior memory may be perceived from the fact, that in dreams, in which the memory of particulars is not so much excited as in wakefulness, a man is wont to be presented with all his features . . .

1309. Interior or angelic thought . . . may almost be likened to man's living thought when he is in vivid dreams. Corporeal things are then separated, and also those which are nearest to corporeal things.

2951. For years I had dreams informing me about the things which were being written.

3181. On dreams, how and by whom they are produced. . . When I was awake, and another was asleep, I have been as a Spirit with other Spirits . . . who introduced dreams; and it has also been granted me to introduce dreams . . . and the other awoke three or four times after dreams had been introduced by me; and I then related the things, which he acknowledged . . .

3380. On dreams. 3383. 3877.

3383. (A wicked attempt disclosed by a dream of the Spirit himself.)

3792. The Spirits dreamed as I did . . . They supposed themselves to be quite awake . . . but I told them that they were in a dream . . . At last they acknowledged that they were in a dream. Such is the life of such, that while in dreams, they suppose themselves to be awake.

3877. Hence it was evident that there are different kinds of dreams; one flows in from Spirits, who act the part of the persons who are seen in the dream, and just as it appears in the dream; a second kind . . . is introduced by those who are in front above, and by others, which for the most part are representations; persons are indeed introduced in a like manner, but they are only their representations. A third kind is from the Lord, mediately through Heaven, or immediately.

4102. Their (incessant) speech flowed into certain things represented in a dream.

4151. (A dream about a bolster and a cloak interpreted.)

4191. Certain spoke within the sphere of Angelic Spirits . . . and I dreamed that my father had fallen into the water . . . but I had supported him . . . They said they had been speaking about the things I had written from the Word; the Word with me was represented by my father in his life-time.

4200. This night I dreamed, and when awake spoke with Spirits, who told me, that they had been around me, awake, and had introduced this dream . . .

4368^e. If this horror were in man's voluntary part, it would exist in dreams . . .

4437. On the state of Souls after death, from a dream. . . The state of Souls after death, how they see, etc., was shown me by means of a dream . . . for then corporeal things are lulled and as it were dead, still more so with me. (The dream described.) On awaking, I wondered that it was a dream . . . and I wanted to be in that state. I afterwards spoke with the Spirits who introduced it.

4544. On the wakefulness of the good, and the dreaming of the evil.

4576. I afterwards strolled through the streets of the city, not in a dream, but in spirit among Spirits.

D. Min. 4831. On the Lord seen in a dream.

E. 624^s. 'To dream dreams' (Joel ii.28)=to receive revelation; and 'to see visions'=to perceive revelation.

706^s. 'If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams' (Deut.xiii.1). . . 'A dreamer of dreams'=one who excites to do a thing; and, in the abstract sense, the excitation from which it is done . . . Prophets were instructed by a living voice from the Lord, and dreamers by representatives exciting to action; these flowed into the affection of the dreamer, and thence into the sight of the thought; for when a man dreams, his natural understanding is lulled, and his spiritual sight, which derives everything from affection, is opened.

750¹⁰. 'A hungry one dreameth who as it were eateth' (Is.xxix.8)=an erroneous opinion and faith concerning good. 'To dream'=an erroneous opinion and faith. —.

A. 3069. 'And I will drink' (Gen.xxiv.14)=the instruction of truth thence. 'To drink'=to be instructed. Where the goods and truths of faith are treated of in the Word, 'to drink'=to be instructed in them, and to receive them. Ill.

3089. 'To drink'=to perceive. In the internal sense, 'to drink' also=to be communicated and conjoined, and is predicated of what is spiritual, as 'to eat' is predicated of what is celestial. Refs.

3102. 'When the camels had made an end of drinking' (Gen.xxiv.22)=acknowledgment from enlightenment in general scientifics. . . 'To drink,' here, =the same as 'to draw waters,' and also as 'to drink-potare,' above; namely, to be enlightened.

3104². A state of vastated truth is signified by 'they shall drink water according to measure' (Ezek.iv.11).

3457. 'They did eat and drink' (Gen.xxvi.30)=communication. . . 'To drink'=to be communicated as to those things which are of truth. Refs.

3570. 'He brought him wine, and he drank' (Gen.xxvii.25)=the conjunction of truth afterwards.

4334. 'Eating and drinking' (Matt.xxiv.38)=their state as to the appropriation of evil and falsity. . . 'To drink'=the appropriation of truth ; thus, in the opposite, the appropriation of falsity.

5113¹⁴. 'I will not drink from now of this product of the vine, until that day when I shall drink it new with you in My Father's Kingdom' (Matt.xxvi.29): the good from truth and the truth from good, by means of which the Intellectual becomes new, or man becomes spiritual, is signified by 'the product of the vine ;' its appropriation is signified by 'to drink' . . . and that this will not take place fully except in the other life, is signified by, 'until the day when I shall drink it new with you in My Father's Kingdom.'

5567². He wanted to give me something to drink. There was in it such a [power] from phantasy, that it would take away understanding from those who drank it. This was represented, because he had deprived of the understanding of truth and good those who had adhered to him in the world.

5709. 'And they drank' (Gen.xliii.34)=the application of truths under good. 'To drink'=the communication and appropriation of truth ; hence, also, its application. The reason it is under good, is that all the application of truth takes place under good.

5710. 'And they drank plentifully' (id.)=abundantly. 'To drink'=to apply truths under good.

7320. 'The Egyptians shall labour to drink the waters from the river' (Ex.vii.18)=that they would be willing to know scarcely anything concerning it. . . 'To drink'=to be instructed in truths ; hence, 'to labour to drink'=not to be willing to be instructed . . .

7343. 'All the Egyptians dug about the river for waters to drink' (ver.24)=search for truth which they might apply to falsities. . . 'To drink'=to apply to falsities. 'To drink'=to apply, for he who drinks, applies to himself . . .

7344. 'Because they could not drink from the waters of the river' (id.)=no application from mere falsities. . . 'To drink'=to apply.

8349. 'They could not drink the waters for bitterness, because they were bitter' (Ex.xv.23)=that truths appeared undelightful to them, because they were devoid of the affection of good. 'To drink waters'=to receive truths, and apply them under good.

8352. 'Saying, What shall we drink?' (ver.24)=that they could not endure truths because they were undelightful from no affection for them. 'To drink'=to be instructed in truths, and to receive them, also to be affected with them, and thence to appropriate them. Refs.

8562. 'There was no water for the people to drink' (Ex.xvii.1)=the lack of truth, and thence of refreshment. . . 'To drink'=to be instructed in the truths of faith, and to receive them ; here, to be refreshed ; for as water and drink=potus-refresh the natural life, so do truths and the Knowledges of truth refresh the spiritual life ; for he who is in spiritual life, longs to be supported by such things as are called heavenly meats and drinks=potus-, which are the goods and truths of faith . . .

8568¹. 'If anyone thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink' (John vii.37). . . 'To drink'=to be instructed.

9272⁵. 'To tread the must, but not to drink the wine' (Micah vi.15)=to be instructed concerning the truths which are from good, but still not to appropriate them.

9960¹⁵. To drink spiritually is to be instructed in truths, and, in the opposite sense, in falsities ; thus to imbibe them. Refs.

10415. 'To drink' (Ex.xxxii.6)=the appropriation of falsity. 10466.

10686. '(Moses) drank no water' (Ex.xxxiv.28)=meanwhile no appropriation of the truth of faith. . . 'To drink'=the reception and appropriation of truth.

S. 15^e. 'To drink blood' (Ezek.xxxix.17)=to appropriate Divine truth from the Word.

R. 635. 'He shall drink of the wine of the anger of God' (Rev.xiv.10)=to imbue the life with the goods and truths of the Word falsified. . . 'To drink'=to appropriate them, or to imbue the life with them.

688. 'Thou hast given them blood to drink, for they are worthy' (Rev.xvi.6)=that . . . it was permitted those who have confirmed themselves in faith alone in doctrine and in life to falsify the truths of the Word, and to imbue their life with them so falsified. 'To drink blood'=not only to falsify the truths of the Word, but also to imbue the life with them so falsified ; for he who drinks, appropriates to himself and imbues.

2702¹⁰. 'To afford drink' (Ps. civ. 11) = to instruct.

2930⁴. 'The soul thirsting for drink' (Is. xxxii. 6) = a longing for truth.

3071. 'I will give thy camels also to drink' (Gen. xxiv. 14) = the enlightenment thence of all the scientifics in the natural man. . . 'To give to drink' = to enlighten. 'To draw water' = to instruct; thus 'to give to drink' = to enlighten; for enlightenment comes from instruction. 3102.

3092. 'She made him to drink' (ver. 18) = initiation. 'To give to drink' has a similar signification to 'to drink-bibere,' but 'to give to drink' here involves a greater activity on the part of him who drinks-bibit . . . Thus 'to make to drink' = to give the opportunity of receiving, which is the first of initiation.

3768. 'Out of that well they watered the droves' (Gen. xxix. 2) = that knowledge is from the Word. . . 'To water,' or make to drink = to be instructed.

3772. 'And they watered the flock' (ver. 3) = that doctrine is thence. 'To water,' or make to drink = to instruct . . . Thus 'to water them' = to instruct from the Word, and therefore doctrine.

3787. 'Water ye the flock' (ver. 7) = still, instruction thence for a few. 'To water the flock' = to instruct from the Word. 3790.

—². In the other life, man is not nourished by any natural food and drink, but by spiritual food and drink; spiritual food is good, and spiritual drink is truth; wherefore, in the Word, where 'bread' or 'food' is mentioned, the Angels understand spiritual bread or food, namely, the good of love and of charity; and where 'water' or 'drink' is mentioned, they understand spiritual water or drink, namely, the truth of faith. Hence may be evident what is the truth of faith without the good of charity. 5360.

6778. 'To water the flock of their father' (Ex. ii. 16) = that thence they might be instructed in good. 'To water' = to instruct. 6781.

9396³. Heavenly food is all the good of love and of charity; and heavenly drink is all the truth of faith from that good.

P. 230³. 'Whosoever shall give to drink a drink of cold [water]' (Matt. x. 41). . . 'A drink of cold [water]' = something of truth.

R. 632. 'Because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her whoredom' (Rev. xiv. 8) = because by profanations of the Word, and adulterations of the good and truth of the Church, she has seduced all whom she could subject to her dominion. . . 'To make to drink of that wine' = to seduce. E. 881.

D. 178. On the food and drink of Spirits. . . The cupidities of knowing are their drink; for there is nothing they do not desire to know . . . Wherefore, in the Word . . . intelligence is called 'drink.'

1842. See DRUNK at these refs. 2458. 3177⁶.

E. 102⁶. 'A drink of cold [water]' = to exercise charity from obedience.

[E.] 329². Spiritual drink is all the truth which is communicated and given to man by the Lord.

—³. In the Word, where anything of drink, or that serves for drink, is mentioned, truth is understood.

376⁹⁷. 'To drink wine' (Is.v.22)=to draw in falsities.

386⁹⁴. 'He who thirsteth for drink' (Is.xxxii.6)=those who long for truths.

483¹⁰. 'To make them drink' (Ps.xxxvi.8)=to teach.

518⁸. 'To give drink to My people' (Is.xliii.20)=to instruct those who long for it. 650³⁶.

617¹⁹. Spiritual eating and drinking is instruction, reception, and appropriation. It is here said of the Lord (Matt.xxv.35,42) that He hungers and thirsts, because from Divine love He longs for the salvation of all; and of man, that they gave Him to eat, and that they gave Him to drink, which takes place when, from affection, they receive and perceive from the Lord what is good and true.

624⁶. 'To give to drink with a drink of cold [water]' =to love and teach from a little innocence. . . 'To give the little ones water to drink'=to teach truth from spiritual innocence; and also to teach truths to those who are innocent.

4580. They used to pour libations on the pillars.

4581. '(Jacob) poured a drink-offering upon it' (Gen.xxxv.14)=the Divine good of truth. 'A drink-offering'=the Divine good of truth. . . The good of faith is what is signified by 'a drink-offering;' and the good of love by 'oil.' . . This, therefore, namely, spiritual good or the good of faith, or the good of truth, is what is signified by 'a drink-offering.' —⁴,Ill.

—⁴. The meat-offering and the drink-offering=the same as the bread and wine in the Holy Supper.

—⁵. The meat-offering and the drink-offering were added to the burnt-offerings and sacrifices. Ill.

—⁷. When they receded from the genuine representative of the worship of the Lord, and turned themselves to other gods, and poured drink-offerings to them, then drink-offerings=those things which are opposite to charity and faith, namely, the evils of the love of the world and the falsities. Ill.

—⁶. 'To pour-effundere—to them a drink-offering' (Is.lvii.6)=the worship of them. 10137⁷.

—⁸. 'To pour drink-offerings' (Jer.xliv.17)=to worship. —⁹.

—^e. 'Drink-offerings of blood' are also mentioned in Ps.xvi.4 . . . and by them are signified profanations of truth.

5943⁶. The wine of the drink-offering=the truth of faith thence.

10137. 'A drink-offering of the fourth part of a hin of wine' (Ex.xxix.40)=spiritual truth as much as for conjunction.

—⁶. Hence, when the meat-offering was offered, which was bread, a drink-offering was also offered, which was wine. . . Hence it is that by a drink-offering of wine is here meant the truth corresponding to the good which is signified by the meat-offering.

—³. That the drink-offering, which was wine, = the good of faith. Ill.

10207. 'A drink-offering ye shall not pour upon it' (Ex.xxx.9)=that there was not there a representative of regeneration by the truths and goods of spiritual love. 'A drink-offering'=a representative of regeneration by the truths and goods of faith and charity, which are the truths and goods of spiritual love.

10603². See ALTAR at this ref.

R. 316³. The meat-offering and the drink-offering in the sacrifices had a like signification (to the bread and wine in the Holy Supper). Ill. The meat-offering was of fine flour of wheat; hence it was in place of the bread; and the drink-offering was of wine.

A. 957. They are then driven out with fines.

1477^e. Thus He expelled the hereditary evil (and the human) from the mother. 2107. 2159. 2204^e. 2216^e. 2265. 2625^e. 2632. 2816. 3025. 3036. 3599². 4563.

1710. 'To pursue' the enemies = to expel evils and falsities . . .

1868². As to the nations which were to be driven out from the Lord's Kingdom . . . These things were represented by the nations which were driven out of the Land of Canaan . . . In like manner by the Jews, who were afterwards driven out thence. And so with many nations of yore, by which the like things were represented, as by the Horites, who were driven out of Mount Seir by the descendants of Esau; and by the Avim who were driven out by the Caphtorites; also by the Emim and Rephaim, who were driven out by the Moabites.

3142². 'To drive out the nations' (Ps.lxxx.8) = to purge from evils.

3654². 'The outcasts of Israel' (Is.xi.12) = their truths. . . 'The outcasts,' 'the dispersed,' 'the remains,' and 'the residue' = the truths and goods which survive.

4563. See DEBORAH (Rebekah's nurse) at this ref.

4565. The quality of the Natural as to what was expelled. Sig.

4663². The nature cannot be expelled; and, if it is expelled, nothing of life remains.

7189. 'With a strong hand he will drive you out of his land' (Ex.vi.1) = that with all his force and power he will put them to flight from his neighbourhood. . . 'To drive them out' = to put them to flight.

7670. 'He drove them out from the faces of Pharaoh' (Ex.x.11) = that the will of those who were infesting was entirely contrary to truth Divine. . . For that is driven out which is contrary to the will, or to the affections.

7980. 'Because they were driven out by Egypt' (Ex.xii.39) = since they were removed by those who were in falsity from evil. 'To be driven out' = to be removed; for he who is driven out, is removed.

8295. 'My hand shall drive them out' (Ex.xv.9) = that by power Heaven will be destroyed. 'To drive out' = to cast down, and thus to destroy.

9332. '(The hornet) shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee' (Ex.xxiii.28) = the flight of falsities from evils. 'To drive out' = to put to flight; thus flight.

9333. 'I will not drive them out from before thee in one year' (ver.29) = no hurried flight or removal of the falsities and evils which are signified by the nations in the Land of Canaan. . . For they who are in falsities and evils in the other life, are not driven out, but flee of their own accord.

—². The reason 'to drive out,' when predicated of evils and falsities, = removal, is that falsities and evils are not driven out by man, but are removed . . .

9336. 'By little and little I will drive them out from before thee' (ver.30) = removal by degrees according to order. 9343.

10638. 'I drive out from thy faces the Amorite and the Canaanite, etc.' (Ex.xxxiv.11) = the removal of evils and thence of falsities. 'To drive out from the faces' = to remove from the interiors. 10674.

D. 2498. They are at last driven out from the Societies of Spirits . . .

D. Min. 4600. That evil Spirits are not expelled, but recede of themselves; for they are obstinate . . .

4682^e. Unless this were expelled by the Lord, the whole human race would perish.

E. 433⁷. 'The outcasts of Israel' = those who are not in truths, but still long to learn them; and 'the dispersed of Judah'=those who are in the good of life, and thereby in love to the Lord.

[E.] 650⁴⁹. 'The outcasts of Israel whom the Lord will gather' (Is.lvi.8)=all in the Church who are in truths from good separated by those therein who are in falsities from evil.

Ath. 192. The evil with man cannot be expelled, but is removed, because he is not life in himself. . . . But, from the Divine in Himself, the Lord expelled the evil from the mother, wherefore He rose with the whole body. . . . On the cross everything maternal was expelled.

A. 3242². 'The dromedaries of Midian and Ephah' (Is.lx.6)=doctrinal things.

E. 324⁹. 'The troop of camels and dromedaries of Midian and Ephah'=the Knowledges of truth and good in abundance.

W. 355. The useless drones are led forth and deprived of their wings. . . . T.11⁷.

335⁴. Does the hornet-fucus major-think in its little head?

E. 1198⁴. Its guards, which are called drones. . . .

R. 875². Like a drop to the ocean. . . .

T. 503⁶. In whose eyes is the white speck.

E. 278⁵. 'The drop upon the herb' (Micah v.7)=natural truth.

Drop. Stillare, Stilla.

Dropping. Stillatio.

A. 8753³. The truths of faith implanted in its good, which are also signified by 'the heavens have dropped, and the clouds have dropped waters' (Judg.v.4). 9420².

M. 329². Every drop of your affection. . . .

T. 641³. If any drop of it, not so moderated, were to touch them. . . .

E. 594¹³. 'The heavens dropped, the clouds dropped waters'=the instruction, influx, and perception of Divine truth. 'To drop'=instruction and influx.

619¹⁴. 'The dropping of honeycombs' (Ps.xix.10)=natural truth.

644⁵. Intelligence and wisdom thence is signified by 'drops upon the grass, and drops upon the herbs' (Deut. xxxii.2).

730²⁸. 'To drop' is said of the influx, acknowledgment, and reception of truth.

A. 9086². 'Dropsy'=the perversion of truth and good.

A. 8545. Nothing heavenly is seated in their minds, but only what is earthy, which they call dross.

P. 215^e. Like gold which has dross within.

T. 328^e. They differ like. . . . dross and gold.

E. 540⁶. 'The house of Israel is to Me become dross. . . . they are even the dross of silver' (Ezek.xxii.18). By these words are described the false doctrinal things which the Jews and Israelites had framed from the sense of the letter of the Word, and which they had applied solely to themselves and their own loves; which are called 'the dross of silver,' because 'silver'=the truth of the Word; and 'dross,' nothing of truth, or that which is abstracted from truth, which is rejected.

SSS⁴. When the essential things are rejected, all the rest are dross. . . .

Drought. See DRY.

Drove. Caterva.

In troops. Catervatim.

A. 2122². At this day such flow into the other life in troops.

3767. 'Three droves of a flock lying near it' (Gen. xxix.2)=the holy things of the Church and of doctrinal things. . . . 'Droves of a flock'=those things which are of the Church, thus doctrinal things.

3768. 'Because from that well they watered the droves' (id.)=knowledge from the Word. . . . 'Droves'=the knowledge of doctrinal things.

3770. 'Thither were all the droves gathered together' (ver.3)=that all Churches and their doctrinal things are thence derived. 'Droves'=Churches, and also the doctrinal things which are of Churches, which are from the Word.

3788. 'Droves'=doctrinal things.

4025. '(Jacob) set for himself droves for himself alone' (Gen.xxx.40)=the separation of goods and truths from his own power. 'Droves,' to wit, of the flock, = goods and truths.

4266. '(Jacob) gave into the hand of his servants drove and drove apart, and said to his servants, Pass over before me, and set a space between a drove and between a drove' (Gen.xxxii.16)=the ordination as to how they would be initiated. . . . 'A drove'=scientifics, also Knowledges, thus doctrinal things. So long as these are in the external man, that is, in its memory. . . . they are signified by the droves given into the hand of his servants. . . . 'To set a space between drove and drove' =to prepare the way for the good which was to be received.

10600⁴. 'The droves of the flock and of the herd' (Joel i.18)=interior and exterior goods.

D. 2521. On certain troops of prophets in the Old Testament.

A. 5188^e. The mediastinus mentioned. D.1766.

B. 79^e. With them, good works are like slaves and drudges. . . .

T. 178². (Such men) are the drudges of priests.

Coro. 29². The men-servants and the maid-servants, with the other drudges.

Druggist. Apothecarius. D.3349.

Drum. Tympanum, Tympanizare.

A. 420². 'The timbrel' (Ps.cxliv.3)=good; and 'the harp,' truth, which praise.

1069². 'Thou shalt again be adorned with thy timbrels' (Jer.xxxi.4).

1118. Which is called the drum of the ear. 7361. D.3322.

3081⁴. The affection of truth from good is here and elsewhere described by 'timbrels and dances.'

—7. 'The damsels playing on timbrels' (Ps.lxviii.25)=the affections of truth.

3969¹⁴. 'Timbrel' (is a spiritual expression).

4138. 'In tabret and in harp' (Gen.xxxi.27)=as to spiritual good. . . The tabret and the harp are predicated of good, but of spiritual good, as may be evident from many places in the Word. Spiritual good is what is called the good of faith, and is charity.

—e. Drums and harps belonged to the class of spiritual musical instruments.

4653a. Those who relate to the membrane which is called the drum of the ear.

—³. As to a drum in special, it corresponds to spiritual good, that is, to the good of truth. The reason is, that a drum is not a stringed instrument, nor is it a wind instrument; but as it is of leather, it is as it were a continuous stringed instrument; and also because its sound is heavier and deeper than that of stringed instruments. This may also be evident from the Word, where 'a drum' is mentioned. Ill.

8339. 'In timbrels and dances' (id.)=celebrations from joy and gladness. 'Timbrels' are predicated of the affection of spiritual good, or of the good of truth.

R. 276. The instruments (used in the Temple) were chiefly trumpets and drums, and psalteries and harps. The trumpets and drums corresponded to celestial goods and truths, and the psalteries and harps to spiritual goods and truths.

T. 498³. Scarcely one desists until the drum is heard . . .

E. 323². 'New wine'=spiritual good; its joy is signified by 'a tabret' (Is.xxiv.7,8).

727¹⁸. 'Tabrets and harps' (Is.xxx.32)=the delights of the affection of truth.

863¹². 'The singers after the beaters and the players on timbrels' (Ps.lxviii.25)=all who are of His Spiritual and His Celestial Kingdom. . . 'The beaters and the players on timbrels'=those of His Celestial Kingdom. . . 'To sing,' 'to beat,' and 'to play on the timbrel,' are said from the gladness and joy of their hearts . . .

J. (Post.) 308. There is a human tone like the sound of a lyre, and also one like that of a heavy drum.

Drunk. Inebriare.

Drunkard. Ebrius.

See CUP and INTOXICATE.

A. 1071. Noah was drunken, that is, he fell into errors. 1090.

1072. That 'he was drunk'=that he fell into errors, is evident from the signification of 'a drunkard' in the Word. They are called 'drunkards' who believe nothing except what they apprehend, and therefore investigate the mysteries of faith; which being done by means of sensuous, or scientific, or philosophical things, man being such as he is, it cannot be otherwise, than that he should consequently fall into errors. . . The error and insanity which are from this source, are called in the Word 'drunkness;' nay, the Spirits . . . who reason about the truths of faith, and against them, become like drunkards. . . The Spirits who are not in the faith of charity, want to do nothing but reason whether it is so, and to know how the case is. . . They are at once known from this to be in no faith; a mark of which is, that they not only doubt about everything, but also in their hearts deny; and when they are instructed how the case is, they still stick fast, and start all kinds of objections, and never rest. . . And as they thus stick, they heap errors upon errors. These, or such as these, are they who are called in the Word 'drunkards from wine or strong drink.' Ill.

—³. 'A drunkard' (Is.xix.14)=those who want to investigate spiritual and celestial things from scientific.

—⁵. As drunkness signified insanities about the truths of faith, it was made a representative, and this prohibition was made to Aaron:—'Aaron and his sons shall not drink wine and drink that maketh drunken, when they enter the tent. . . ' (Lev.x.9).

—⁶. They who care nothing for the Word and for the truths of faith, and who thus do not want to know anything about faith, thus denying principles, are called 'drunkards without wine' (Is.xxix.9). . . Such drunkards suppose themselves to be more wide-awake than others, but they are in a deep slumber.

1073. He is said to be uncovered and naked from drunkness from wine, with whom there are no truths of faith; still more so, he with whom they are perverted.

2466¹². 'The wine with which they are drunken' (Rev.xvii.2)=falsity. As 'wine' and 'drunkness' have this signification, it is said of the daughters of Lot, that they made their father drink wine.

2597. There are Gentiles who . . . had known, that Christians lead the worst life . . . in drunkness, etc. . . . D.4401.

5120⁸. As wine inebriates and makes insane, so does falsity. Spiritual drunkness is nothing else than insanity induced by reasonings about matters of belief, when nothing is believed which is not apprehended. Hence come falsities, and, from falsities, evils. Sig.

[A. 5120]⁹. 'To be inebriated from the cup' (Lam. iv. 21) = to be insane from falsities.

—¹³. 'Making the universal earth drunken' (Jer. li. 7) = that they lead those who are of the Church into errors and insanities.

8904⁵. 'Making the inhabitants of the earth drunk with the wine of whoredom' (Rev. xvii. 2) = that those who are within the Church have been reduced into errors and ravings by means of falsity from evil; for 'to be made drunken' = to be led into errors through false reasonings and through wrong interpretations of the Word.

9553². 'Drunkards' (Is. xxviii. 1) = those who reason from falsities.

10283⁴. 'To be drunken with their own blood' (Is. xlix. 26) = to be filled up with evil and the falsity of evil, thus with proprium.

H. 379. As soon as the Angels think of marriage with more than one . . . they become like drunkards, because good is disjoined from its truth with them.

N. 51⁶. In the other life, when they think of spiritual things, they are like drunkards.

S. 118. After death, they who ascribe all things to their own intelligence, and little, if anything, to the Word, at first become like drunkards, afterwards like fools, and at last stupid.

R. 721. 'The inhabitants of the earth were made drunken from the wine of her whoredom' = insanity in spiritual things from the adulteration of the Word with those who are in that religiosity.

—². That 'to be made drunken' = to be insane in spiritual things, that is, in theological matters. Ill.

730. 'I saw the woman drunk with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus' (ver. 6) = that religiosity insane from the Lord's Divine goods and truths adulterated and profaned. . . 'To be made drunk' = to be insane in spiritual things.

M. 252^o. (The faults of the mind which are a cause of separation) are drunkenness, etc.

472. (The really excusatory causes of this concubinage) are intemperance, drunkenness, etc.

T. 72². Some as it were intoxicated . . .

185^o. Inebriated with paradoxes . . .

D. 1842^o. The stomachs of those who have indulged too much in intoxicating drink.

2422. On drunkenness. . . I spoke with Spirits about drunkenness, and it was confirmed by them that it is an enormous sin, both because a man becomes a brute, and no longer a man . . . and because he injures his body, and thus precipitates death, besides wasting in luxury what might be of use to many. It appeared to them so filthy, that they abhorred such a life . . .

2458. As to the faults of the body, which are not from the animus or from the mind, the case is different; as if there is a disgust for wine, or for intoxicating drink, from any cause in the body; there are such things with brutes also. . . The faults of the body are almost like one who is not able to walk, and therefore does not desire to do so, because his foot is broken or wounded.

3177^o. Unless he had been so withheld from . . . intoxicating drink, so as to have drunk simply water, he would have so fallen as to have come forth in the highest degree excrementitious.

3427. On the drunkenness of Spirits. . . It has been granted me to know, and also to feel a little, the drunkenness of Spirits, which is one of the infernal punishments, but was not a severe one. They who had formerly reasoned acutely, were long affected with the annoyance and stupor of drunkenness; and after they had heard many truths, they thus became drunkards, in fact, spiritually.

5219². They who sought for drunkenness, received it.

D. Min. 4801. On drunkards. . . The infernals sometimes come into such a state, that they are insane just as the insane are, and do not know what they are thinking and saying. This insanity is what is called 'drunkenness' in the Word.

E. 235⁴. 'A drunkard' (Is. xix.) = those who are insane in spiritual things.

240³. 'To make a companion drink in being drunken' (Hab. ii. 15) = to imbue with falsities so that he does not see truth. . . 'To be drunken' = to be insane from falsities, thus not to see truths.

329¹⁰. The abundance of (truth from the good of love) is signified by . . . 'They shall drink blood even to drunkenness,' and this from the sacrifice (Ezek. xxxix. 19).

376³¹. They who are insane in spiritual things, or in truths, are meant by 'the drunkards' (Is. xxviii). . . For they who are in falsities of doctrine, and who have confirmed themselves in them, when they are enlightened and see truths, in the other life become like drunkards. Such do the learned become who have confirmed themselves in falsities . . .

—'. The crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim, shall be trodden under feet' (id.) = that this intelligence shall entirely perish.

—³². These things are said of those who see nothing whatever of truth when they hear it and read it from the Word. They who are such, are said to be 'drunken not with wine, and to stagger and not with strong drink' (Is. xxix. 9).

—³⁴. 'The drunkenness with which they shall be filled' (Jer. xiii. 13) = insanity in spiritual things.

—³⁵. 'To become as a drunkard, and as a man whom wine hath penetrated' (Jer. xxiii. 9) = perturbation of mind, and insanity from reasonings from evils and falsities.

—³⁶. 'Thou drunken one—ebria—, but not with wine' (Is. li. 21) = those who are in falsities from ignorance of truth.

—'. Elsewhere, also, in the Word, 'drunkenness' = insanity in spiritual things, and a fall into errors. Ill.

481⁵. 'I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice' (Jer.li.39)=insanities in the highest degree. (=that they will be insane from the falsities of evil. 601¹¹.)

617²⁴. The plenary enjoyment of them, is signified by . . . 'to drink blood to drunkenness.'

650⁴⁸. 'To eat flesh to satiety, and to drink blood to drunkenness'=that they will be filled with all the good of love and truth of faith.

654⁷⁰. 'Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow' (Ezek.xxiii.33)=insanity in spiritual things, and aversion.

811¹⁴. 'I will make Mine arrows drunk with blood' (Deut.xxxii.42)=ravings of the mind from the falsification of the Word.

887². By 'merum' is meant intoxicating wine, and thence also intoxication; thus, in the spiritual sense, raving in truths through falsities, for (this) is spiritual intoxication; for the word by which 'merum' is expressed in the Original Language, is derived from a word which means to be drunken. . . They who falsify the Word are spiritually inebriated, that is, rave as to truths . . .

1035. 'The inhabitants of the earth were made drunken by the wine of her whoredom'=that those who were of that Church were insane from things falsified. 'To be drunken'=to be insane in spiritual things.

—³. As to what further concerns the insanity which is signified by 'inebriation' and by 'drunkenness' in the Word, it is not from falsities, but from truths falsified. The reason is, that truth from Heaven acts into the understanding, and, at the same time, falsity from Hell; hence there is a tearing asunder in the mind, and a like insanity to that of a drunkard in the world. But this insanity exists only with those who are in evil, and who have confirmed the falsities of evil by the Word; for all things of the Word are truths and communicate with Heaven, and the falsities of evil are from Hell. Spiritual drunkenness does not take place from the falsities which are not from evil; for these falsities do not pervert and destroy the spiritual truths which lie hidden within the truths of the sense of the letter; for they do not conclude what is evil therefrom, as they do from the falsities of evil.

1049. 'I saw the woman drunk with the blood of the saints'=that religiosity insane from the falsities of evil, by which violence is done to Divine truths. . . 'To be drunken'=to be insane in spiritual things from the falsities of evil.

Dry. Arescere, Arens.

A. 895. 'The waters were dried from upon the earth' (Gen.viii.13)=that at that time falsities did not appear.

898. 'Behold, the faces of the ground were dry' (id.)=regeneration. . . The faces of the ground are said to be 'dry,' when falsities no longer appear.

4744³. 'Dry places' (Matt.xii.43), or places where there are no waters, =where there are no truths.

6432⁶. 'Dry breasts' (Hos.ix.14)=affections not of truth and good.

9325⁴. 'Dry breasts'=no affections, but in their stead the cupidities of perverting. E.710⁵.

N. 172². 'He walketh through dry places, and findeth no rest'=that the life of good is such to him.

E. 727³. 'The east wind dried her fruit' (Ezek.xix.12) =the destruction of its good.

A. 27. 'Let the dry [land] appear' (Gen.i.9).

—^c. The external man himself is called 'the dry [land],' and presently 'the land.'

28. 'God called the dry [land] earth' (ver.10).

—'. 'I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea and the dry [land]' (Hag.ii.6). Here a new Church is treated of.

806. 'Of all that was in the dry [land]' (Gen.vii.22)=those in whom there was no longer anything of such life. . . It is 'dry' where there is no water, that is, where there is no longer anything spiritual, still less celestial. The persuasion of falsity extinguishes and as it were suffocates everything spiritual and celestial. . . They who have once formed opinions . . . inhere in them so obstinately, that they do not want to hear anything contrary to them; thus they never suffer themselves to be instructed, even if the truth is set before their eyes. This is still more the case when they cultivate a false opinion from a kind of sanctity; for such persons reject all truth, and that which they admit they pervert, and thus infuse with phantasies. These are they who are here signified by 'the dry [land],' on which there is neither water nor grass; as in Ezekiel: 'I will make the rivers dry [land]' . . . (xxx.12). 'To make the rivers dry [land]'=that there is no longer anything spiritual. And in Jeremiah: 'Your land is become dry' (xliv.22). 'Dry'=land which is desolated and wasted, so that there is no longer anything of truth and good.

6976. 'Thou shalt pour upon the dry [land]' (Ex.iv.9) =immission into the Natural. . . 'The dry [land]'=the Natural. 'Dry' is used to express a dry place, and also the land, and the land of Egypt=the natural mind, which is in falsity, thus the Natural; and still more so the dry [land].

8185. 'The Sons of Israel shall come into the midst of the sea in the dry' (Ex.xiv.16)=that those who are of the Spiritual Church may pass through safely and without the influx of falsity. . . 'In the dry'=safely and without the influx of falsity; for the waters of that sea =falsities from evil; hence 'dry'=devoid of falsity. Ill. 8205. 8234.

—³. But when 'waters'=truths, 'drying up-arefactio'-signifies a state of no truth, or devoid of truth. Ill.

—^c. Where, however, 'dry,' or 'drying up' is said in the Word of other things, as of trees, herbs, the harvest, or of bones, the contrary is signified thereby. The land itself is also called 'dry' relatively to the sea, and then 'dry' is predicated of good, and the sea, of truth.

8487³. Without such a change of the states, the good of celestial love would become as it were dry. . . This is signified by the Sons of Israel calling the manna dry food, and vile food, when the quails were no longer given; as in Moses . . . 'Our soul is dry, there is not anything which our eyes [may look to] but to manna' (Num.xi.6).

R. 398^e. In the Spiritual World, they who are in the internals of the Church, appear upon the dry, and they who are in its externals as it were in the seas.

E. 288¹. It here treats of the illumination of the gentiles. Their ignorance of truth and good is signified by 'the wilderness and the dry place' (Is.xxxv.1).

323⁸. The desolation of all truth is signified by 'I will give thee into the dryness of the rock' (Ezek.xxvi.14); 'the rock'=truth; and 'dryness,' its desolation.

400². 'The sea and the dry [land]' (Hag.ii.6)=all the exterior things of the Church.

418³. 'Dry bones' (Ezek.xxxvii)=those with whom there is not anything of spiritual life. 419³.

504²⁷. 'A land of dryness' (Ezek.xix.13)=the Church where there is no good; and 'a land of thirst,' where there is no truth. 727³. 730¹⁰.

513⁶. That they were averse to spiritual things, is signified by 'Our soul is dry . . .'

518⁷. 'To pour floods upon the dry [land]' (Is.xliv.3) =to give intelligence to those who, from good, have a longing for truth.

—²⁹. 'I will make the rivers dry [land]' (Ezek.xxx.12)=that there is no longer any Knowledge and apperception of truth.

627⁸. It here treats of the establishment of the Church by the Lord; and that then there will be intelligence through Divine truth spiritual with those with whom before there was not any, is signified by 'the dry place shall be for a pool' (Is.xxxv.7).

730¹¹. The Church devoid of good is signified by 'the wilderness,' and 'a land of drought' (Hos.ii.3). . . 'Drought' is said of the want of good, because it is caused by burning.

750¹⁵. 'Our soul is dry'=the life of faith and of the understanding lacking when there is not natural nourishment at the same time.

Dry. Siccus.

Dryness. Siccitas.

A. 1460². 'A multitude dry of thirst' (Is.v.13)=penury of Knowledges of spiritual things.

1949². Here drought is treated of, or no good and truth.

1964². A torrid and dry life.

3580². 'I called a drought upon the land' (Hag.i.11); here 'a drought'=a lack of dew and rain, thus a lack of truth from any good; 'a drought upon the corn'=the lack of good; and 'a drought upon the new wine'=a lack of truth.

6432². 'To set as a land of dryness' (Hos.ii.3)=to extinguish all truth.

8185^e. 'A drought upon the waters that they may be dried up=exarescent' (Jer.i.38)=that there is no life in truths, from falsification. 8869⁴.

8203. 'He made the sea for dryness-siccum' (Ex.xiv.21)=the dissipation of falsity.

8540. By the ephah and the homer dry things were measured.

10227⁹. 'A drought upon the waters'=the deprivation and consumption of the truths of faith.

10570⁵. The ground is said to be 'broken up,' from drought; thus from a lack of truth from Heaven.

W. 61^e. That there is such an endeavour in its dry things also . . .

M. 44³. O how dry is the joy of Heaven!

56⁴. Man (without woman) is dry, etc.

D. 4047. I saw the dry fire of a hearth . . .

E. 131⁴. 'A drought that they may be dried up'=vastation. That 'drought,' and 'drying up-exarescentia' =where there is no truth. Ref.

304²¹. That the Church will be established with them, is signified by 'I will make the wilderness a pool of waters, and a dry land into a spring of waters' (Is.xli.18). It is called 'a wilderness' when there is not yet any good because there is not yet any truth; from which the land is also called 'dry.'

—³⁴. 'A drought upon the waters that they may dry up'=no longer any truths. 587¹⁰. (=the desolation of truth. 355¹⁷.)

481². 'The year of drought' (Jer.xvii.8)=a state of the loss and deprivation of truth.

483². 'A dry land' (Is.xli)=where there is no truth, and thence no good.

537¹⁴. 'A land of solitude and of drought' (Jer.ii.6)=here, as elsewhere in the Word, a state of no perception of good.

650⁷. 'A dry place like a wilderness' (Zeph.ii.13)=the falsities of doctrine. . . 'Drought in the threshold' (ver.14)=the total desolation of truth.

730¹⁷. 'He maketh the outlets of the waters into dryness' (Ps.cvii.33). . . 'Waters'=truths; 'dryness,' the deprivation of them from no light and affection.

—²⁴. 'I will make the wilderness a pool of waters, and the dry land into springs of waters'=to infill the spiritual man and the natural man with truths, where before there were no truths; the spiritual man in which there are no truths is meant by 'the wilderness' . . . and the natural man in which there are no truths is meant by 'the dry land,' because before there was no influx of the Spiritual into it.

—³⁸. 'A land of drought and of dense shade' (Jer.ii.6)=the perception of good, and the understanding of truth bedimmed.

731^e. 'The dry places' through which the evil Spirit wanders seeking rest=the states of evil and falsity which are of his life.

780¹⁰. 'A land of droughts' (Hos.xiii.5)=a state devoid of truths.

1000⁴. Man then puts off all senile severity, sadness, and dryness.

Dry. Siticulosus.

A. 7324. 'The dry (land) shall be for springs of waters' (Is.xxxv.7).

D. 299^o. They who are raised up—excitantur—immediately after the life of the body, walk through dry places and seek rest.

A. 818⁵. See DRY—aridus—at this ref.

E. 403²¹. 'The fig-tree withered away' (Matt. xxi. 19). . . 'To wither away' = no longer any truth and good.

419²⁶. Hence it is that to the east wind are ascribed withering, and drying up—exsiccatio—; withering = where there is no good; and 'drying up,' where there is no truth. Ill.

518²¹. 'I will dry up all their herb' (Is. xlii. 15) = that the truths which are from these goods will perish. 'I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up—exsicabo—the pools' = that the intelligence and the Knowledge of truth will perish.

A. 381²⁴. Then all truth becomes like skin which cleaves to the bone; it is 'dried up, and becomes like wood' (Lam. iv. 8).

818⁵. See DRY—siccus—at these refs. E. 131⁴.

E. 275³. 'The river shall be dried up—exsiccabitur, and shall dry up' (Is. xix. 5) = that there shall be no doctrine of truth, and consequently no intelligence. 654⁴⁹.

401³⁵. 'Because they had no root, they withered away' (Matt. xiii. 6). . . 'To be burnt up and wither away' = to be adulterated, and to perish.

—³⁶. We read in Jonah that the gourd withered away.

555¹⁹. 'When the harvest withers' (Is. xxvii. 11) = the truths of good destroyed through evil loves.

556¹⁷. 'He pineth away' (Mark ix. 18).

650⁴³. 'To mourn,' and 'to wither' (Jer. xii. 4) = to perish, and to be dissipated through cupidities.

730¹². 'His spring shall dry up, and his fountain shall be dried up—exsiccabitur—' (Hos. xiii. 15) = that from this ardour and this pride everything of doctrine and everything of the Word is destroyed. 483¹⁵.

A. 868. 'Even to the drying up of the waters upon the earth' (Gen. viii. 7) = the apparent dissipation of falsities.

902. 'The earth was dried up' (ver. 14) = that he was regenerate.

934¹⁴. 'The water (of the Euphrates) was dried up' (Rev. xvi. 12) . . . 'The water dried up' = those falsities removed by the Lord.

975¹⁰. 'To dry up the sea' (Is. i. 2) = to blot out the good and truth of scientifics.

R. 238⁴. 'To dry up the sea of Babel, and to dry up—arefacere—its spring' (Jer. i. 42) = to extinguish all the truth of that Church, from primes to ultimates.

700. 'The water (of the Euphrates) was dried up' = that the falsities of these interior reasonings have been removed. E. 996.

T. 346. A drying up and induration of the crystalline humour.

E. 275². See DRY UP—exarescere—at these refs. 730¹².

403⁶. 'All the trees of the field are withered' (Joel i. 12) = the Knowledges of good and truth which, from evils and falsities, are consummated. 458⁷.

405¹⁷. 'To make the rivers into islands, and to dry up the pools' (Is. xlii. 15) = to annihilate all the understanding and perception of truth.

513³. 'To dry up the sea' (Is. i. 2) = to deprive the natural man of scientific truths, and thus of natural and spiritual life.

538⁴. The dissipation of the evils and falsities which are from the Hells, and protection from them, is signified by 'to dry up the abyss,' and 'to dry up—arefacere—the rivers' (Is. xlv. 27).

—⁵. 'To dry up all the depths of the river' (Zech. x. 11) = to dissipate all the falsities of evil, even the deeper ones.

627⁹. 'To be dried up,' etc. (Is. xix. 6) = to perish and vanish.

656³⁸. 'The streams of water are dried up' (Joel i. 20) = truths of doctrine dissipated through natural love.

A. 5147³. Delights are what open the passages or ducts which receive and convey into the blood; but things undelightful close them.

5185. The Spirits who relate to the pancreatic, hepatic, and cystic ducts . . .

5854^e. By the leading of his freedom . . .

9824⁴. Under His auspices and guidance . . .

E. 405⁶. 'The channels of waters' = intelligence.

Duel. Duellium. P. 140.

Duke. See LEADER.

Duker. D. 6047.

Dull. Stolidus, Stolide.

A. 17. 'My people is dull . . .' (Jer. iv. 22).

9140. See BEAST OF BURDEN, here.

H. 3. They speak sillily.

M. 56⁴. Man (without woman) is dull . . .

E. 298⁴. 'Lo, I am dull, I do not know' (Ps. lxxiii. 22). Ex.

Dulling. Hebetatio.

Make dull. Hebetare.

A. 3928². See DELIGHT—jucundum—at this ref.

5078⁴. In the world, the sensation is dulled and obscured.

5092². By sensuous things . . . (this light) grows dull . . .

5562. (The Spirits of the bones) are slow, dull, stupid . . .

5849². The eye of man is so dull and gross . . . 9577².

5920². The more imperfect things, which succeed by degrees, cause dulness.

5981². Thus the shameful and filthy things of Spirits and Genii are blunted with the Angels.

6865². Clever in the things of the world, but dimmed and dulled in the things of Heaven.

6925². The light of my eyes began to be dulled, and to become dim.

H. 159. The glowing and sparkling of the Sun . . . began to grow dull.

401. Dulled by the cares of the world . . .

549. Evils and falsities not only blunt, but also reject His Divine influx.

R. 455². The sensuous man . . . is so dull in the power of seeing truth, that it is scarcely possible to be duller.

T. 569. The body absorbs and blunts these things.

D. 758. A certain one . . . was so dull and as it were stupid, that he scarcely knew anything that was said. His dulness was communicated to me . . . It so obscured my thoughts, that I scarcely perceived what I was writing. In the life of the body he had been pre-eminently clever, but only in externals . . .

2502. They were so poisonous, that they dulled all the forces of acting in truths and goods . . .

3461. When (this preacher) was present, and the persuasion of his life flowed in, these (Knowledges) were so dulled, that they who were around me could scarcely apprehend the sense of the words . . . so completely was everything closed, bedimmed, and dulled, merely by the life of his persuasion.

E. 556¹⁰. 'The fathers have eaten a wild grape, and the teeth of the sons are dulled' (Jer. xxxii. 29). 'The teeth to be dulled' = to be in the falsity of evil therefrom. . . . 'To be dulled' = the appropriation of falsity from evil.

677³. The signs of the presence (of hypocrites in the Societies), are . . . deprivation of the perception of good, dulling of the affection of truth . . .

A. 7419. When this knowledge is taken away from them . . . they are then of gross and dull mind.

8378². Hence dulness in things of thought and judgment, and skilfulness in the things of the body and the world.

H. 462². Just as it is with men in the world, who are dull and stupid as to spiritual truths in proportion as they indulge the palate, and the blandishments of the tactile things of the body.

M. 478². Oh, how great and terrible is the dulness of the age! 481.

391². In the Christian Societies in the World of Spirits . . . there is a dulness and thick darkness in the things of salvation, almost like that of a talking parrot.

D. 2684. They despise others in comparison with themselves in a certain kind of dulness . . .

A. 3268. 'Dumah' (one of the sons of Ishmael). Ex. —¹⁰.

A. 1668². A dull pain.

2417². The dumb (one of the classes of the neighbour in the Ancient Church).

6988. 'Who hath made the dumb?' (Ex. iv. 11) = no utterance.

— . In the internal sense, 'dumb' = those who are not able to confess the Lord, thus neither to preach faith in Him, from ignorance; in which state are the gentiles outside the Church, and also the simple within the Church. III.

— . 'Then shall the tongue of the dumb sing' (Is. xxxv. 6) = that they will confess the Lord and the things which are of faith in Him.

—². 'The dumb' who were healed by the Lord, also = the gentiles who, by His Advent into the world, were delivered from falsities and consequently from evils. 7337.

H. 3. Those within the Church who have denied the Lord . . . at last either become as if they were dumb, or speak sillily.

P. 231⁴. They who, from profanation of this kind, have confirmed themselves against the Divine and against the Word, sit dumb in that darkness, unable to speak, wanting to prate about pious and holy things, as in the world, but unable to do so.

R. 294. When a hypocrite comes among the wise, he . . . sits mute.

M. 151². If they have any inclination, it is rendered mute . . .

231⁴. Such judges . . . sit as dumb as statues . . .

233⁶. When such are alone . . . they stand like dumb machines.

D. 1272. A dull pain. 1273. 1623. 4088. —. —^e. 4419.

1276. He seemed to me to be dumb.

4703. On dumb dogs. 4704^e. 4706.

E. 455²⁰. 'The dumb'=those who, from ignorance of the truth, are not able to confess the Lord, or the genuine truths of the Church.

518⁴. 'The tongue of the dumb which shall sing'=the confession of the Lord by those who are in ignorance of truth.

556⁷. The Spirit was called 'deaf and dumb' by the Lord (Mark ix. 25) because he did not want to perceive and understand truth.

587⁸. That there is no intelligence or life there or therefrom, is signified by 'he maketh dumb gods' (Hab. ii. 18).

A. 1103. These kinds of use are like that of dung and ordure—stercora—in fields and vineyards.

3941⁵. 'A cake with the ordure—stercora—of human dung' (Ezek. iv. 12)=the profanation of these things.

10037. 'The (bullock's) dung' (Ex. xxix. 14)=the rest of the unclean things. 'Dung'=what is unclean. The reason 'dung'=what is unclean, and therefore what is evil and false—for in the spiritual sense, these are what is unclean—is that everything which is useless of the food passes off into dung and ordure; and, in the spiritual sense, food is the truth and good of faith and of love; hence it is, that dung, ordure, and excrement correspond to the evils which are in Hell; which, also, in the Word, is called a privy. Ill.

—⁵. 'A cake of barley with man's dung' (Ezek. iv. 12)=the interior good of the Church defiled with the evils of the love of self; 'a cake with the excrements of an ox' (ver. 15)=the external good of the Church defiled with the evils of that love.

T. 324^e. Like dung which when dried in autumn emits a fragrant odour.

D. 2660. What dung represents in spiritual things.

—. Dung is spiritually filthy things. As fertility is produced in the earth by dung, hence is the representation, that those who confess filthy sins, and acknowledge that they are ordure—stercora, the seed grows in such earth. In like manner in the other life, when filthy delights . . . grow rotten, and become fetid like ordure, so that they begin to abominate these things, then these are as it were soil, in which a capacity of good can be inseminated. I have seen this in a spiritual idea, and have spoken with the Spirits, for they previously wanted to know what is the representation of dung.

3041. They cannot be (in the Grand Man), before, like dung, they have been cast into the earth . . .

Dung. Stercus.

Stercoraceous. Stercoreus.

See EXCREMENT.

A. 824². Sometimes the delight (of adulterers) is turned into the stink of human ordure . . . This stench takes possession of Hell by turns, and by turns ceases; it is their delight from adulteries which is turned into such a stench. D. 2624.

1103⁸. See DUNG—fimus—at these refs. 3941⁵. 10037. D. 2660.

P. 164^e. They who do not receive, are separated from those who are within the Divine Man, as the feces and urine are separated from man.

R. 315^e. 'Barley mixed with dung'=truths falsified and profaned.

M. 431². On account of the correspondence of filthy loves with dung and mire, it was commanded the Sons of Israel, 'that they should carry with them a paddle with which to cover their excrement, lest Jehovah God walking in the midst of their camp should see the nakedness of the thing, and should turn back' (Deut. xxiii. 13, 14).

D. 618. See INTemperance at this ref.

E. 512². The love of self is merely a corporeal love, springing from the boiling up and fermentation of the obsolete parts . . . That the love of self is from this origin, may appear from its correspondence with human ordure; for they who have been addicted to this love, in the other life love stercoraceous filth above everything, the stench thereof being grateful to them . . .

617²⁷. 'A cake of barley made with dung'=this adulteration (of the Divine truth or of the Word with the Jewish nation). . . 'Dung'=infernal evil.

652²⁹. 'The clay, mire, and dung of the streets'=the falsity of the love of evil. Ill.

659²¹. 'They shall be for dung upon the faces of the earth' (Jer. xvi. 4)=what is filthily infernal, which is evil defiling the good and truth of the Church.

—²². 'They shall be for dung upon the faces of the earth' (Jer. xxv. 33)=what is merely false and evil, without any reception of life from Heaven.

—²⁴. 'They shall be for dung upon the faces of the earth' (Jer. viii. 2)=such a deadness and uncleanness that it is cast out and trampled upon.

Dunghill. Sterquilinum.

A. 9207⁴. 'Not fit for the land, nor for the dunghill' (Luke xiv. 35)=that it does not conduce to any good whatever, either good or evil.

10037¹. 'They embrace dunghills' (Lam. iv. 5)=to learn and choose falsities.

E. 652¹⁰. 'Dunghills' (Lam. iv. 5)=the falsities of evil.

Dura Mater. Dura Mater.

A. 4046³. They said that they relate to the exterior lamella of the dura mater; and that they were among those who thought about spiritual and celestial things only from such things as are objects of the external senses . . . They were heard by me as being of the female sex. (Compare D. 1693.)

T. 213^e. Mentioned.

D. 1688. On those who constitute the province of the dura mater. 1691.

1692. They who constitute the province of the dura mater, were those who in the life of the body had indeed neither thought nor spoken about spiritual and celestial things, but still were such that they had not supposed that there was anything but what is natural; so that they had supposed what is celestial and spiritual to be natural; nor could they have any other idea, on account of the grossness of their interiors . . . Nevertheless, they, like others, attend Divine worship, pray and sing. These are they who constitute the province of the dura mater; and they are not among Spirits, but are among Genii; wherefore, their motion [is synchronous] with the beating of the heart. See D. 1734.

Inv. 49. Around the brain there are three coats, which are called the dura mater, the pia mater, and the arachnoid.

Duration. Duratio.

Durable. Durabilis.

A. 730. 'Forty days and nights' = the duration of temptation.

931. That the Earth will not last to eternity. Sig. and Ex.

1336. Duration and state. Sig. 1341. 1344. 1346.

1847. 'Four hundred years' = the duration and state of temptation.

1856. 'The fourth generation' = the same as the fortieth and the four hundredth, namely, the duration and state of temptation.

5039. 'He was in the house of the prison' = the duration of temptation. . . 'To be in it' = to stay there, thus duration.

7860. 'Ye shall not leave of it until the morning' = the duration of this state before a state of enlightenment in Heaven.

7983. 'The dwelling of the Sons of Israel in which they dwelt in Egypt' = the duration of infestations.

10209. 'A year,' like all things belonging to time, = state and its duration.

10248. 'An age' = duration even to the end; and, in the internal sense, by this duration is signified what is eternal. Ill.

10497. 'It came to pass the day following' = the duration of such worship, even to the end of the Church.

H. 426. There is no fixed term of their continuance there.

498. This first state of man after death lasts with some for days, with some for months, and with some for a year, but rarely beyond that with anyone.

T. 788. That this New Church . . . will last for ever and ever . . .

D. 242. The less coherent a thing is, or the less it resembles a solid, the more durable it is . . .

4261. But this does not last . . .

E. 654⁵³. 'Forty years,' also = the whole duration of temptation.

5 M. 5. This lasts only some days.

A. 4416². This lumen becomes quite dusky . . .

H. 429. Dusky, and as it were sooty caves . . .

584. All, when looked into, appear shady and dusky . . .

W. 380. Their opposites, which are fiery duskiness and black . . .

P. 33³. As so many dusky and fiery devils . . .

M. 269³. If the love of self makes the head, he appears from Heaven with a dusky face.

T. 61^e. In a dusky chimney . . .

312. The hatreds and revenges themselves appear like dusky fires, and like bright fires; the hatreds, like dusky fires . . .

487^e. He hurried into a cave, around which appeared a dusky fieriness; a sign that they had no faith nor charity.

776³. Dusky clouds appear above the Hells, (which) signify the falsification and profanation of truth.

D. Love xvii⁴. With some, the interiors appear dusky from the rejection of spiritual things.

A. 545^e. Like a thick and pungent dust as compared with a pure aura. H. 413².

1876. Names and words are like dust or scales . . .

2343⁷. There was perceived from them something as it were darkness and at the same time grimy, from some filthy love . . .

6485. They showed by a representative . . . by dust scattered and scanty in the atmosphere; saying that man's Own prudence relatively to the Divine Providence is as this dust to the universal atmosphere; which relatively is nothing, and also falls down. D. 4393.

8628. Terms . . . are like dust . . . before the intellectual sight.

T. 393. Like dust falling into the eye . . .

D. 3945^e. The idea or notion . . . of love (was then) like dust. 3946.

3950^e. Aristotle said, that . . . (such things) are like dust—pulveris . . . because it is such as throws dust before the eyes, and blinds.

4439^e. When they come to an Angelic Society, they fall down like dust or a weight.

A. 94. 'To form man dust from the ground' (Gen. ii. 7) = to form his external man, which before was not man.

247. This is signified by the strewing of dust upon the head.

—^e. When man turns himself from the face of Jehovah, he cleaves to the dust . . .

249. 'To eat dust all the days of the life' (Gen. iii. 14) = that the Sensuous became such that it could not live from anything except what was corporeal and earthly, thus that it became infernal, is evident from the signification of 'dust' in the Word. Ill.

—e. As 'dust' signified those who did not regard spiritual and celestial things, but corporeal and earthly ones, the Lord commanded His disciples to shake off the dust of their feet if any city or house was not worthy.

— . That 'dust'=what is damned and infernal, see below.

275. 'Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return' (Gen.iii.19)=that he is damned and infernal. 278, Ill.

521. Those who stick in scholastic dust.

1093. Who can believe that the Lord . . . can be angry with such miserable dust, that is, with men . . .

1609. 'I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth' (Gen.xiii.16)=multiplication to immensity.

— . 'The dust of the earth' regards those things which are celestial ; for 'the earth'=what is celestial of love. 'The dust of the sea' regards those things which are spiritual ; for 'the sea'=what is spiritual of love.

1748³. 'Shake off the dust of your feet ;' where 'the dust of the feet' has a like signification to 'the shoe' . . . namely what is unclean from evil and falsity.

2162¹⁵. 'The clouds are the dust of His feet' (Nahum i.3) ; where 'the dust of the feet'=the natural and corporeal things which are with man, and which are the source of clouds.

2265. 'I am dust and ashes' (Gen.xviii.27)=the humiliation of the human, such as it was relatively.

2327. The dust of the earth=what is profane and damned.

4293³. They could roll themselves in the dust . . . with scattered ashes or dust upon their heads.

4763². 'With dust upon his head' (1 Sam.iv.12)=mourning over Divine good lost.

4779³. 'They shall cause dust to ascend upon their heads' (Ezek.xxvii.30)=what is damned on account of evil ; 'to roll themselves in ashes'=what is damned on account of falsity.

5078². Believes that he will be re-clothed with the rejected dust . . .

6326^e. Should thus sweat in the dust.

7418. 'Smite the dust of the earth' (Ex.viii.16)=that he should remove those things which are damned in the Natural. . . 'Dust'=what is damned. . . The reason 'dust'=what is damned, is that the places where evil Spirits are, at the sides under the soles of the feet, appear as earth, and in fact as earth uncultivated and arid, under which earth there are certain Hells. This earth is what is called damned earth, and the dust there=what is damned. It has sometimes been given to see that the evil Spirits there shook off the dust from their feet, when they wanted to give anyone to damnation. . . Hence it is, that dust=what is damned, and that to shake off the dust=damnation.

—². Because this was signified, the Lord commanded His disciples to shake off the dust of their feet, if they were not received.

—³. The dust which in ancient times they put on the head, when they were in grief and repentance, also =what is damned. Ill.

— . Dust on the head, and the casting down to the earth of the body and the head, and there rolling in the dust, represented humiliation, which, when genuine, is such, that he acknowledges and perceives himself to be damned, but is received by the Lord from damnation.

—e. 'Dust' in the Word, also=a grave, likewise what is low, and also what is numerous.

7522. 'They shall become dust in all the land of Egypt' (Ex.ix.9)=the damnation of these falsities in the natural mind. 'Dust'=what is damned. Ill.

7550^e. There is no humble worship, unless the man acknowledges and believes, that he is dust and ashes, that is, nothing but evil . . .

9391¹². The dust into which the golden calf was ground=the falsity thence confirmed from the sense of the letter of the Word.

J. 61². From that whole tract there went up . . . a dust, which was carried off to the sea by the east wind, and strewn over it ; for their treasures and all things which they called holy were turned into dust. The reason that dust was strewn over the sea, was that such dust=what is damned.

W. 341². For the space of about an ell, almost all the dust in my garden was turned into minute flying things . . .

—e. The very dust in Hell is of the same nature (as to excite vomiting, etc.), wherefore it is there called damned dust.

R. 153¹⁰. He who does evil to another is cast into a corner of the cavern, upon a certain bed of damned dust, where he is miserably tormented . . . T.281¹⁰.

455². For serpents crawl on the ground, and lick the dust . . .

788. 'To put dust upon their heads' (Rev.xviii.19)=interior grief and mourning on account of destruction and damnation. Ill. E.1175.

T. 585^e. Every particle of dust=pulvisculus-, or powder, exhales from its essence a subtle something . . .

785. There is an internal and an external in every . . . particle of dust=pulvisculo-of soil. . . The internal of a particulate of dust, from which is borne its external, is its effort to fertilize seeds; it exhales something from its little bosom which introduces itself into the inmost things of the seed . . .

D. 3560. A slight sprinkling of gold dust.

3667^e. The least particulate of dust—pulvisculus—before the pupil of the eye, causes blindness.

3891^e. In this case, reasoning is like scattered dust . . .

4684. On the damned dust of the Hells.

4744. A certain Spirit from whom there breathed a sphere as of the dust of smoke; and when it entered the nostrils, it was like that dust, producing something of suffocation.

4813. He then threw dust into my bosom . . .

5004^e. He was then thrown about into damned dust.

5418. Their treasure was . . . completely mixed with the dust of the earth there, and thus went away into dust; and then the whole city . . . was reduced into dust, and there went up thence a smoke which was dispersed around.

5490. There was produced as it were dust over the whole place, so that it was covered . . .

5502. Afterwards, their magical things were reduced into dust, and dispersed and strewed over the sea; which dust appeared like chaff.

D. Min. 4775. On infernal dust.

— . By magic he stirred up the dust there with his foot in various ways . . .

—^e. Hence it is evident what cursed dust is, and what is the cursed dust that was given to a wife who was accused by her husband of adultery . . .

E. 69^e. It is said 'the dust of His feet' (Nahum i. 3), because the things which are in the sense of the letter of the Word, which is natural, appear scattered. 594⁸.

3551⁶. 'Dust' (Ezek. xxvi. 10) = the evil of falsity.

357⁵. That evils and falsities are scattered as it were to nothing, is signified by, 'He gave them as dust to His sword' (Is. xli. 2). It is said that evils and falsities are thus scattered, and the meaning is that those who are in them are so scattered in the other life.

365⁸. Lest, therefore, they should be injured by the evils and falsities which are in that house or city, it has been commanded that those who go out should 'shake off the dust of their feet;' by which is signified lest what is damned should adhere to them; for 'the dust of the feet' = what is damned, since the ultimate with man, which is the sensuous Natural, corresponds to the soles of the feet; and as evil adheres to this, they who were in the representatives of the Church . . . used to shake off the dust of their feet when the truths of doctrine were not received. For, in the Spiritual World, when any good person comes to evil ones, evil flows in from the latter, and causes some disturbance; but it only disturbs the ultimates which correspond to the soles of the feet; hence when they turn round and go away, it appears as if they shake off the dust of their feet backwards, which is a sign that they are delivered, and that the evil adheres to those who are in the evil. 652²⁹.

373⁴. 'The dust of the earth' (Is. xl. 12) = the exterior or natural truths and goods of both Heaven and the Church.

4061⁶. 'Enemies' = evils, of which it is said, that 'they shall lick the dust' (Ps. lxxii. 9).

410³. 'The dust' (Is. ii. 19) = what is damned.

411²⁰. By 'dust,' in these two places (Ezek. xxiv. 7; and xxvi. 4), is meant the soil, by which is signified the good of the Church . . .

—³⁰. 'To hide himself in the dust' (Is. ii. 10) = in evil.

581¹⁰. 'To lick dust like a serpent' (Micah vii. 17) = what is damned.

622⁸. 'To be bowed to the dust, and to cleave to the earth' (Ps. xlv. 25) = that they are imbued with falsities; for 'the dust,' and 'the earth' = what is damned. What is infernal and damned is also signified by 'to walk upon the belly and eat dust,' as was said to the serpent. . . The reason 'dust,' and 'the cleaving of the belly to the earth' = falsity which is infernal and damned, is that the Hells are under the earths in the Spiritual World, and through the earths there, falsities of evil exhale from the Hells.

629¹⁰. 'To comprehend the dust of the earth in a measure' (Is. xl. 12) = to ordain lower things.

632⁹. 'Dust' is predicated of what is sensuous corporeal.

637¹¹. 'To cause dust to ascend upon the head' was a sign representative of mourning and grief on account of the Church being laid waste by evils and falsities.

687¹¹. 'To come down and sit upon the dust,' and 'on the earth' (Is. xlvii. 1) = to be in evils, and consequently in damnation.

962⁸. 'There shall be dust upon all the land of Egypt' (Ex. ix. 9) = damnation.

1145³. 'Dust' (Ezek. xxvi. 12) = the lowest things of the natural man, which are of the sensuous man.

1175. 'To put dust upon their heads' (Rev. xviii. 19) = mourning that they are damned. III.

J. (Post.) 236^e. At first he is rolled in the dust . . .

Coro. 25. Every man, when first born . . . is exteriorly formed 'dust from the earth;' and there is consequently in him an inclination to lick the dust, like a serpent (Gen. iii. 14).

— . As the Dutch keep spiritual light more closely conjoined with natural lumen than the English do, and hence there does not appear such a snowy light with them, but instead thereof a something not transparent, which is receptive of rationality from spiritual light, and at the same time from spiritual heat, they have obtained habitations in the east and south of the Christian middle region; in the east, from the capacity of receiving spiritual heat, which with them is charity; and in the south, from the capacity of receiving spiritual light, which with them is faith. J. (Post.) 15. T. 800.

—³. Another reason why the Dutch are in these quarters . . . is that trade is their final love, and money the mediate subservient one; and this love is spiritual . . . In this spiritual love, which, regarded in itself, is the common good, and in which and from which is the good of our Country, the Dutch excel others. T. 801. D. 3500. J. (Post.) 17.

49. The Dutch inhere in the principles of their religion more firmly than others; not giving them up even if convinced that they are wrong. Thus they remove themselves from an interior view of truth; for they shut up their Rational under obedience in relation to spiritual things. Being of this character, after death . . . they are not taught, because they do not receive; but Heaven is described to them, and then they are permitted to ascend thither, and see it; and then whatever agrees with their genius is infused; thus, when sent down, they return to their own with a full desire for Heaven. If, then, they do not receive the truths (concerning the Lord and the life of charity and faith) they are reduced to misery, and their trade is taken away from them, until they find themselves reduced to extremities. Then they are brought to those who have abundance of everything and a flourishing trade, and there the thought is insinuated into them from Heaven as to the reason of this . . . In a little while, they make inquiries, and perceive an agreement with their own thought and reflection. This is done alternately. At last, they think, of themselves, that in order to escape from their miseries, they must believe in the like way, and act in the like way. Then, as they receive this faith, and live this life of charity, opulence and delight of life are given them. This is the way in which those who have led some life of charity in the world are amended by themselves, and not by others, and are prepared for Heaven. These afterwards become more constant than others, so that they may be called constancies; nor do they suffer themselves to be led away by any reasoning, fallacy, or obscurity . . . T. 802. D. 3513. 3514. 5826. J. (Post.) 1323.

50. In the Spiritual World, the Dutch are readily distinguished from others, because they appear in like garments to those they wear in the natural world; with this difference, that those who have received this spiritual faith and life appear in more shining garments. The reason they appear in like garments, is that they remain so constantly in the principles of their own religion. T. 804.

51. The cities in which the Dutch dwell are guarded in an extraordinary manner. All the streets in them are roofed over, and there are gates in the streets, in order that they may not be overlooked from the rocks and hills around. This takes place with them on account of their inherent prudence in concealing their designs . . . for, in the Spiritual World, such things are drawn forth by inspections. When anyone enters a city with the intention of exploring their state, when he is about to depart, he is led to the closed gates of the streets, backwards and forwards, from one to another, and this to the most wearisome extent, and he is then let out; this being done to prevent him from returning. T. 805. D. 5019. J. (Post.) 19.

—². Wives who affect command over their husbands, dwell at one side of the city, and only meet them by invitation . . . and then they bring them to houses where married partners live without exercising command over one another, and they show them how adorned and clean their houses are, and how delightful is their life . . . Those wives who attend to and are affected with these things desist from dominion, and live with their husbands, and they obtain a dwelling nearer the middle, and are called Angels. T. 805². A. 1102. 'He shall dwell in the tents of Shem' (Gen. ix.27)=that the internal things of worship may be in the external ones. . . The most ancients not only so-journed with tents, but also dwell in tents . . . Hence 'to sojourn,' and 'to dwell'=to live.

—². 'The tent where He dwelt in man' (Ps. lxxviii.60); where 'the tent' has a like signification to the temple, in which God is said 'to dwell,' when He is present with man in love.

1116. There have been shown me the dwellings of those who were of the second and third posterity of this Most Ancient Church; which are magnificent, extended to a great length, and variegated with beautiful colours, crimson and blue; for the Angels have most magnificent dwellings, beyond all description. I have seen them many times; they are so vividly apparent before their eyes, that nothing could possibly be more so.

1293. 'And they dwell there' (Gen.xi.2)=life thence. 'To dwell,' in the Word, =to live. The term 'dwell' occurs many times in both the prophetic and historical things of the Word, and for the most part = to live. The reason is, that the most ancients dwelt in tents . . . As 'tents' = what is holy in worship, 'to dwell,' in a good sense, = to live, or life. 1463³.

Hence it is evident, that when 'a city' = truth, 'an inhabitant' = good; for truth is that in which good dwells; and the truth in which there is no good, is like an empty city, or one without an inhabitant. 2712.

2460. '(Lot) dwelt in the mountain' (ver.30) = that they betook themselves to a certain good.

2502. 'Abraham dwelt between Kadesh and Shur' (Gen.xx.1) = the Lord's state in special. 'To dwell' = to live.

2572. 'Dwell in what is good in thine eyes' (ver.15) = that He was in everything where there was good. . . 'To dwell' = to live; here, to be, because it is predicated of the Lord.

2708. '(Ishmael) dwelt in the wilderness' (Gen.xxi.20) = what is relatively obscure. 'To dwell' = to live.

2712. 'He dwelt in the wilderness of Paran' (ver.21) = the life of the spiritual man as to good. 'To dwell' is predicated of the good of truth, or of spiritual good, that is, of the good of the spiritual man.

— That 'to dwell' is predicated of good, or of the affection of truth. III.

— Truths are inhabited by good.

—². 'No man' (Jer.xxxiii.10) = no celestial good; 'no inhabitant' = no spiritual good; 'no beast' = no natural good.

—³. 'To possess' (Is.liv.3) is predicated of celestial good; 'to dwell,' of spiritual good.

2761⁵. 'Man of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem' (Jer.xvii.25) = those who are in the good of love, of charity and of faith.

2851¹². 'The inhabitants of the gate' (Ps.lxix.12) = evils and falsities; also the infernals.

2859. 'Abraham dwelt in Beersheba' (Gen.xxii.19) = that the Lord is this doctrine itself. . . 'To dwell in Beersheba' = to be in doctrine, but, when predicated of the Lord, = doctrine itself; as 'to dwell in Heaven,' which, too, is said of the Lord, not only = that He is in Heaven, but also that He is Heaven, for He is everything of Heaven.

3066. The inhabitants-incolae-of a city are in the Word sometimes called 'the men of the city;' sometimes 'the inhabitants of the city:' when they are called 'the men of the city,' truths are signified; when 'the inhabitants,' goods are signified.

—^e. 'No man-vir' (Zeph.iii.6) = no truth; 'no inhabitant' = no good.

3195. '(Isaac) was dwelling in the land of the south' (Gen.xxiv.62) = thence in Divine light. 'To dwell' = to live, and is predicated of good. Refs.

3261. 'Isaac dwelt with Beerlahairoi' (Gen.xxv.11) = the Lord's Divine Rational in Divine light. 'To dwell' = to live.

3384. 'Isaac dwelt in Gerar' (Gen.xxvi.6) = the Lord's state as to those things which are of faith, relatively to the rational things which were to be adjoined. 'To dwell in Gerar' = to be in those things which are of faith, thus state as to these things; for 'to dwell' = to live.

—². That 'to dwell' = to be and to live, thus state. III. 3417.

— 'Babel shall not be inhabited to eternity' (Is.xiii.20) = their state of damnation.

3488⁸. 'In the whole inhabited [earth]' (Matt.xxiv.14) = the Christian world . . . The Church is here called 'inhabited' from the life of faith, that is, from the good which is of truth; for 'to dwell' = to live; and 'inhabitants' = the goods of truth. Refs.

3600. 'Behold, of the fatnesses of the earth is thy habitation' (Gen.xxvii.39) = life from Divine good. . . 'Habitation' = life; and 'habitation' is predicated of good. Refs.

3613. 'To tarry' is predicated of the life of truth with good; and 'to dwell,' of the life of good with truth.

3654². 'The inhabitant of Jerusalem' = the good of the Church.

3708⁵. Of ignorance of both truth and good is predicated 'they found no city of habitation' (Ps.cvii.4).

3814. '(Jacob) dwelt with (Laban) a month of days' (Gen.xxix.14) = a new state of life. 'To dwell' = life.

6051. 'In order that ye may dwell in the land of Goshen' (Gen. xlvi. 34)=so shall your station be in the middle of the Natural where are the scientifics of the Church. 'To dwell'=life, and thus the station of life. 6080. 6084.

6102. 'And Joseph made his father and his brethren dwell' (Gen. xlvii. 11)=the life of spiritual good and of the truths of the Church from the celestial internal. 'To dwell'=life.

6169. 'And Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt' (ver. 27)=that spiritual good lived among the scientifics which are of the Church. 'To dwell'=to live.

6384. 'He shall dwell at the haven of the seas' (Gen. xlix. 13)=life where there is the conclusion of truth from scientifics. . . 'To dwell'=life.

6541. 'The inhabitant of the Land, the Canaanite, saw the grievous mourning in the floor of Atad' (Gen. l. 11)=the apperception of grief by the good of the Church. . . 'Inhabitant'=good.

6580. 'Joseph dwelt in Egypt' (ver. 22)=the life of the scientifics of the Church from the internal. 'To dwell'=life.

6693³. 'To destroy the inhabitants in the city' (Jer. xlv. 8)=to destroy the goods which are derived from the doctrine of the Church.

6698. Which end is a heavenly Kingdom, in which the Divine can dwell.

6773. '(Moses) dwelt in the land of Midian' (Ex. ii. 15)=life among those who are in simple good.

6774. 'And he dwelt near a well' (id.)=study there in the Word. 'To dwell'=life; here, the study of life.

6792. 'And Moses willed to dwell with the man' (ver. 21)=that they agreed. . . 'To dwell'=to live; and 'to dwell with anyone'=to live together, and therefore to agree.

6804⁹. Conjunction through love and faith is signified by 'My dwelling shall be with them,' etc. (Ezek. xxxvii. 27).

7910. 'In all your habitations ye shall eat unleavened things' (Ex. xii. 20)=that in the interiors, where good is, truth shall be appropriated. 'Habitations'=those things which are of the mind, thus which are of intelligence and wisdom; consequently, the interiors. . .

8269. 'I will appoint for Him a dwelling' (Ex. xv. 3)=that he will be in the good which is from Him as in His own Heaven. 'A dwelling,' when said of the Lord, is good. The reason the dwelling of the Lord is good, is that all good is from the Lord . . . When the Lord dwells in this, He dwells in His own Divine, and cannot dwell anywhere else. Sig. . . It is said, as in His own Heaven, because Heaven is called the dwelling-place of God, from the fact that the good which is from the Lord is there, and constitutes Heaven.

8309. 'Thou hast conducted them in Thy valour to the dwelling of Thy holiness' (ver. 13)=that the Divine power of the Lord has elevated them to Heaven into the Divine there. . . 'The dwelling of holiness'=Heaven where is the Divine.

—². That the dwelling of Jehovah or the Lord=Heaven; and also good, because in good there is Heaven. III.

—³. That the dwelling of Jehovah, that is, of the Lord, is in good. III.

8313. 'The inhabitants of Philistia' (Ex.xv.14)= those who are in faith alone.

8317. 'The inhabitants of Canaan' (ver.15)=those who are of the Church, and who have adulterated goods and falsified truths.

8328. 'A place for Thee to dwell' (ver.17)=where the Lord is. . . 'To dwell' is predicated of good; and 'the dwelling of Jehovah'=good, and thence Heaven.

8379. The dwellings (of the inhabitants of Jupiter) have been shown me. Des.

8480^c. The Angels with man as it were dwell in good from the Lord, and they cannot be in good from the man. . .

8538. 'Until they came to an inhabited land' (Ex. xvi.35)=before they came to Heaven, where there is good everywhere. . . Heaven is called 'an inhabited land,' from good; for 'inhabited'=what is living from good. Refs.

8588^e. See ANGEL at this ref.

8865^e. In (that which reigns universally with a man) dwell the Angels and Spirits who are with man, and have as it were their abode. . .

8931. Charity and faith are Heaven. . . there, also, dwell the Angels.

8989^g. Spirits and Angels have dwellings which appear just like those in the world (Refs.); and each and all things that appear in their dwellings, are significative of spiritual things. . .

9294^f. The habitation of the Sons of Israel in Canaan. . .

9296^f. The new will, where is the good of charity, is the dwelling of the Lord, and therefore Heaven with man; and the new Intellectual thence is as it were the tabernacle through which there is entrance and exit.

9338^e. The Lord dwells with an Angel only in that which is His own with him; in like manner with a man. . . 10125. 10151^e. —³,Ex.

9345. 'They shall not dwell in thy Land' (ver.33)=that evils shall not be together with the goods of the Church. 'Inhabitants'=evils. . . 'to dwell'=to live; and 'to dwell with anyone'=to live or be together.

9408. Hence Heaven is called 'the dwelling-place of God' . . . because 'a dwelling-place'=the truth Divine proceeding from the Lord as received in the inmost Heaven, which, relatively, is good.

9433^e. 'The dwelling-place of mount Zion' (Is.iv.5)=Heaven and the Church.

9455. 'The dwelling-place' (or Tabernacle)=Heaven itself.

9480. 'That I may dwell in the midst of them' (Ex. xxv.8)=the consequent presence of the Lord in the representative Church. 'To dwell in the midst,' when said of the Lord,=His presence; for 'to dwell'=to be and to live. Hence 'to dwell in the midst'=to be and to live present.

9481. 'According to all that I show thee, the form of the dwelling-place' (Ex.xxv.9)=a representative of Heaven where the Lord is. 'The form of the dwelling-place'=a representative of Heaven; for 'form'=a representative; and 'dwelling-place'=Heaven.

—³. As 'a dwelling-place'=Heaven where the Lord is, it also=the good of love and of faith, for these make Heaven; and, as all good is from the Lord, and Heaven is called Heaven from love and faith in the Lord, in the supreme sense, 'a dwelling-place'=the Lord. III.

—^e. Hence it is evident, that the Tabernacle was called the sanctuary and the dwelling-place of Jehovah from the fact that it represented the above-mentioned things.

9485. 'We will enter into His dwelling-place' (Ps. cxxxii.7) . . . 'The dwelling-place'=Heaven where the Lord is.

—². In like manner 'the dwelling-place of the sanctuary' (Dan.viii.11).

—^e. By the whole Tabernacle or Tent was represented the universal angelic Heaven; its ultimate, by the court; its middle, by the dwelling-place where the priest ministered; and its inmost by the dwelling-place within the veil, where was the ark containing the Testimony.

9543^e. The dwelling-place and court of the tent, and the curtains and veils there, represented the things which are in the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom, which is the Second Heaven. 9592.

—³. Heaven is called the dwelling-place of God from the fact, that the Divine of the Lord dwells there; for it is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord's Divine good which makes Heaven. . . And as the Lord dwells with the Angels in that which is from Himself, Heaven is called 'the dwelling-place of God'; and the Divine truths themselves from the Divine good, of which the Angels or the angelic Societies are the receptions, are called 'dwelling-places.' III.

—⁴. That it is the Divine things which proceed from the Lord's Divine Human which are properly called 'dwelling-places,' and that thence Heaven itself is called 'the dwelling-place.' III.

—⁵. Thus 'dwelling-place'=Heaven, and also the Church where the Lord is.

—⁷. How the Lord dwells in the Heavens, may be evident from (the fact) that the Lord as to the Divine Human is the Sun. . . in the Heavens; the heat from the Lord as a Sun is love, and the light is faith: the Lord thence dwells with those who receive from Him the good of love and the truth of faith. . . His presence is according to the degree of the reception.

9596^g. From this it may be evident, that the Intellectual itself with those who are of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom is 'the dwelling-place' in a strict sense; and that this is described by the expanse from the curtains.

[A. 9596]⁵. 'To stretch out the heavens and to expand the earth' has a like signification to the stretching out and expanding of the dwelling-place by means of the curtains; and this signification is, to regenerate man, and thus create or form a new Intellectual in which there is a new Voluntary, which is the Heaven itself of the spiritual man, in which the Lord dwells with this man. —⁶, Ill.

9613. 'The dwelling-place shall be one' (ver.6)= that the whole Heaven is thus completely one. 'The dwelling-place'=Heaven. 9776.

—³. The whole conjunction of such innumerable angelic Societies in Heaven, with the methods thereof, is represented in the form of the construction of the dwelling-place and of the Tent. . .

9626. Where it treats of the dwelling-place, by which is signified the internal of Heaven. . .

9628. 'The half-curtain that is left over thou shalt make to overflow upon the hinder parts of the dwelling-place' (ver.12)=the ultimate of Heaven, to wit, the proceeding. . . 'The hinder parts of the dwelling-place'=the ultimate of Heaven; for 'the dwelling-place'=Heaven.

9634. 'Thou shalt make boards for the dwelling-place' (ver.15)=the good supporting that Heaven. . . 'The dwelling-place'=the Second Heaven. . . For the boards supported the curtains of both the dwelling-place and of the Tent, and also the two coverings over them. 9641. 9648. 9663.

9668. 'Thou shalt place the dwelling-place according to the method which thou wast made to see in the mount' (ver.30)=to the quarters according to the states of good and thence of truth in the Heaven which is represented. 'The dwelling-place' is a representative of Heaven.

— . It is evident from the description, that as to length the dwelling-place was set from east to west, and that the entrance was at the east, and the ark at the west; thus the sides were on the south and north. The eastern quarter of the dwelling-place represented the state of good at its rising; its western quarter, the state of good at its setting; its southern quarter, the state of truth at its rising; and its northern quarter, the state of truth in its shade. The entrance was at the eastern quarter, because the Lord enters into Heaven through the good of love. Ill.

9670. The veil was that which distinguished between the dwelling-place where was the ark of the testimony, and where the candlestick and table were. . . By the dwelling-place outside the veil was represented the middle Heaven. 9684.

9741. 'The court of the dwelling-place'=the external of Heaven, thus the ultimate Heaven. . . The inmost Heaven is represented by the inmost of the dwelling-place where was the ark of the testimony; the middle Heaven, by the dwelling-place outside the veil; the ultimate Heaven, by the court.

9854². 'The dwelling-place' and 'the Tent'=Heaven.

10153. 'I will dwell in the midst of the Sons of Israel' (Ex.xxix.45)=the presence of the Lord and His influx through good in Heaven and in the Church.

'To dwell,' when said of the Lord, = to be present and to flow in. That it is through Divine good, is because 'to dwell' is predicated of good. —², Ex. 10157.

10160². The state of life of the golden age is described in the Word by 'to dwell under themselves securely and solitarily, without doors and bars.' And as their dwellings were tents. . .

10640. 'Take heed to thyself, lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitant of the land upon which thou comest' (Ex.xxxiv.12)=that we are not to adhere to any religion whatever in which there is evil. . . 'The inhabitant of the land'=religion in which there is evil; for 'an inhabitant'=good; and therefore in the opposite sense, evil. 10647.

10645². The Lord does not dwell with an empty man, that is, with a man who does not know His truths and do them. . .

10732. 'Ye shall not kindle a fire in all your habitations on the Sabbath day' (Ex.xxxv.3)=that nothing of our Own love. . . ought to appear in each and all things of man which are from the Lord. . . 'The habitations' of the Sons of Israel=the goods and truths of the Church which are with man from the Lord; for 'habitations'=the interiors with man, thus those which are of his mind.

10769. The dwellings (of the people of the Fifth Earth). Des.

10784. From the parts of Heaven which are not inhabited. . .

10813. Spirits and Angels dwell and dwell together—cohabitant—in like manner as in the world. . . They who have dwelt congregated together in the world, dwell there congregated together; and they who have dwell separate in houses and families, also dwell separate there in like manner. These Spirits (of the Sixth Earth) had dwell separate in their own Earth. . . house by house, family by family, and thus nation by nation; and thus had not known what it was to dwell in society together.

10814. See DOMINION at this ref.

H. 8^e. Hence it is, that in the Word, Heaven is called 'the dwelling-place' of the Lord, and His 'throne.'

12. From these things it is evident, that the Lord dwells in what is His own with the Angels. W.114. P.53^e.

24. The Celestial Kingdom is also called. . . in the Word the Lord's 'dwelling-place.'

50. There are also Angels who dwell solitary, as it were house by house, and family by family. . . 189. D.5181.

148. All in the Heavens dwell distinct according to the quarters. Ex. 149.

151^e. They who are in the Hells also dwell according to their own quarters. . .

183. On the habitations and mansions of the Angels. Gen.art.

— . The Angels have habitations, which are various according to each one's state of life, magnificent for those who are in greater dignity, and less so for those who are in lower rank.

—². As Angels are men, they have mansions and dwellings.

— . Everyone has a general idea that the Angels . . . have domiciles, which they call the dwelling-places of Heaven, and which are more magnificent than the dwelling-places of earth . . .

184. Whenever I have spoken with the Angels face to face, I have been with them in their dwellings. Their dwellings are just like the dwellings on earth, which are called houses, but more beautiful. In them, there are vaults, rooms, and bed-chambers in great numbers: there are also courts; and round about are gardens, shrubberies, and fields. Where the Angels are consociated, their dwellings are contiguous, one next another, disposed in the form of a city . . .

185. See PALACE, here, and throughout.

186. See HOUSE, here. 190.

188. The Angels of the Celestial Kingdom dwell for the most part in lofty places . . . The Angels of the Spiritual Kingdom dwell in less lofty places . . . And the Angels in the lowest parts of Heaven, dwell in places which appear like ledges of stone—petrae ex saxis.

218. These dwell in the midst of the Society, in a more elevated situation than the rest, and also in magnificent palaces.

295^e. The like Spirits are present, and as it were dwell in their affections.

358. He may dwell magnificently according to his condition. D.5794.

393^e. They dwell gratis. W.334, D.Love xii³.

419. It has been granted to see the extent of the inhabited Heaven, and also that of the not inhabited . . .

489². They who loved Divine truths and the Word from interior affection . . . in the other life dwell in light, in lofty places . . .

J. 50. Habitations were then given them. 51.

58. Where the habitations of the Papists have hitherto been in the Spiritual World . . .

F. 43^e. My friend, come with me, and dwell with us.

W. 121. As these quarters . . . are spiritual, the habitations of Angels and Spirits, all of which are according to these quarters, are also spiritual; and they are spiritual, because Angels and Spirits dwell according to their reception of love and wisdom from the Lord. Ex.

124. This diversity of their habitations appears as if it were from the Lord as a Sun, when yet it is from the Angels . . .

134. As the quarters are thus as it were inscribed on the Angel . . . he knows his own house and his own habitation wherever he goes. The reason a man does not know his house and habitation from the quarter in himself, is that he thinks from space . . . Nevertheless, birds and beasts . . . have it implanted in them to know of themselves their own homes and habitations.

331. Uses for the support of the body . . . habitation . . .

333². These uses may be described by (such terms as) . . . habitation . . . habitation being applied to Heaven.

358. That two receptacles and dwelling-places for Himself . . . have been created by the Lord with man . . .

P. 220⁵. Temporary things . . . relate to . . . habitation, etc.

256. The smaller part of the habitable world.

R. 110. 'To know where thou dwellest' (Rev.ii.13)= to know of what quality it is; for, in the Spiritual World, everyone dwells according to the quality of his affection.

336. Angels dwell upon mountains . . .

380. 'He that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell over them' (Rev.vii.15)= that the Lord continually implants good in the truths which they receive from Him. . . (For), in the Word, 'to dwell' is predicated of good. E.479.

416. 'They that dwell upon the earth' (Rev.viii.13)= those who are in the Church where the Word is, and thereby the Lord is known.

735. 'They that dwell upon the earth' (Rev.xvii.8)= those who are of the Church; here, those who are of this religiosity.

883. 'He shall dwell with them' (Rev.xxi.3)= the conjunction of the Lord with them.

—⁴. The reason 'to dwell with them'=conjunction with them, is that 'to dwell'=conjunction from love, as may be evident from many passages in the Word, and also from the habitations of the Angels in Heaven . . . For each Society is in one species of affection, and they dwell there distinctly according to the relationships and affinities of that species of affection . . . M. 50.

M. 75³. These most ancient people . . . dwelt in tabernacles; wherefore they now also dwell in them.

270⁴. We perceive (these three regions of the mind) like stories—habitationes—in a house, one above another.

530². The mind of every man . . . actually dwells in one Society there . . .

T. 74³. If God were to do violence to the free-will of man, the habitation of man in God would perish, and there would only be that of God in man; and this habitation is in all, both on earth and in the Heavens, and also in those who are in the Hells . . . But there is no reciprocal habitation of man in God, except with those who live according to the laws of order . . .

186. The human mind is distinguished into three regions, like a house into three stories—mansiones—, in like manner as the habitations of the Angels are into three Heavens.

D. 308. Until He translates them into a certain better dwelling . . .

394. 'They that dwell upon the earth' (Rev. vi. 10) = those who are in the former Heaven which afterwards passed away; for they dwelt upon the earth, etc., in the Spiritual World.

403⁷. 'The dwelling-places of the wilderness' (Joel ii. 22) = the interior things of the mind of those in whom they did not exist before.

405⁵⁰. 'Dwelling-places' = where they are; here, therefore, 'the dwelling-places of the wilderness' (Jer. ix. 10) = the falsities from the above-named evils.

406². 'The inhabitants of the islands' (Ezek. xxvi. 17) = the goods of truth of the natural man; for 'to dwell' in the Word = to live; and 'inhabitants,' the goods of life. —³. —⁵.

411¹⁷. The faith of falsity is signified by 'a dwelling-place in a rock' (Is. xxii. 16).

—²⁹. These are meant by 'the inhabitress of the valley' (Jer. xxi. 13) . . . 'Inhabitress' = falsity of life.

—³². In the Spiritual World, all dwell according to the correspondences of the interiors of their mind and life.

417⁸. The habitations of Spirits and Angels succeed each other in this order . . . 422⁷.

—¹⁰. 'To dwell,' in the Word, is said of goods.

422⁷. (As they sit in the temples, so they dwell in the houses.)

431¹³. 'Tabernacles' and 'dwelling-places' (Num. xxiv. 5) = habitations such as there are in the Heavens; 'tabernacles,' the habitations of those who are in the good of love; and 'dwelling-places,' the habitations of those who are in truths from that good.

479. 'He that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell over them' = the influx of Divine good into the truths with them. . . 'To dwell over them' = to inflow with good into their truths; for 'to dwell,' in the Word, is said of good; whence 'inhabitants' = those who are in good . . .

514⁵. 'The inhabitants of the isle' (Is. xxiii. 2) = those who are in the goods of life according to their own doctrinal things.

518²⁰. 'They that dwell therein' (Ps. xcvi. 7) = the universal Heaven as to its goods; 'inhabitants,' in the Word, = those who are in the goods of Heaven and the Church, thus their goods. —³⁸.

531. 'They that dwell upon the earth' (Rev. viii. 13) = those who are of the Church.

538⁸. 'As cities which are not inhabited' (Ezek. xxvi. 19) = as doctrines which are devoid of good. 'Not to dwell,' here (ver. 20) = not to be in any truths because not in good; for these do not dwell in houses, but in pits.

587⁷. 'To dwell in the house' (Is. lxiv. 13) = the appearance of spiritual life thence.

601¹⁵. 'The dwelling-places of the shepherds' (Amos i. 2) = all the goods of the Church.

3900¹⁰. See CORPSE at this ref.

— Reasonings concerning goods and truths, that they only exist in so far as they are apprehended, and confirmations of evil and falsity by such reasonings, are 'eagles.'

3901. The reason the last state of the Church is compared to the eagles which are gathered together to a carcase or body, is that by 'eagles' are signified the rational things of man, which, when predicated of things good, are rational truths, but when of things evil are rational falsities or reasonings. . . The birds which fly high, and have sharp sight, = rational things. Ill.

— 'He led him about, He instructed him, He guarded him as the pupil of the eye, as an eagle stirreth up its nest, fluttereth over its young, spreadeth out its wings, taketh him, and carrieth him upon its wing' (Deut.xxxii.10,11). It is instruction in the truths and goods of faith which is here described, and is compared to an eagle. . . 'An eagle,' here, = that which is rational.

—². 'To ascend with a strong wing as eagles' (Is. xl.31)=to grow in the understanding of truth, thus as to the Rational.

—³. In Ezek.xvii., the eagle first mentioned = the Rational enlightened from the Divine ; and the eagle mentioned in the second place = the Rational from proprium afterwards perverted by means of reasonings from sensuous and scientific things.

—⁴. In Dan.vii., the first state of the Church is described by 'a lion which had eagle's wings,' (which) = rational things from proprium.

—⁵. 'The face of an eagle' (Ezek.i.10 ; x.14) = circumspection, and thence Providence.

— Hence it is evident, that 'an eagle,' when predicated of man, = the Rational ; and this because an eagle flies high, and from aloft takes a wide view of the things which are below.

—⁶. Such was the signification of an eagle in the Ancient Church.

—⁷. That in the opposite sense 'an eagle' = rational things not true, thus falsities. Ill.

—⁸. In these passages, 'eagles' = the falsity which is induced by reasonings, which is induced from the fallacies of the senses and external appearances.

5113³. 'An eagle' = the Rational.

6441^e. The case is the same (as to sometimes having a good signification) with other rapacious beasts, as with leopards, and eagles.

8764. 'I bore you upon the wings of eagles' (Ex. xix.4) = thus by means of truths they have been elevated to celestial light. . . 'An eagle' = the Rational as to truth ; for eagles fly on high. Ex.

—⁶. In Ezek.xvii., is described the establishment of the Spiritual Church by the Lord ; 'the eagle' there = faith . . . The external of the Church is described by one eagle, and its internal by the other.

9391². Good and thence truth in the internal form are signified by 'the face of a man' and 'a flying eagle' (Rev.iv.7).

9688^e. The Spiritual Church is called 'an eagle' (Ezek.xvii), from perception.

9970. As they saw clearly the things below, I compared them to eagles . . . But they were indignant at this, supposing that I believed them to be eagles in respect to prey, and thus that they were evil; but I answered, that I did not liken them to eagles in respect to prey, but in respect to keenness of sight. I added, that those who are like eagles in respect to prey are evil; but that those who are like them only in respect to keenness of sight are good. D.4673^d.

10199^s. 'A great eagle with wings' (Ezek.xvii.)=the interior truth of the Spiritual Church.

P. 20. They who are in evil and at the same time in truths, may be compared to eagles which fly aloft, and which, when their wings are taken from them, fall down . . . Eagles also=men of prey, who possess intellectual sight; and wings=spiritual truths. It was said that they are such as have had no regard to God in their own life. To have regard to God in the life means to think that this or that evil is a sin against God; and therefore not to do it.

R. 244. 'The fourth animal was like a flying eagle' (Rev.iv.7)=the Divine truth of the Word as to Knowledges and thence understanding. By 'eagles' are signified various things; and by 'flying eagles' are signified the Knowledges from which comes understanding; for, while they are flying, they Know and see. They also have sharp eyes, in order to see clearly, and the eyes=the understanding. 'To fly'=to perceive and instruct; and, in the supreme sense, to look out for and provide. R.320.

—². That 'eagles'=such things. Ill.

—^e. In the opposite sense, 'eagles'=the Knowledges of falsity, from which comes a perverted understanding. Ill.

561. 'There were given to the woman two wings of a great eagle' (Rev.xii.14)=the Divine circumspection for that Church. . . 'An eagle'=intellectual sight, and thence thought.

D. 2229. That Spirits fly to the spot like an eagle, as we read of the nations (Deut.xxviii.49).

E. 278. 'An eagle'=Divine intelligence.

281. 'The fourth animal was like a flying eagle'=the appearance of the Divine protection and Providence in ultimates as to intelligence and as to clear-sightedness on every side. 'An eagle'=intelligence; here, the Divine intelligence which belongs to the Lord's protection and Providence. The reason 'an eagle'=intelligence, is that intelligence is in the light of Heaven; and an eagle flies high in order to be there, and to look round on every side.

— . The reason 'an eagle'=intelligence, is also because the birds of heaven, in a good sense, =intellectual and rational things; and an eagle pre-eminently so, because it not only flies high, but is also sharp-sighted.

—². That 'an eagle'=intelligence. Ill.

— . In Ezek.xvii., by the first 'eagle,' is described the process of the regeneration of the natural or external man by means of scientifics and by means of Knowledges from the Word; and by the second 'eagle' is described the process of the regeneration of the spiritual or internal man by means of truths from good; hence by the first 'eagle' is signified the intelligence of the natural man; and by the second, the intelligence of the spiritual man. Ex.

—³. That 'an eagle'=intelligence, may also be evident from Is.xl.31. 'To ascend with a wing as of an eagle'=to ascend into the light of Heaven, thus into intelligence.

—⁴. 'To be renewed like an eagle' (Ps.ciii.5)=as to intelligence.

—⁵. 'To bear as with wings of eagles'=to bring into intelligence, because into Heaven and its light.

—⁶. Their instruction in truths, guarding from falsities, and the opening of the interiors of their minds so that they may come into the light of Heaven, and thus into the understanding of truth and good, which is intelligence, is described by 'an eagle, its nest on high, its brooding over its young, and carrying them upon its wings' (Deut.xxxii). —⁸. 2S3¹⁰.

—⁹. By 'eagles' (Luke xvii.37) are signified those who are in truths, and who are in falsities; thus who are in true intelligence, and who are in false intelligence. . . .

—¹⁰. The falsities which are from man's own intelligence are also described by 'eagles' in the Word. Ill. 410⁴.

— . 'Eagles,' here, (Jer.iv.13)=man's own intelligence, which is reasoning from falsities.

—^e. 'An eagle,' here, (Lam.i.9)=reasoning from falsities against truths.

410⁵. They are compared to 'an eagle' (Obad.4), because 'an eagle,' from its lofty flight, =the pride of man's own intelligence.

759. 'There were given to the woman two wings of a great eagle'=the spiritual intelligence and circumspection which are given by the Lord to those who are of this Church. . . 'An eagle'=intelligence and circumspection.

—⁴. Moreover, 'the wings of the eagle,' which were given to the woman=the understanding of truth; for all who are of that Church have the understanding enlightened . . .

2072. Interior hearing and obedience are signified by 'the ear.' 2271.

2542. 'He spake all these words in their ears' (Gen. xx.8)=exhortation to things confirmatory thence, even to their obeying. . . 'The ears'=obedience, because of the correspondence which exists between hearing and obeying, which correspondence is latent in the very word 'hear,' and still more in 'hearken;' the origin of which correspondence is from the other life, where they who are obedient and submissive belong to the province of the ear; nay, they correspond to the hearing itself. Ill.

—^e. 'To hear with the ears' (Is.vi.10)=to perceive with affection, thus to obey.

2763. The ears=obedience.

2942. 'In the ears of the sons of Heth' (Gen.xxiii.10)=obedience. 2952.

2965. 'He spake in the ears of the sons of Heth' (ver. 16)=according to the capacity of those who were of the new Church. . . 'The ears'=obedience; hence, 'to speak in the ears'=according to the capacity; for capacity is of reception, thus of obedience according to that which anyone perceives and wills.

2975. 'To speak in the ears of the sons of Heth' . . . involves application to their will.

3342^o. All speech that is perceived with the ear, when it ascends towards the interiors, passes into ideas not unlike those of visual things, and from these into intellectual ones, and thus there is effected a perception of the meaning of the words.

3628^o. The aerial atmosphere by its influx, keeps in connection . . . its organ, which is the ear, with its forms constructed to the modifications thereof.

3869^o. They who are obedient and in faith thence, belong to the province of the ear. . . Hence it is, that 'the ear'=obedience; and, in the spiritual sense, the faith thence derived, or faith in the will. Ill.

—⁹. 'To remove the nose and the ears' (Ezek. xxiii.25)=the perception of truth and good, and the obedience of faith.

—¹⁰. 'A piece of an ear' (Amos iii.12)=the will of truth.

— Hence it was, that when Aaron and his sons were inaugurated into the ministry, it was commanded . . . that Moses should take of the blood of a ram, and should 'put it on the earlap of Aaron's ear, and upon the earlap of the ear of his sons . . .' (Ex.xxix.20). This ritual represented the will of faith, into which the priest was as it were initiated. . . The internal sense is, that what is holy of faith from the will should be guarded.

—¹¹. That 'the ear'=obedience, and, in the internal sense, the faith thence derived, appears still more manifestly from the ritual respecting a servant who did not want to depart from his service . . . (Ex.xxi.6; Deut. xv.17). 'To bore the ear with an awl at the door-post' =to serve or obey perpetually; in the spiritual sense, not to want to understand truth, but to will truth from obedience, which, relatively, is not free. S989^o. 8990. E.208¹².

—¹². As the obedience of faith is meant, in the internal sense, by 'the ears,' and 'to obey,' by 'to hear,' it is evident what is meant by these words of the Lord, 'He who hath ears to hear, let him hear.' Ill.

—¹⁴. That Jehovah has neither ears nor eyes like a man, is known . . . But by His 'ear' and 'eye' are signified infinite willing and infinite understanding; infinite willing is Providence, and infinite understanding is foresight. These are what are meant in the supreme sense by 'ear' and 'eye,' when they are attributed to Jehovah.

4051^e. They applied themselves to my ear . . .

—². The region where the (left) ear is, corresponds to obedience alone without affection.

—³. (The above means) that with their descendants, whose time was called the iron age, as they did not live in the affection of truth, but in obedience to truth, the Involuntary no longer manifested itself in the face, but withdrew to the region about the left ear. (Where it is now. D.3861. 3864.)

4403^o. The Spirits who appear at my ears are those who obey.

4407. (Superiority of the eye to the ear. See EYE, here.)

4523. The ear is exactly formed to the nature of the modifications of the air and of sound; thus, as to its Corporeal and Material, the ear corresponds thereto . . . and this so completely, that every secret which is stored up in the nature of air and sound is inscribed on the organism of the ear. 6013. 6057.

4652. On the correspondence of the hearing and of the ears with the Grand Man. Gen.art.

—². (I told the Spirits) that their speech flowed into my ear by an internal way, and human speech by an external way.

4655. I have many times observed Spirits near to my ear, and also as it were within it. The reason they were within . . . is that in the other life it is state which makes the appearance. They were all simple, and obedient.

4656. There was a Spirit who spoke with me at the left earlap, at its hinder part where are the erector muscles of the earlap. He said . . . that he does not reflect at all upon what others say, but merely takes it in with his ears. When he spoke, he as it were belched out his words . . . Hence it was given to know, that there were no interior things in his speech, thus but little of life . . . It was said, that such as attend but little to the meaning of a thing, are they who belong to the cartilaginous and bony part of the external ear.

are present, by whispering into the ear; and that they see and interpret all things unfairly, and set themselves above others . . . In the other life, such speech is heard more loudly than open speech.

4658. To the interiors of the ear belong those who have the sight of the interior hearing, and obey what its spirit there dictates, and who give apt expression to its dictates. Their quality was thus shown me:—something sonorous was perceived penetrating from beneath, near the left side even to the left ear . . . They were logicians and metaphysicians, who had immersed their thoughts in such things merely to be accounted learned, and thus come to honours and riches. They lamented that now they lead a miserable life. . . (Aristotle then appeared above the head, and) applied himself to the right ear, and there spoke hoarsely, but sanely . . . D. 3947. 3948. 3949, Ex.

5017. The function of the ear. Ex. (See HEAR at this ref.)

—^c. Hence it is, that the Spirits and Angels who correspond to the ear or to the sense of hearing in the Grand Man, are not only apperceptions, but also obediences. As they are obediences, they are also apperceptions, for the one involves the other.

5180. The suction towards the left eye was from Spirits; that towards the left ear was from Genii.

— . The region of those who acted outwardly, was observed to be from the plane of the septum of the nose rising towards the plane of the left ear.

5189^b. They then applied themselves to my left ear . . .

5797. 'Let thy servant, I pray, speak a word in the ears of my lord' (Gen. xlv. 18) = supplication concerning reception and hearing. . . 'The ears' = obedience; here, kind hearkening, or hearing, because an inferior is speaking to a superior.

6513. 'Speak, I pray, in the ears of Pharaoh, saying' (Gen. l. 4) = solicitation to consent. . . 'The ears' = obedience; here, consent, because it is addressed to the king . . .

7225². 'An uncircumcised ear' = disobedience.

7359^e. Exterior speech is that of articulate sound falling towards the external membrane of the ear; and by which, by means of the little organs, membranes, and fibres which are within the ear, it is thence carried to the brain.

7634. 'To tell in the ears' (Ex. x. 2) = that they may know and apperceive.

7769. 'Say now in the ears of the people' (Ex. xi. 2) = information, and obedience. . . Obedience is signified by 'to say in the ears;' for the ears correspond to obedience, and thence signify it.

8621. 'Set it in the ears of Joshua' (Ex. xvii. 14) = to be obedient . . .

9397. 'He read it in the ears of the people' (Ex. xxiv. 7) = for hearkening, and obedience. . . 'In the ears' = for obedience; for 'the ears,' and 'to hear' = to obey. Refs.

—². As 'the ears' = not only hearing and apperception, but also obedience, the expression is very frequently used in the Word 'to speak in the ears,' and 'to read in their ears;' and not to speak and to read before them. Ill.

[A. 9397]³. As 'the ear,' and 'to hear' = the reception, apperception, and obedience of truth, thus the first and last of faith, the Lord so often said, 'He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear.'

10061. 'Thou shalt put it upon the earlap of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the earlap of the right ear of his sons' (Ex.xxix.20)=all the Perceptive of Divine truth proceeding from the Lord's Divine good in the Heavens. . . 'The ear'=what is perceptive; here, what is perceptive of Divine truth in the Heavens and in the Church; for all the Perceptive there is thence derived. There is meant here, in special, the Perceptive in the Celestial Kingdom; for there truth is perceived from good. 'The earlap,' which is the outermost of the ear=the whole, or all. . . 'The right ear'=the Perceptive of truth from good. . .

363². They who constitute the third class of the tribes, are they who correspond to the ears and cheeks.

426². The layman hears these mysteries, but they fly in through one of his ears, and out through the other.

590. 'If anyone hath an ear, let him hear' (Rev.xiii.9)=that those who want to be wise should attend to these things. 'To have an ear to hear'=to perceive and obey, and also to attend.

839⁵. They said that they would pull our ears.

M. 55⁸. Many of the bystanders then placed their hands on their ears, and said that these things hurt their ears. They were unchaste.

T. 78^e. As these direful things began to hurt our ears. . .

79⁴. His right ear was stopped up as with cotton. 644^e.

371⁸. There is a like mutual reciprocal conjunction. . . of sound and the ear.

D. 1089. On those who constitute the province of the ear. 3956.

1129. Those who [operate] towards the ear are Genii. . .

1751. They block up the internal chamber of the ear.

342S. He applied himself to my left ear. . . and thus spake two or three times in my ear. . .

3465. I heard a subtle species of turning near my left ear. . .

3963. Spirits have been able. . . through my ears to hear others speaking. . .

4348². The influx (of the hypocrites) is into. . . the perieranium about the right ear, in which they create a bad and rather severe pain. 4351².

585r. Why the ear=obedience. Gen.art.

— The reason why the ear=obedience, is that with the celestial, with whom the internals are open, all things which they hear about truths and goods, enter into their Voluntary and life, and thus make it; so the things which enter through the ear are with them obedience. It is otherwise with the spiritual . . .

D. Min. 4602. On the auricular-auricularibus.

— There are Spirits not evil, who ascend within towards the left side towards the internal ear, and there apply their own ear, in order to see what is going on in the World of Spirits. It was said, that when they rise up, and apply their ear, I was held with my sight in the World of Spirits . . .

E. 14². They who are in the province of the ear, are obediences from perception . . . and the province of the ear is in the axis of Heaven; and therefore the whole Spiritual World flows into it, or into those who are there, with the perception that so it is to be done; for this perception is regnant in Heaven. Hence it is, that those who are there, are obediences from perception.

163³. 'The legs, and a small piece of an ear'=the goods which are in the natural man, and thence something of the perception of truth.

455²¹. The ears being opened by the Lord (Mark vii. 35)=the perception of truth, and obedience.

600¹. The good of life according to the truths of doctrine, is signified by 'thine ears shall hear a word' (Is. xxx. 21). 'The ears'=obedience; and as obedience is of life, 'to hear a word'=life according to the truths of doctrine.

—¹⁸. 'The earlap of the right ear'=obedience from perception.

1081³. 'Blessed are your ears, because they hear' (Matt. xiii. 16) . . . 'The ears,' here, =obedience, thus life according to the truths of faith; and 'to hear'=to obey and to live.

Ear (of Corn). Arista.

A. 5212. 'Seven ears ascending on one stalk' (Gen. xli. 5)=the scientifics of the Natural which are conjoined. 'Ears,' or 'ears-spicae'=the scientifics of the Natural. Ex. 5213.

— The scientifics which are here signified by 'ears,' or 'ears-spicas,' are the scientifics of the Church.

—². 'The seven kine'=those things which are of the interior Natural, and which are called the truths of the Natural; and 'the seven ears'=the truths of the exterior Natural, which are called scientifics. 5263⁹.

5214. 'Seven thin ears' (ver. 6)=scientifics of no use. 5215².

5217. 'The seven thin ears swallowed up the seven fat and full ears' (ver. 7)=that the scientifics of no use exterminated the good scientifics. Ex.

5266. 'The seven good ears are seven years' (ver. 26) =the states of the multiplication of truth in the exterior Natural. 'Ears,' in a good sense, =scientifics; and therefore the truths of the exterior Natural; for these are called scientifics.

5269. 'The seven empty ears, blasted with the east wind' (ver. 27)=the states of the multiplication of the falsity which infests the exterior Natural. 'Ears' . . . in the opposite sense, =the falsities of the exterior Natural.

Ear (of Corn). Spica.

A. 5212. See EAR-arista-at these refs. —.

—³. Interior and exterior scientifics are signified by 'the ears of the river Euphrates, even to the river of Egypt' (Is. xxvii. 12).

—⁴. The comparison with 'the blade, the ear, and the corn' (Mark iv. 28), involves the rebirth of man by means of scientifics, the truths of faith, and the goods of charity. . . 'The blade'=the first Scientific; 'the ear'=the Scientific of truth thence derived; 'the corn'=the good thence derived.

— (The signification of 'ear' further ill.)

7604. 'A ripening ear' (Ex. ix. 31)=that they stood forth. Ex.

9295². 'An ear,' or ear-arista- containing the wheat or barley, =truths thus adjoined to goods.

— 'A parched ear' (Lev. xxiii. 14)=the good of charity; 'a green ear'=the good of truth.

10669. Standing corn=truth in conception; the ear, truth containing; and the wheat and barley in the ear, good receiving, and also received.

T. 301². 'To gather the ears and eat them' (Matt. xii. 1)=to be instructed in doctrinal things.

351⁴. Every ear and blade . . .

D. 2763. Corporeal things reformed . . . were represented by . . . a contexture . . . with points arranged into various beautiful forms . . . This little point-spiculum-was set in the forms. Afterwards, a more coherent form of such points, in beautiful forms, from minute points . . .

E. 654²³. 'From the ear of the river even to the river of Egypt'=all rational and scientific truth that would be of service to the Spiritual. 'An ear' is mentioned, because it is the containant of corn, by which is signified the truth and good which is of service to the spiritual man for nourishment.

—¹. Such are sent among the auriculars, or those who constitute the cartilaginous skin of the left earlap.

D. Min. 4602. On the auriculars.

4813. It was a Spirit of the province of the external ear, and in fact of the earlap where the flesh hangs beneath the cartilaginous part, or rather the gross membranaceous cartilage which makes this.

E. 298¹⁴. 'The right earlap' = the Perceptive of truth from good.

A. 2540. 'Early' (Gen. xx. 8) = the light of confirmation from celestial good.

2673. 'To arise early in the morning' (Gen. xxi. 14) = to perceive clearly.

2716. Like clouds . . . in the early morning time . . .

2780. See MORNING at these refs. 4214. 9387. 10200.

5097. 'Joseph came to them in the early morning' (Gen. xl. 6) = that which is revealed and clear to the Celestial of the Spiritual. The reason why 'morning,' or early morning, has this signification. Ex.

5221. 'It came to pass in the early morning' (Gen. xli. 8) = in that new state. . . 'Early morning,' or 'morning' = a state of enlightenment.

7306. 'Go to Pharaoh in the early morning' (Ex. vii. 14) = elevation to things more confirmatory. . . 'The morning,' or 'the early morning' = a state of enlightenment and of revelation; here, of elevation, because it is predicated of those who are in falsities, who cannot be enlightened, but can have their attention elevated. 7435.

10833. Concerning the revelation, they said that it takes place in the early morning time between sleeping and waking.

R. 151. 'I will give him the morning star' (Rev. ii. 28) = intelligence and wisdom then. E. 179.

—². The reason the star is called 'morning,' is that 'morning,' or 'morning-mane' = the Advent of the Lord, when there is a New Church. Ill. 954⁹.

954. 'I am the bright and morning star' (Rev. xxii. 16) = that the Lord was then the Light, and that He will come with new light, which will arise before His New Church, which is the Holy Jerusalem.

A. 3263⁹. 'Ear-rings of gold' (Judg. viii. 24) = those things which are of simple good.

4551. 'The ear-rings which are in their ears' (Gen. xxxv. 4) = actual things. (For) ear-rings are insignia representative of obedience . . . and those things which are of obedience are actual . . .

9930⁹. 'A pendant upon the nose' (Ezek. xvi. 12) = the perception of good; 'ear-rings upon the ears' = the perception of truth, and obedience. E. 272². (=hearkening, and obedience. 577³.)

10402. 'Pluck off the ear-rings of gold from the ears of your women, of your sons, of your daughters' (Ex. xxxii. 2) = the drawing out of such things from the sense of the letter of the Word as favour external loves, and the principles thence derived. . . 'The ear-rings of gold which are in the ears' = insignia representative of obedience and of the apperception of the delights which are of external loves. Ex.

—³. That 'ear-rings' are the insignia of obedience and of apperception. Ill.

10540². 'A pendant' = truth as to perception; and 'ear-rings,' truths as to obedience.

E. 1957. 'Pendants,' and 'ear-rings,' are representatives of perception and of obedience.

5056. He was sent into a Society of upright Spirits of this Earth . . .

6695. On the inhabitants of other Earths. Gen.art.

— . I have not spoken with the actual inhabitants of the Earths, but with Spirits and Angels who had been inhabitants there . . .

—^e. That there are many Earths, and men on them, and Spirits and Angels from them, is very well known in the other life ; for to speak with them is granted to everyone who desires it.

6696. The Spirits of Mercury (who wander about the universe) have said, that there are Earths with men on them not only in this solar system, but also in the universe, in immense numbers.

6697. A man of intellectual ability, may know from many things, that there are many Earths, and inhabitants there. Ex.

6698. That there are more Earths in the universe than one . . .

— . The visible universe is a means for the coming forth of Earths, with men on them, from whom is the heavenly Kingdom. Who can conceive, that a means so immense was made for an end so small and limited as it would be if only one Earth were inhabited . . . What would this be for the Divine . . . to whom myriads of Earths, all filled with inhabitants, would be almost nothing ?

—^e. Heaven, with all its correspondences, could not possibly exist, except from the inhabitants of a vast number of Earths. 9441^e. D.1145³.

6700. All the inhabitants of other Earths who are not idolaters acknowledge the Lord as the only God. They do not know, however, except very few of them, that the Lord assumed the Human on this Earth . . . but they adore the Divine . . . as comprehensible by means of the human form ; for when the Divine appears to them, He appears in that form . . . (Thus) they adore the Lord . . . When told by the Spirits of our Earth, that the Lord assumed the Human in this Earth, they mused a while, and presently said, that this was done for the salvation of the human race . . .

6701. The Spirits and Angels who are from different Earths, are all separated from each other according to the Earths, and do not appear together in one place ; the reason of which is, that the inhabitants of one Earth are of an entirely different genius from those of another ; nor are they consociated together in the Heavens, except in the Third Heaven . . .

6807. To constitute this Grand Man, those who come into the other life from this Earth are not sufficient . . . There is need of more from many other Earths. It is provided that as soon as there is a deficiency anywhere in the quantity or the quality of the correspondence, there are at once called from some Earth those who may supply it, so that the proportion may be preserved . . .

6816. The Spirits of our Earth do not care so much for realities, but for things material, worldly, corporeal, and earthly. D.1434.

6925. The Spirits of the Earth Mercury . . . 6926.

6927. The worlds and Earths outside the sphere of our solar world . . .

—^e. They said that they are acquainted with Earths in the universe beyond some hundreds of thousands. (They have counted 600,000 Earths. D.3264.)

6928. The Spirits of our Earth, especially when newly arrived in the other life, love corporeal and worldly things . . . and desire to know such things in the other life. Wherefore . . . they are kept in . . . the Lower Earth . . . until they are averse to things corporeal and earthly . . . They are then elevated into Heaven, and are initiated into interior things, and become Angels.

6929. The Spirits of Mercury said that what I was writing was very gross . . . But it was given to reply, that to the men of our Earth these things seem subtle and elevated . . . They asked whether such could become Angels ; to which it was given to reply, that those become Angels who have lived in the good of faith and in charity ; and that then . . . they are in greater light than the Spirits of Mercury . . . 7077^e. D.3240.

7069^e. The genius of the men of every Earth may be known from that of the Spirits who are from it.

7078. The Spirits of other Earths do not appear within the sphere in which are the Spirits of our Earth, but outside of it, some at a greater, and some at a less distance, and also in different directions. The reason is, that the Spirits of one Earth are not of a like genius and life to those of another Earth . . . 7358.

7358. The Spirits of each Earth relate to some special province in the Grand Man.

7482. (Spirits of our Earth infesting those of Mars) . . . The Spirits of our Earth then became as it were insane . . . For the Spirits of our Earth look to themselves and the world ; thus in idea they are turned to self. D.3331.

8029. Men of all Earths (have to remain in the World of Spirits before they become Angels.)

8031. The Spirits of Jupiter are entirely unwilling to be in the company of those of our Earth . . . They say that the Spirits of our Earth are cunning, and ready and clever at the plotting of evils, and that they know and think little about what is good. . . They are much wiser than the Spirits of our Earth ; of whom they also say, that they speak much and think little, and thus are not able to perceive many things interiorly, not even what is good. From this they conclude that the men of our Earth are external men. S375.

[A.]S115. The Spirits of the Earth Jupiter are not able to be together with the Spirits of our Earth . . . because the latter do not love the delight of tranquillity as do the former. They wondered when they heard that when those from our Earth become Angels, they are of an entirely different heart, and retain scarcely anything similar to their state when they were Spirits. In order that they might know that it is so, there came from Heaven choirs of the Angels of our Earth . . .

9104. Some of the Spirits of this Earth passed over to the Spirits of the Earth Saturn . . .

9107. How the Spirits of our Earth differ from the Spirits of the Earth Saturn . . . The Spirits of our Earth relate to the natural and corporeal sense; thus they relate to the external man. 9360. U.89.

9237. Those moons are also Earths; and where there is an Earth, there is man; for man is the end for the sake of which is the Earth. . . The Angels also say, that an Earth without the human race cannot subsist, because the Divine regards all things in an Earth for the sake of man.

9276⁷. Divine truth on our Earth is the Word. 9400.

9350. Why the Lord willed to be born on our Earth, and not in any other. Gen.art. D.4376. 4781. U.113.

9351. The principal reason was for the sake of the Word, which in our Earth could be written, and then published through the universal Earth; and, when once published, could be preserved for all posterity. 9353.

9357^e. Such things are presented to the Angels in Heaven, from whatever Earth they are, when the Word of our Earth is read and preached.

9358. In every other Earth, truth Divine is manifested orally through Angels and Spirits . . . but this is done within families; for in most Earths the human race dwell distinct according to families; whereas the Divine truth thus revealed . . . is not conveyed far beyond the families; and unless a new revelation constantly succeeds, it is either perverted, or it perishes. It is otherwise in our Earth, where truth Divine, which is the Word, remains in its integrity for ever.

9359. The Lord . . . receives all, from whatever Earth, who worship God under a human form . . . and as the Lord appears to the inhabitants of the Earths in an angelic form . . . when the Spirits and Angels from those Earths hear from the Spirits and Angels of our Earth, that God is actually a man, they receive this Word, and acknowledge and rejoice that it is so.

9360. (As our Earth relates to the ultimate,) and the case is the same with truth Divine in the letter . . . the Word was given in this Earth; and as the Lord is the Word, and its first and last, that all things might come forth according to order, He willed to be born in this Earth, and become the Word.

9400². (Therefore) without a Word on this Earth, there would be no conjunction of Heaven, thus no conjunction of the Lord, with man; and, if there were no conjunction, the human race on this Earth would completely perish . . . 10276^e. H.305(c)^e. Refs. 309. J.10⁴. E.1084².

— . The men of every Earth . . . become Spirits, and remain about their own Earth . . . 9582. 9968.

9579. To be led to the Earths in the universe, is not to be led and translated thither as to the body, but as to the spirit; and the spirit is not led through spaces, but by means of variations of the state of the interior life . . . U.135.

9582. In a waking state I was led as to the spirit by Angels from the Lord to a certain Earth in the universe . . . Near the end of our solar world there appeared first a brightish cloud, but dense, and after it a fiery smoke rising from a great aperture. It was a great gulf separating on that side our solar world from certain worlds of the sidereal heaven . . . I was carried beyond that middle, and there then appeared underneath in that aperture or gulf a great number of men who were Spirits . . .

9790. I saw some of the inhabitants of the lower sort, (their dress and deportment described). It is contrary to the laws for them to have more wives than one.

9791. A man who is in the spirit can look into the Earth near which he is, when it is granted by the Lord . . . The like has taken place with the Spirits of certain Earths in our solar world, to whom it has been granted by the Lord to see many things in our Earth through my eyes.

9792. (Their garment described, which is worn by both sexes.)

9793. I afterwards spoke with the Spirits who were from that (First) Earth . . .

9967. On the Second Earth that was seen in the starry heaven. Gen.art. 10159. U.138. D.4673.

— . This Earth was further from our Earth than the first one; (for) I was two days in being led thither. This, however, merely indicated) that the state of the interiors of the inhabitants of that Earth . . . differed proportionately from the state of the interiors of the Spirits from our Earth . . .

9968. When I arrived there, the Earth was not seen, but the Spirits from that Earth . . .

—^e. I told them from what Earth I was, and what kind of Earth; and I afterwards told them about the Earths in our solar world, and at the same time about the Spirits of the Earth or planet Mercury . . . whom they said they had seen among themselves.

9969. I was told by the Angels of our Earth, that the inhabitants and Spirits of this (Second) Earth relate in the Grand Man to the keenness of the external sight . . .

9971. They worship both a visible and an invisible God . . .

10162. Their sun is of a fiery colour . . . no larger than a man's head. I was told by the Angels, that the star which to them is a sun, is among the lesser ones, not far from the equator.

10163. Their faces are not unlike those of the men of our Earth, except that their eyes and nose are small . . . A woman was seen, clad in a gown in which were roses of various colours. . . They prepare their garments by gathering from herbs such things as they can spin into threads, which they lay in rows in a double and triple order, and moisten them with glutinous water, and thus induce consistence, afterwards colouring the web with the juices of herbs.

10164. How they make the threads. Des.

10165. In this (Second) Earth a husband has only one wife; and they have from ten to fifteen children. Harlots are found there, who are witches when they become Spirits, and are cast into Hell.

10311. On a Third Earth in the starry heaven. Gen. art. 10377. 10513. U.148. D.1668. 1684. (This Earth conjectured to be one of the satellites of Jupiter. D.1670.) — . I was not told where this Earth is.

10312. They were utterly unwilling to think about their bodies, or even about anything corporeal and material.

10313. They told the Spirits of our Earth, that they dare not approach them; for if they did so, they were not only seized with anxiety, but seemed to have their hands and feet bound with serpents . . .

10314. Hence the Spirits of this (Third) Earth do not appear in a clearly defined human form, but like a cloud . . .

10315. They said that the men of their Earth make nothing of the body . . . But they do not call the face the body . . . They said also that many in their Earth believe that the spirits of their bodies have existed from eternity, having been infused into their body when they were conceived . . .

10316. They refused to look through my eyes at the objects on our Earth, because they would see only material things, from which they remove their thoughts as much as possible.

10377. As is the case in every Earth, they recognize God under a human form, thus our Lord.

10378. The Spirits who are from this (Third) Earth are upright; the reason of which is that they are withheld from evils by not loving to think of earthly and corporeal things . . .

10380. The inhabitants of this Earth are instructed about the things of Heaven by some immediate intercourse with Angels and Spirits . . .

10382. In their Earth no one is allowed to be morally bad . . . He is chided by a Spirit . . . and if he persists he dies in a swoon. 10383.

10384. In our Earth, where corporeal and earthly things are so much loved, Divine things can be received only (by means of a written Word), and it would be dangerous to speak with Angels.

10513. When magnificent palaces were shown them, the Spirits of this (Third) Earth held them in no estimation . . . and related that their temples are not built of stone, but of wood . . .

[A.] 10514. On that Earth there are trees of marvellous growth and height (of which they form their temples. Des.)

10515. The inhabitants dwell on the earth in low cottages. Des. . . On the hearth . . . is luminous wood . . .

10517. They are upright . . . and bear injuries . . .

— The Spirits of our Earth think little about heavenly things, and much about corporeal and earthly things ; and when they think about heavenly things, they think about truths, and not about good ; whereas the Spirits from that Earth think about good, and but little about truths . . .

10585. On a Fourth Earth in the starry heaven. Gen. art. 1070S. D.3267. 3296.

— I was not conveyed to this Earth as I was to the others, but the Spirits from that Earth were brought to me . . . They were of an entirely different genius from the Spirits of our Earth.

10587. In their Earth they converse together by an internal way. Ex. 1070S, Further Ex.

10589. They were from a star, which is their sun, very distant from our sun, below and near the milky way, and which is among the lesser stars.

10709. When conversing, they advance to the ninth use. Ex.

10710. On account of such a way of thinking and speaking, the Spirits of that Earth cannot be together with the Spirits of our Earth . . .

10734. On a Fifth Earth in the starry heaven. Gen. art. 10751. 10768. U.157. D.4832.

— I was brought to another Earth, which is . . . outside of our solar world . . .

10736. At last I heard Spirits speaking near some Earth, which was afterwards seen by me.

10737. They conceive God to be visible under a human form . . .

10738. They said that from God, whom they called the Lord, some have been sent to teach them about Him . . .

10751. Concerning their own Earth, the Spirits said, that when leave is granted them, they appear to the inhabitants of their own Earth, and speak with them . . . The inhabitants know no otherwise than that they are men of their own Earth, and they first perceive that they are not so, when they are suddenly taken away from their eyes.

10752. The preacher who was with me . . . was let into that Earth, so that he not only saw it, but also spoke with its inhabitants . . . I in like manner saw the inhabitants, and also some things upon that Earth.

10754. There appeared a woman with a very beautiful face, clothed in a simple garment . . . There afterwards appeared a number of other women, feeding sheep and lambs . . . They said that the sheep go whither they point with their rods. The sheep were large, with woolly, broad, and lengthened tails. The faces of the women were full and beautiful. Men were also seen, their faces were of a flesh colour . . . but, instead of being bearded, the lower part of the face was black ; and the nose was rather the colour of snow than of flesh.

10755. The preacher then came to those who were naked. These were seen walking together two and two, the husband and the wife, being girded with a covering about the loins, and also with a covering round the head. . . They perceived in the preacher's speech what was not celestial, but earthly . . . and could hear from the very tone whether it was from the heart, or only from the lips . . .

10756. They said that they have a perception whether there is a marriage principle with those of their own nation who are naked . . .

10757. Those who are naked but with inflamed bodies, and those who are black . . . dwell elsewhere in the same Earth.

10758. I spoke with the Spirits of that Earth about . . . the resurrection . . .

10768. There were some other things seen in that Earth itself, which was effected by communication with the Angels who were there and appeared as men of the Earth ; for, when they are presented as men . . . they see the objects there with their eyes just as the inhabitants do . . .

10769. Their dwellings were seen. Des.

— Little children were also seen there . . .

10770. There also appeared fields whitish from the ripening harvest . . . The grain was like Chinese wheat. Loaves of bread were shown made from these seeds . . . There also appeared grassy plains with flowers, and trees with fruits like pomegranates ; likewise shrubs, not vines, bearing berries from which they prepare wine.

Angels said from a comparison made with such things in our Earth, which they saw in my memory.

10783. On a Sixth Earth in the starry heaven. Gen. art. 10808. 10833. U.168. D.5313a.

—¹. I was again led to another Earth, which was in the universe outside of our solar world . . . In company with me were a number of Spirits and Angels from our Earth.

10784. See HEAVEN at this ref.

10785. When the angelic Spirits who were from that Earth came into view (they said that they were afraid of being disturbed by the idea of three gods). It was then perceived that those who had disturbed them were from our Earth; which was also perceived from the fact, that from our Earth are those who wander about in the other life, from the delight of travelling which they have contracted in the world; for on other Earths there are no such travellings . . .

10786. They were from the Lord's Celestial Kingdom . . .

—². We told them that there are few on our Earth who have interior perception . . .

10808. These Spirits . . . were from the north part of their Earth. I was afterwards conducted to others, who were from the west part. (These examined me by telling me that I was nothing but evil.)

10809^e. It then pleased the Lord to present Himself among them, and to reduce into order those things which had been disturbed by the evil there. 10810, Des. 10811.

10813. The Spirits of that Earth also said, that . . . those monkish Spirits were very desirous for them to live in a community, and not separate . . . as they had dwelt in the world . . . They have no idea of what it is to have dominion . . . One of them, who accompanied us back, when I showed him the city in which I dwelt, at the first view of it fled away, and was seen no more.

10834. The sun of that Earth, which to us is a star, appears to the inhabitants of the size of a human head, and of a flaming colour. Their year is two hundred days; and a day is equal to nine hours of our time . . . They have perpetual spring and summer; and therefore the fields are always green, and the trees bear fruit continually. The reason is, that their year is so short . . .

10835. Their houses are low, of wood . . . In front dwelt the husband and wife, next to them the children, and behind, the male and female servants. They feed on fruits and vegetables, and drink milk with water; and they have the milk from cows which are woolly, like sheep.

10836. They walk quite naked, which is no shame to them; and their intercourse is with those who are within their families.

10837. The betrothals and marriages in that Earth. Des.

—^e. A husband has never more than one wife . . .

H. 103. That there is a correspondence of Heaven with all things of the Earth. Gen.art.

192. I have been brought by the Lord! . . . to Earths in the universe, and this as to the spirit, my body remaining in the same place.

309. The man of this Earth is such that he cannot receive immediate revelation, and thereby be instructed concerning truths Divine, like the inhabitants of other Earths . . . for the former are more in worldly things . . . and internal ones are those which receive revelation . . .

310². Without such a Word, there would be no light of Heaven with the men of our Earth, thus neither would there be the conjunction of Heaven with them.

321^e. There are in the universe many Earths, and all full of inhabitants; hardly any there know that the Lord assumed the Human on our Earth; yet, as they adore the Divine under a human form, they are accepted and led by the Lord.

345^e. Still, the state of the men who grow up on Earth may become equally perfect . . .

417. All the planets visible to the eye in our solar world are Earths; moreover, there are innumerable ones in the universe, and all full of inhabitants.

U. Title. On the Earths in our Solar World, which are called Planets: and on the Earths in the Starry Heaven: and on their Inhabitants; also on the Spirits and Angels there; from Things Heard and Seen.

1. It has been granted me to speak with Spirits and Angels, not only with those near our own Earth, but also with those who are near other Earths. As I had a desire to know whether there are other Earths, and what is their character and that of their inhabitants, it has been granted by the Lord to speak and have intercourse with the Spirits and Angels who are from other Earths; with some for a day, with some for a week, and with some for months; and to be instructed by them concerning the Earths from which and near which they were . . .

—². All Spirits and Angels . . . are near their own Earth, and know what there is there.

47. No Earth ever appears to anyone in the Spiritual World, but only the Spirits and Angels who are from it.

135. In the Spiritual World, Earths are not distant from each other as they are in the natural world; but only apparently so, according to the states of life of the inhabitants and Spirits there.

J. 10². It is indeed possible for the human race to perish upon one Earth, which takes place when it completely separates itself from the Divine . . . But although, by separation from the Divine, the human race were to perish upon one Earth, which, however, is provided against by the Lord, still it would remain upon others; for there are Earths in the universe to some hundreds of thousands.

C. J. 76^e. The things contained in (the heavenly doctrine) are being orally dictated . . . to the inhabitants of that continent (that is, Africa).

W. 5². Germinations in the Earth . . .

101². The Earth in the Spiritual World does not revolve . . .

—^e. In place of the motion of the Earth, there is change of the state of the Angels.

158². Each and all things of the Earth, which . . . are called earths-terrae, are dead.

171. From the Earth . . . there are continually raised forms of uses in their order up to man, who, as to his body, is also thence.

314. The stems clothed with layers of bark, represent the Earth clothed with earths-terris.

338. What is meant by evil uses on the Earth.

M. 79^e. Newcomers from the Earth enter this region daily . . .

T. 29. The Earth rotates about its axis . . .

—, Spaces were introduced into the natural world by the Earth being conglomerated into a globe, and in-filled with matters . . .

70^e. As the Earth turns itself away from its sun . . .

D. 739. Written truths are delivered by the Lord to the men of this Earth, because they live in a perverted state . . .

1435. The Spirits of our Earth are inquisitive, and desire to know many things, especially earthly and material ones; but they are reduced by the Lord to know the interior things corresponding thereto, and to long for them; wherefore the Spirits of our Earth are more gross and dull, and are polluted with corporeal cupidities, which must be vastated before they can apprehend interior things; and they must be utterly vastated of them, so as to hold them in aversion, and as nothing, before they can be delighted with interior things. Therefore, the Spirits of our Earth constitute the provinces of the exterior members of the body.

1444. In Heaven, a few represent as if they were all; and any globe consisting of a few, is as though it were a broad Earth . . .

1513. The transit from one Earth to another is easy . . .

of the body, they serve as ministries for the instruction of others, who have not such Knowledges from revelation; wherefore the Lord has loved our Earth above others; for, in order that order may be perfect, celestial and spiritual truths must be rooted in natural truths.

1532. The men of this Earth will judge variously about these things . . .

—^e. It is the fallacies of the senses which seduce the inhabitants of this Earth, who belong to the bodily senses, or who scarcely extend their ideas beyond the senses of the body.

1558a. The inhabitants of the Earth Venus and of our Earth, are such as constitute corporeal things and their appetites; thus who constitute earthly and the lower worldly things; and thus who rule the external senses.

1558. That certain ones in Heaven call this Earth a fetid pit.

—, When the discourse was about a plurality of Earths, and that the inhabitants of this Earth are far too few to constitute the universal Kingdom of the Lord, I perceived that this earth is called a stagnant pit.

2578. As there is such an interior sphere of the natural man, it follows that these are the last times, and that the human race will perish on this Earth, unless they repent, and repent [to] faith in the Lord.

2896². Larger than the whole Earth.

3044. The Spirits of Jupiter say of the Spirits of our Earth, that worse cannot exist. Ex.

3164. These are they who relate to the internal general sense in man . . . It was given me to consider whether the like exist on our Earth, and as it were to conclude that the like do exist, but such as are in an obscure general idea . . . I perceive that in Heaven they want themselves to be from a different Earth . . .

3244^o. There is nothing without an end, thus nothing without the human race, so as to be a bond between earthly and natural, and heavenly things; for otherwise never could there exist an Earth, whether planet, moon, or satellite.

3250. It is insinuated, that if the inhabitants of Mars were not to remain in their own state . . . there would succeed others from a new Earth, who would be like them; for when one perishes, another succeeds . . .

3328. On the Spirits of our Earth, against the Spirits of Saturn.

—, The Spirits of our Earth relate to the external sense, and at this day are as it were almost separated from all reason.

3330^o. When the Spirits of Saturn (who relate to reason) did not appear, there at once arose tranquillity among the Spirits of our Earth, because then they do not know what the Spiritual is.

3400. On the Spirits of another Earth.

3408. It is now insinuated that there are many such, and that the inhabitants of our Earth are beginning to be such, as can speak about things of which they are not thinking, and be thinking about other things, so that men never know what they are thinking about other things.

3411. I wanted to know whence such come ; for I did not want them to be from our Earth. He said, that he was from the stars ; others said, that he was a cannibal . . .

3412. Wherefore, this Earth has now gone out so much into externals, and so far into cruel thoughts inwardly, that externals are by themselves, and speak so well that no one perceives that internals think cruel things ; wherefore its last times are at hand, unless they repent.

3420. That there exists no fixed star, which has not its own Earths about it.

3476. They who are corporeal, as they especially are on this Earth . . .

—². They who were the furthest off from me, as in . . . other Earths, compared with the distance of which, all the distances of our Earth vanish, were yet present in a moment . . .

3664. (These Spirits rule) the Sirens, because they are above them : whether they are from this Earth I do not know, or whether they are from those in other Earths through whom Spirits have spoken . . .

3893^o. Wherefore, if the Lord did not protect, I should perish at any moment, and so would all the men of this Earth.

4376. I perceived that the Lord willed to be born on this Earth, because if He had not been born, this Earth would have perished ; and because the human race of this Earth chiefly corresponds to corporeal things, which could not be united with interior things in any other way than by the Lord becoming a Man. This was the case after the correspondence began to perish, which had existed so long as there was anything of a Celestial Church, that is, of love to the Lord.

4663¹⁰. I have been told by the Angels, that the Lord willed to be born on our Earth, where Divine truths are delivered by writings . . . for thus the Angels are not only perfected through the Word, but also perceive the bliss and happiness of their lives ; for when the Word is being read in this Earth, it passes by correspondences into Heaven. . . Thus, also, can the truths of faith be communicated to the Angels of other Earths.

—¹¹. The sciences and arts exist in this Earth more than in other Earths . . .

4773. In waking vision, I was conducted through several regions . . . within the tract where are the Spirits from this Earth . . .

4780. Hence it was evident, that the heavenly doctrine was at last being propagated from these nations to the Spirits who are from various regions of this Earth, and afterwards to the Spirits of other Earths.

4781. See DOCTRINE at this ref.

4782. They call the Spirits from this Earth knowledges ; for they correspond to knowledges which are not abstracted from material things, but are conjoined with them. Thus, in this Earth, it is known from knowledge that God is a Man ; but elsewhere not from knowledge. The difference is like that between the Angels who know from perception and communication, and those who know from themselves.

5151. That Heaven cannot be opened to the inhabitants of this Earth.

— The reason is, that the inhabitants of this Earth are in ultimate things, into which they have thrust themselves down by sovereignties, by the loves of being pre-eminent to others, and of gaining all things of the world ; whence most of them are sensuous, and in ultimate things ; therefore Heaven is closed, and if it were opened they would at once perish, because the Spirits from this Earth, being of such a character, breathe nothing but the murder of others ; and the man whose interiors have been opened, is led at the pleasure of Spirits of this character, so that they murder themselves, and also profane holy things ; for as soon as they turn themselves to the world, they deny and even deride heavenly things . . . wherefore the Angels with whom they are as to their interiors are injured, and so is Heaven ; wherefore the Angels turn themselves away, and thus the internal man is closed. If, therefore, it were to be opened to them after Heaven has estranged itself, or after the Angels have removed themselves, the infernals would lead them, not only to wicked things, but also to suicide . . .

E. 726^r. If the Lord had not come into the world, the Heavens of this Earth would have been translated elsewhere, and all mankind on this Earth would have perished in eternal death.

Ath. 115. In the Spiritual World, spaces are states . . . From this I have been able to be present near the Earths in our solar world, and near Earths outside that world, while my body, and my spirit too, remained in their own place.

J. (Post.) 126^o. All the circuits taken together are not extended into a plane, but into a globe, like the Earth ; wherefore, when I was conducted to the Gentiles . . . I descended by a declivity.

236. Such are carried to the boundaries of the Spiritual World of our Earth, where there appears a lake smoking with fire.

De Conj. 96. They who have a communion of wives . . . are cast into a gulf which is outside of the Spiritual World of this Earth.

Earths in the Universe. (The Work.)

417^o. Why this Work was revealed to me.

Earth, or Land. Terra.

See LOWER EARTH, NEW EARTH, and under CANAAN.

A. 16. 'In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth' (Gen. i. 1) . . . 'The earth,' before regeneration = the external man.

[A.] 17. Man before regeneration is called 'the earth void and empty' (ver. 2).

25. 'To spread out the earth, etc.' (is said) of the regeneration of man. III.

27. See DRY-*aridus-at these refs. 2S.

28^e. 'The earth'=a receptacle, in Zech. xii. 1.

29. When 'the earth' (ver. 11, 12) is thus prepared, that is, man . . .

—². That 'the earth' is man, He Himself has designed to say (Matt. xiii. 19-24).

55². When the understanding is coupled to the will, or faith to love, man is called 'a married land' (Is. xii. 4).

82. 'The heavens and the earth were finished' (Gen. ii. 1)=that the man had now become spiritual, so as to be 'the sixth day;' 'heaven'=his internal man; and 'earth,' his external man. III.

89. 'These are the nativities of the heavens and of the earth, when He created them, in the day in which Jehovah God made the earth and the heavens' (ver. 4). 'The nativities of the heavens and of the earth'=the formations of the celestial man.

—². 'Ground,' and 'field' are here mentioned; in what precedes only 'the earth;' and in this verse 'heaven' is first set before 'earth,' and then 'earth' before 'heaven;' the reason is, that 'the earth'=the external man, and 'heaven,' the internal man with the spiritual man, in whom reformation begins from 'the earth' or external man. But here, where the celestial man is treated of, it begins from the internal man, or from 'heaven.'

90. 'The earth' (ver. 5, 6)=the external man while he was spiritual; 'the ground,' and 'the field,'=the external man when he becomes celestial.

477². 'The earth' (Jer. iv. 23)=the external man.

566. In the Word, 'ground' is accurately distinguished from 'earth' . . . By 'earth' passim, is meant not the Church, or not anything of the Church; as in Gen. i., 'the earth' is mentioned because there was not as yet a Church, or a regenerate man . . . III.

—⁴. 'Ground' (Ezek. xx. 41)=internal worship; and it is called 'land' while there is no internal worship.

—'. 'Land' (Mal. iii. 12)=the containant, thus it manifestly=man; who is called 'land' when 'ground'=the Church, or doctrine.

567. The lands and regions which are outside, are not tracts of the Church, or 'faces of the ground.'

evident, that 'the evil of man in the earth'=the evil of his Natural, which is of the will.

620. 'The earth' (ver. 11)=that nation before treated of.

—'. 'Earth' is a word which is very frequently used in the Word, and by it is signified the land where the Lord's true Church is, as the Land of Canaan. 'The land,' also=where the Church is not, as 'the land of Egypt,' and that of the nations; thus it is taken for the nation which dwells there; and as it is taken for the nation, it is also taken for every such thing as is there. 'The land,' is said from celestial love, as 'the Land of Canaan;' and 'the land of the nations,' from filthy loves; but 'the ground,' from faith, which is inseminated; for, as has been shown, the land is the containant of the ground, and the ground is the containant of the field; as love is the containant of faith, and faith is the containant of the Knowledges of faith, which are inseminated. Here, 'the earth' is taken for the nation in which everything of celestial love and of the Church has perished.

626. 'God saw the earth' (ver. 12)=that God knew man.

632. 'The earth was filled with violence' (ver. 13)=that there was no longer the will of good.

636. 'I will destroy them with the earth' (id.)=that the human race would perish with the Church, as is evident from the fact that it is here said 'with the earth;' for, in a wide sense, 'the earth'=love, thus the celestial things of the Church. Here, as there was no love, nor anything celestial remaining, it=the love of self, and that which is contrary to the Celestial of the Church. Nevertheless, there was a man of the Church, because he had the doctrinal things of faith; for, as has been said, the land is the containant of the ground, and the ground is the containant of the field; as love is the containant of faith, and faith is the containant of the Knowledges of faith.

662. 'Everything that is in the earth shall expire' (ver. 17)=those who were of that Church, and had become such. The earth does not=the universal world of lands, but only those who were of the Church. . . That 'the earth'=the tract where the Church is, thus those who are there. III.

—^c. 'The earth' is distinguished from 'the ground,' as the man of the Church is from the Church itself; or as love and faith. 'The waters dried up from upon the earth' (Gen. viii. 13)=that falsities did not then appear. . . 'The earth,' here, =man's will, which is nothing but cupidity, wherefore it is said, that 'the waters were dried up from upon the earth.' (See GROUND, here.)

909^e. They likened man's body to earth, or ground; nay, they called it earth or ground, as here (ver. 17), where by 'the earth' nothing else is signified than the external man.

913. 'That they may spread themselves in the earth' (id.)=the operation of the internal man into the external. 'Upon the earth'=with the external man. —^c.

931. 'All the days of the earth' (ver. 22)=all time . . . so long as there is an earth, or an inhabitant upon the Earth-tellure . . .

—². They are mistaken in believing that the end of the earth will be the same as the Last Judgment . . . The earth will not then perish . . . but the Church; but then a New Church is always resuscitated by the Lord . . .

984. 'To replenish the earth' (Gen.lix.1)=with the external man.

1016. 'Be ye poured forth upon the earth, and be ye multiplied in it' (ver.7)=the increases of good and truth in the external man, which is 'the earth.' Ex.

1044. 'It shall be for a sign of a covenant between Me and the earth' (ver.13)=a sign of the Lord's presence in charity. 'The earth,' here, =the proprium of man. . . It is thus evident that 'the earth'=that which is not regenerated, and that which cannot be regenerated, which is the voluntary proprium of man. Ex.

1047. 'In beclouding Myself with a cloud upon the earth' (ver.14)=when on account of man's voluntary proprium the faith of charity does not appear.

—². That 'the earth'=man, consequently the Church, which is of man. Ill.

—³. The exterior things of the Church are here 'the earth,' and its interior things are 'the heavens.'

—⁵. As 'the earth'=the Church, it also=not the Church . . . as the lands of the different nations; in general, all the lands outside of the Land of Canaan. Therefore 'the land' is taken for the people and for the man who is outside of the Church; consequently, for the external man; for his will, for his proprium, and so on. Rarely in the Word is it taken for the universal world of lands, unless there is then signified the universal human race as to their state of the Church or of not the Church. And as the earth is the containant of the ground, which also=the Church; and as the ground is the containant of the field; it is a very significant word, because it involves many things. What it signifies is evident from the subject which is being treated of, and of which it is predicated.

1177. 'He was mighty in the earth' (Gen.x.8)=that such a religion prevailed in the Church. 'Earth'=the Church.

1215. 'According to their families, according to their languages, in their lands, in their nations' (ver.20)=according to the genius of each in general and in particular. 1251.

1216. 'In their lands'=in general relatively to their opinions.

1243. 'In his days the land was divided' (ver.25)=that at that time a new Church arose.

1258. 'From these were scattered the nations in the earth' (ver.32)=that thence came all the worships of the Church as to goods or evils.

1285. 'The whole earth was of one lip' (Gen.xi.1)=that everywhere there was one doctrine in general.

—^c. On earth as in Heaven . . .

1327. 'Jehovah confounded the lip of the whole earth' (ver.9)=the state of this Ancient Church. . . 'The face of the whole earth'=the state of the Church.

1411. 'Get thee out of thy land' (Gen.xii.1)=that corporeal and worldly things were to be receded from.

— The signification of 'land' is various, and is according to its application to the person or thing of which it is predicated . . . The reason it here=corporeal and worldly things, is that these are the things of the external man.

— In the proper sense, 'the earth' is the land itself, or the region, or the kingdom; it is also the inhabitant who is there; also the people itself and the nation itself which is in the land in question. Thus the word 'land' not only signifies in a wide sense the people or nation, but also in a narrow sense the inhabitant. When 'land' is predicated of the inhabitant, the signification is according to the matter of which there is predication; in the present case, of corporeal and worldly things; for the land of his nativity from which Abram went forth was idolatrous . . .

1413. 'To the Land which I will cause thee to see' (id.)=the spiritual and celestial things which were to be presented to view; as is evident from the signification . . . here of the Land of Canaan. 1447.

1460. 'There was a famine in the Land' (ver.10)=the penury of Knowledges which still prevailed with the Lord when a child.

1568. 'The land would not bear them to dwell together' (Gen.xiii.6)=that those things which belong to internal celestial things could not be together with those which are here signified by Lot.

1573. 'The Canaanite and the Perizzite were then dwelling in the Land' (ver.7)=evils and falsities in the external man.

1610. 'The land'=the Celestial of love.

1613. 'The land'=the heavenly Kingdom or the Church. 1614.

1662. Every nation, and every land=something determinate in general; and this in the proper and also in the opposite sense; but the general signification applies itself to the subject which is being treated of.

1675^b. Mountains and countries have and take their signification from their inhabitants . . . 4240.

[A.] 1733. 'Possessor of the heavens and earth' (Gen. xv. 19)=the conjunction of the internal man or Jehovah with the interior and exterior man.

1817. 'To give thee this Land to inherit it' (Gen. xv. 7)=the Kingdom of the Lord, of which He alone is Possessor. . . 'To inherit the Land' is here predicated of the Lord's Human essence; for, as to His Divine essence, He was the Possessor of the universe, and therefore of the heavenly Kingdom, from eternity.

1844. 'In a land which is not theirs' (ver. 13)=where the Church is as though it did not belong to those who are in charity and faith.

1880^o. Thus did there exist a communication of the earth with Heaven, and of Heaven with the earth.

1944. Causes man to look . . . not, like the brute animals, to the earth, in which he is only a sojourner.

— . In the internal sense, 'land'=various things; and what it signifies is evident from the series of things. It=the external man of the Church, when 'heaven'=the internal man. Refs. It also=the tract where the Church is. Refs. It=the Church itself, also, universally, the Lord's Kingdom in the heavens and on earth, from the fact that the Land of Canaan or the Holy Land represents it. Refs. . . 3023. 'Jehovah God of earth' (as distinguished from 'Jehovah God of heaven'), is Jehovah who is called the Son, thus His Human Essence; for this came forth from the former . . . Thus 'Jehovah God of earth'=the Divine which is in the things thence derived. Moreover, Jehovah is called . . . 'the God of earth' from the Divine which is on earth—in terris. . . The Divine on earth is that which is with man in his externals. Hence it is, that . . . the externals of man are his earth; for through them he is conjoined with men.

3026. 'Thou shalt go to my land and to my nativity' (Gen. xxiv. 4)=to the Divine celestial and spiritual things which the Lord acquired for Himself. 'Land'=the Celestial of love; and 'nativity,' the Spiritual of love; here, Divine celestial and spiritual things, because it treats of the Lord. 3030.

3036. 'The house of my father, and the land of my nativity' (ver. 7)=the Maternal or Hereditary from the mother, from which came the evil and falsity against which the Lord fought . . . 'The house of my father'=the maternal Hereditary as to evil; and 'the land of my nativity'=the maternal Hereditary as to falsities.

3304^c. The Word is the union of earth and Heaven.

3310. 'The earth,' in a good sense, = the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens and on earth—in terris, thus the Church, which is the Lord's Kingdom on earth—in terris; in like manner 'ground,' but in a more confined sense. Refs. The same is also signified by 'field,' but in a still more confined sense. Refs.

—². (In the parable of the sower) it treats of the four kinds of earth or ground in the field, that is, in the Church. . . 'The good earth' = the good of charity . . . for it is the good in man which receives the Word.

3368. 'Reside in the land which I say to thee' (Gen. xxvi.2) = that he should look to rational things, which, being enlightened by the Divine, are appearances of truth . . . For 'the land' which is here meant is Gerah where was Abimelech the king of the Philistines. . . For the signification of 'land' is various; and it = the quality of the nation of which it is predicated. In the proper sense, however, it = the Church; and as it = the Church, it = those things which are of the Church, that is, those things which with man make the Church; and therefore the doctrinal things of charity and faith; thus, also, rational things which, being enlightened by the Divine, are appearances of truth; for these are truths of the Church, thus its doctrinal things . . .

3374. 'I will give all these lands' (Gen. xxvi.3) = spiritual things; (for) 'lands,' here, = the rational things which, being enlightened by the Divine, are appearances of truth . . .

3379. 'And to thy seed will I give all these lands' (ver.4) = the Churches thence derived. . . 'Lands' = the rational things which, being enlightened by the Divine, are appearances of truth . . .

3384^c. 'Not to dwell in the land of Jehovah' (Hos. ix.3) = not to be in a state of the good of love, thus not in the Lord's Kingdom.

3435. 'We shall be fruitful in the land' (Gen. xxvi.22) = the increases of good thence. . . 'Land' = the Church, and whatever is of the Church.

3488^s. 'The earth' = the tract where the Church is; thus the Christian world.

3579². 'The earth shall give its produce' (Zech. viii.12) = that the Celestial of the Church or the good of charity will give truth.

3672. 'The land of thy sojournings' (Gen. xxviii.4) = the life of instructions. . . 'The land' = where the life is.

3705. 'The land on which thou liest, to thee will I give it' (ver.13) = the good in which he was, that it was from proprium. 'Land,' here, = the good of the Natural. Ex.

— . In the supreme sense, 'heaven' = the Lord as to the Divine Rational; and 'earth,' as to the Divine Natural. Here, therefore, 'the land on which thou liest' = the good of the Natural in which he was.

—². When 'heaven' is mentioned at the same time as 'earth,' 'heaven' = what is interior, and 'earth,' what is exterior: and as it has this signification, it also = the Lord's Kingdom on earth—in terris, thus the Church; and as it = this, it also = the man who is the Lord's Kingdom or who is the Church. Thus, with such a man, 'heaven' = that which is interior, and 'earth,' that which is exterior; or, what is the same thing, 'heaven' = the Rational, and 'earth,' the Natural . . . And as 'earth' = these things, it also = that which makes man the Kingdom of the Lord, namely, the good of love which is from the Divine. Hence it is evident how various is the signification of 'earth' in the Word.

3863⁹. 'To see the land of far distances' (Is. xxxiii.17) = the good of love.

3973. 'Send me . . . to my land' (Gen. xxx.25) = the longing of the Natural for a state of conjunction with the Divine of the Rational. . . For by 'my land' are meant Isaac his father and Rebekah his mother.

4094. 'To return to the land of thy nativity' (Gen. xxxi.13) = conjunction with the Divine good of truth.

4231³. 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, etc.' (Matt. xxiv.35) = that the internal and external things of the former Church shall perish, but the Word of the Lord will remain.

4240. 'The land of Seir' (Gen. xxxii.3) = celestial natural good.

4429. 'To see the daughters of the Land' (Gen. xxxiv.1) = to know the affections of truth and the Churches which are thence derived. . . 'The Land,' here the Land of Canaan, = the tract where the Church is, and consequently also the Church itself. Refs.

—^o. That 'the land' = the tract and the nation where the Church is, thus the Church. Refs.

4432. 'The prince of the Land' (ver.2) = what is primary among Churches.

4452. 'The Land shall be before you, dwell ye' (ver.10) = the Church, which is one.

4480. 'To dwell in the Land' (ver.21) = a likeness of life according to those things which are of the Church.

4482. 'A Land broad in spaces' (id.) = the extension of the truth which is of doctrine in the Church.

4516. 'The inhabitant of the Land' (ver.30) = those who were of the Ancient Church.

4535⁴. The reason 'Land' = the Church, is that the Land of Canaan was the Land where the Church existed from the most ancient times, and afterwards the representative of a Church among the descendants of Jacob. (5136.) When this land is said to be 'consummated' (Zeph. i.18), it is not the nation there which is meant, but the holy worship which is among the nation where the Church is.

4600. 'Land' (Gen. xxxv.22) = the Church as to good. (Refs.) Here, as to the good of truth. E.331². 365². —²⁸.

4816^e. Lands put on the representation of the nations and peoples who are there, according to their quality.

5013². Therefore the Spiritual with man and in the Church is compared to 'heaven,' and the Natural is compared to 'earth.'

5136. 'The universal earth,' as mentioned in the Word passim=the universal Church: and also 'the new heaven and the new earth'=a new Church internal and external. E.242¹⁰. 539⁹. 1003.

5279. See EGYPT, here. 5280.

5313³. By 'the earth' which is called His 'footstool,' is signified that which is below Heaven, thus the Church. Refs.

5362. 'The famine was in all lands' (Gen.xli.54)=desolation everywhere in the Natural. 5364. 5376.

5373. 'Every land came to Egypt'=that goods and truths were collated into the scientifics of the Church. . . The signification of 'land' is various. In general, it=the Church; consequently it=those things which are of the Church, namely, goods and truths; and as it=the Church, it also=the man of the Church; for he is a Church in particular; and as it=a man of the Church, it=that in him which is the man, namely, the mind: hence 'the land of Egypt' above, passim. =the natural mind. Here, however, the land of Egypt is not meant, but land in general, and therefore those things which are of the Church which are goods and truths. That the signification of 'land' is various. Refs. That in general it=the Church. Refs.

5433. 'The nakedness of the land' (Gen.xlii.9)=no truths of the Church.

5577. 'In the land' (Gen.xliii.1)=about those things which are of the Church. 'The land'=the Church; here, those things which are of the Church; for these constitute it.

— When 'Land' is mentioned in the Word, the Land of Canaan is understood; and when this is understood, it means the Church; for when land is mentioned, they who are in the Spiritual World do not abide in the idea of land, but in the idea of the nation which is there; nor in the idea of that nation, but in the idea of the quality of that nation; and therefore in the idea of the Church when 'Land' is mentioned and by it is meant the Land of Canaan.

5618. 'Take of the chanting of the Land in your vessels' (ver.11)=the choice things of the Church in the truths of faith.

5767. 'They caused to descend everyone his sack to the earth' (Gen.xliv.11)=that they brought those things which were in the Natural down to sensuous things. . . 'The earth,' when it is said that 'they caused to descend thereto'=what is ultimate and lowest, thus what is sensuous.

6015⁴. 'They shall inundate the earth and its fulness' (Jer.xlvii.2)=the whole Church.

6297. 'The earth and its fulness'=everything, both true and good, which is of the Church.

—³. 'The earth' (Ps.xxiv.1; lxxxix.11)=the Church in special; 'the world-orbis-', the Church in a universal sense.

6304. 'He shall bring you back to the Land of your fathers' (Gen.xlviii.1)=to the state of both the Ancient Churches.

6385⁵. 'Lands'=Churches.

6392. 'And the Land that it is pleasant' (Gen.xlix.15) =that those who are in the Lord's Kingdom are in happiness. For 'the Land of Canaan,' which is meant by 'Land' in the Word, represented the Lord's Kingdom; and this because the Church was there since the most ancient times. Refs.

6649. 'And the land was filled with them' (Ex.i.7)=even to what is full of the Church. 'The land of Goshen,' where the Sons of Israel were at this time, =the Church. . .

—³. 'The earth' which will be 'moved' (Amos viii.8; ix.5)=the Church. 8906³.

6723. 'The land shadowing with wings' (Is.xviii.1)=the Church which darkens itself by reasonings from scientifics.

6767². 'The land which shall mourn' (Jer.xii.4)=the Church. 8902².

6773. 'He dwelt in the land of Midian' (Ex.ii.15)=life among those who are in simple good. . . 'The land' is mentioned, because it=the Church where they are.

6796. 'He said, I am a sojourner in a strange land' (Ex.ii.22)=that he was instructed in truths in a Church not his own.

6856. 'To a Land good and broad' (Ex.iii.8)=to Heaven, where are the good of charity and the truth of faith. 'Land,' here the Land of Canaan, =the Lord's Kingdom, thus Heaven; 'a good Land'=the good of charity there; and 'a broad Land'=the truth of faith there.

6948. 'Cast it on the earth' (Ex.iv.3)=the influx of the power of the Lord's Divine Natural into the Sensuous. . . 'The earth'=the external of man; here, his Sensuous and Corporeal, which are the extremes.

7108. 'Lo, the people of the land now are many' (Ex.v.5)=the multitude of those who are of the Spiritual Church.

7189. 'He shall drive them out of his land' (Ex.vi.1) =that he will put them to flight from his neighbourhood. . . For the land where those of the Spiritual Church are being infested by falsities is near the Hells which are infesting them, and is called the Lower Earth.

7278. By 'the land' is signified the nation itself; and by the nation in the internal sense, that which is of the nation; here, infestation.

7418. 'Smite the dust of the land' (Ex.viii.16)=those things which are damned in the natural mind. (See DUST, here.)

7444. 'I Jehovah am in the midst of the land' (ver.22) =that the Lord is the only God of the Church. 7544. 7550. 7598.

7547. 'Thou shalt be cut off from the land' (Ex.ix.15)=no longer any communication through those things which are of the Church.

7575. 'To walk on the earth' (ver.23)=to possess the natural mind even to its lowest things.

7687. 'It covered the surface of the earth' (Ex.x.15) =the ultimates of the natural mind. 7688. 7689.

7908. 'In a sojourner and in one who is born in the land' (Ex.xii.20)=those who are of the Church, whether not born therein or whether born therein. 8011.

8043³. In a general sense, 'the heavens and the earth'=the internal and the external Church; and in particular, the internal and the external of the Church with a man who has been regenerated.

8056. 'A Land flowing with milk and honey' (Ex.xiii.5)=where there are gladness and joy.

8133. 'They are entangled in the land' (Ex.xiv.3)=that they are in confusion as to those things which are of the Church. . . 'The land'=those things which are of the Church.

8306. 'The earth swallowed them' (Ex.xv.12)=damnation and Hell. . . The place where those are who are in falsities from evil appears as a desert land, which is called damned land; beneath it are cast those who are cast into Hell.

8538. 'Until they come to a Land inhabited' (Ex.xvi.35)=before they would come to Heaven. 'Land,' here the Land of Canaan,=the Lord's Kingdom, thus Heaven.

8764. Man's Rational is his Heaven; and his Natural is relatively his earth; for the Rational constitutes the internal man, and the Natural the external.

8769. 'All the earth is Mine' (Ex.xix.5)=that the Lord has all Power in Heaven and on earth. (For) in the internal sense, 'earth'=the Lord's Kingdom on earth, and also the Lord's Kingdom in Heaven.

8871. 'Which are in the heavens above, and which are in the earth beneath' (Ex.xx.)=which are in spiritual light and which are in natural light. Ex.

8872. 'And which are in the waters under the earth'=which are in the corporeal Sensuous. Ex.

8891. 'In six days Jehovah made the heaven, and the earth, and the sea' (Ex.xx.)=the regeneration and vivification of those things which are in the internal and the external man. . . 'Heaven and earth'=the Church or the Lord's Kingdom in man; 'heaven' in the internal, and 'earth' in the external. . . thus it is the regenerate man. . .

8898. 'That thy days may be prolonged upon the Land' (Ex.xx.)=the consequent state of life in Heaven. . . 'The Land,' here the Land of Canaan, because it is said to the Sons of Israel=the Lord's Kingdom.

8902⁸. 'The earth' (Is.xxvi.21)=the old Church.

9166⁷. 'To swear by the earth'=by the Church, thus by the Divine truth therein; for as Heaven is the Lord from the Divine truth which proceeds from Him, so also is the Church. . . And as 'the earth'=the Church, in which the Divine of the Lord is below Heaven, it is said, 'Thou shalt not swear by the earth, because it is God's footstool. . .

9198⁵. 'The earth'=the external Church. Refs. 9408⁵, Refs. 9420², 9596⁵, E.294¹². —¹⁴. 304², 400³. —³. 1057³.

9258². (Seed growing in the earth.) —³.

9272. 'Six years shalt thou sow the land' (Ex.xxiii.10)=the first state when the man of the Church is being instructed in the truths and goods of faith. . . 'To sow the land'=when the truths and goods of faith are being inseminated. Ex.

9274. 'In the seventh year to respite the land,' or not to sow it (ver.11)=the second state, when the man of the Church is in good. Des. —³.

9325. The reason 'the Land'=the Church, is that there is understood the Land of Canaan, where the Church was, and where it had been from the most ancient times. Refs. And in the Spiritual World, when 'land' is mentioned, there is not perceived the land, but the quality of the nation there as to its religion. Hence when 'Land' is mentioned in the Word, and thereby is meant the Land of Canaan, the Church is perceived. . .

—⁹. 'Barren land' (2 Kings ii.19)=the good of the Church not alive.

9334. 'Lest the land be desolate' (ver.29)=a deficiency, and but little of spiritual life. 'The land'=the Church in general and also in particular. The Church in particular is the man who is a Church. . . That 'land'=the Church in general. Ref. And that 'land'=the Church in particular, or a regenerated man. Refs. This man is also called 'land' in Malachi: 'Ye shall be a well-pleasing land' (iii.12).

9338. 'Until thou inherit the Land' (Ex.xxiii.30)=while in good, thus regenerated. . . 'The Land,' here the Land of Canaan=the Lord's Kingdom, thus Heaven. (Refs.) Thus 'to inherit the land'=to receive Heaven as an heir. . .

[A.] 9345. 'They shall not dwell in thy land' (ver. 33) = that evils must not be together with the goods of the Church. . . 'Land' = the Church as to good, thus also the good of the Church. 10137⁴.

9400. The conjunction of the Lord as to the Divine Human with Heaven and earth. Sig.

9596⁵. 'Earth' in general = the Lord's Kingdom and the Church.

9815⁶. 'The land of gracefulness' (Dan. viii. 9) = the Lord's Church where is Divine truth or the Word.

10038⁶. Hence it is that by 'the Land of Canaan' and simply by 'land' in the Word, is signified Heaven and the Church.

10044⁶. 'The earth which he hath founded' (Is. xlviii. 13) = the ultimate.

10373. 'In six days Jehovah made the heaven and the earth' (Ex. xxxi. 17) = the state of combat and labour when the Church is being established. . . 'Heaven and earth' = the Church. . . By 'heaven' is meant its internal, and by 'earth' its external.

10446. 'All this Land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed' (Ex. xxxii. 13) = from whom are Heaven and the Church. . . As the Church is signified by 'the Land,' so also is Heaven; for the Church is the Lord's Heaven on earth-in terris; and the Church also acts as one with Heaven; for the one comes forth and subsists from the other.

10526. 'To go up into the land' (Ex. xxxiii. 1) = to institute the Church.

10570⁴. 'Ground' = the Church . . . from the reception of seeds . . . But the Church is called 'the land' from the people who are there with whom the Church is. (See GROUND here.)

—5. 'Earth' (Jer. xiv. 4) = where the Church is; and 'ground,' the Church itself.

10634. 'Which were not created in all the earth, and in all nations' (Ex. xxxiv. 10) = that such a Divine thing never was in the world where there is a Church or where there is not a Church. . . 'In all the earth' = wherever the Church is.

10640. 'Lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitant of the land upon which thou comest' (Ex. xxxiv. 12) = that we are not to cleave to any religion in which there is evil. . . 'Land' = the Church, and whatever is of the Church, thus also what is religious.

10676. 'Neither shall anyone covet thy land' (Ex. xxxiv. 24) = aversion for such things as are of the Church felt by those who are in evils and the falsities of evil when they see and perceive goods and the truths of good. . . 'The land' = the Church, and whatever is of the Church.

H. 5. 'He has all Power in heaven and in earth' (Matt. xxviii. 18). It is said 'in heaven and in earth,' because He who rules Heaven rules the earth too; for the one depends upon the other. (See RULE here.)

104⁶. Correspondences in the mineral kingdom are . . . earths of various kinds, etc.

N. 5. When 'land' is mentioned in the Word without the name of any region joined thereto, the Land of

W. 101⁶. According to the reception of the heat and light by the Angels, is the appearance of the lands on which they dwell.

158². All earths are dead; but still they are girded round with spiritual things which proceed from the Sun . . . (otherwise) the earths could not have been stirred into activity, and could not have produced the forms of uses, which are plants, or the forms of life, which are animals; nor could they have supplied those matters through which man comes forth and subsists.

160. As the lowest things of nature which form the earths are dead . . . there are spaces in nature . . .

173. In the Spiritual World there are . . . earths, etc., as in the natural world; but the former are spiritual, whereas the latter are natural. Gen.art.

178. See ATMOSPHERE at these refs. 302. 303. 305. 310. 311. 316⁴.

305. That in the substances and matters of which earths consist there is nothing of the Divine in itself; but still they are from the Divine in itself. Gen.art.

306. The origin of earths from the spiritual Sun by means of atmospheres, cannot be described otherwise by words flowing from natural ideas, but it can by words from spiritual ideas, because these are apart from space, (but therefore) do not fall into any words of natural language. . . It is sufficient therefore, for the origin of earths to be perceived in some manner naturally.

307. That all uses, as ends of creation, are in forms, and that they get forms from substances and matters such as exist in earths. Gen.art.

310. That in earths there is an endeavour to produce uses in forms, or forms of uses. Gen.art. That there is this endeavour in earths, is evident from their origin; for the substances and matters of which earths consist are the ends and terminations of the atmospheres which proceed as uses from the spiritual Sun; and since the substances and matters of which earths consist are from this origin, and their congregates are held together in connection by the circumpressure of the atmospheres, it follows that they have a perpetual endeavour to produce forms of uses. The very quality of being able to produce they derive from their origin, which is, that they are the ultimates of the atmospheres, with which therefore they are in agreement. It is said that this endeavour and this quality are in earths, but it is meant that they are with those substances and matters of which earths consist, whether they are in earths, or exhaled from earths in the atmospheres. . . That there is such an endeavour and such a quality in the substances and matters of earths, is evident from the fact that seeds of every kind, when opened to their immost by means of heat, are impregnated by the most subtle substances—which can only be from a spiritual origin—and thereby they have the power of conjoining themselves with use . . . This endeavour is afterwards continuous from the earths through the root even to the ultimates, and from the ultimates to the primes . . . That there is an endeavour still more interior [in the substances and matters of which earths consist], which is the endeavour to produce uses for the animal kingdom through vegetable growths, also follows; for animals of every kind are nourished thereby. And that there is an immost endeavour in them, which is the endeavour to perform use to mankind, also follows. These things follow from the fact:—1. That they are ultimates . . . 2. That there are degrees of both kinds in the greatest and in the least things of all things: in like manner in this endeavour. 3. That all uses are produced by the Lord from ultimates, wherefore in ultimates there must be an endeavour towards them.

312. The first production from these earths, while they were still recent and in their simplicity, was the production of seeds; the first endeavour in them could not be anything else.

313. The first forms are the substances and matters of which earths consist, in their leasts; the second forms are congregates of these, which are of infinite variety; the third forms are from plants fallen to dust, and from the remains of animals, and from the continual evaporations and exhalations of these, which add themselves to earths, and make their soil. These forms of the three degrees of the mineral kingdom . . . produce uses in forms . . .

314. The stems clothed with layers of bark represent the Earth clothed with earths, from which the creation and formation of all uses comes forth.

—e. Hence it is evident, that the progression of the creation of the universe was from its Prime . . . to ultimates, which are earths; and from these through uses to its Prime or the Lord.

316. The womb or egg is like the earth; the state before birth is like the state of a seed in the earth while it is taking root . . .

335^e. (Evil uses) in the mineral kingdom, consist of all poisonous earths.

339^e. All evil uses appear in Hell; as . . . all kinds of poison, both in plants and earths.

51². 'The land which will be put for a waste' (Is. xiii. 9)=the Church, on the vastation of which the Knowledges of good and truth in the Word do not appear.

186. 'To try them that dwell upon the earth' (Rev. iii. 10)=the day of the Last Judgment. (=visitation upon those who were in the former Heaven. E. 215.)

194. 'Land,' in special 'the Land of Canaan,'=the Church in the whole complex. Hence the inheritances into which the Land of Canaan was divided=various things of the Church; and the cities in them, doctrinal things.

260. 'No one was able in heaven, nor upon the earth, neither under the earth' (Rev. v. 3)=that no one was able in the higher Heavens or in the lower Heavens . . . John was in the spirit, in which state no other earth appeared to him than the earth of the Spiritual World; for there are earths there as in the natural world . . . The higher Heavens appear upon the mountains and hills; the lower Heavens upon the earth beneath; and the ultimate Heavens as it were under the earths. For the Heavens are expanses, one above another, and each expanse is like an earth under the feet of those who are there. The highest expanse is like the top of a mountain; the second expanse is under it, but extending itself more widely round about at the sides; and the lowest expanse more widely still: and as the latter is under the former, they who are under the earth are there. The three Heavens also so appear to the Angels who are in the higher Heavens, because to them there appear two below them. In the same way therefore did they appear to John, because he was with them . . . He who does not know anything about the Spiritual World and the earths there, cannot know at all what is meant by 'under the earth,' or by 'the lower things of the earth' . . . Who does not see that the earths of the Spiritual World are here meant? for no man dwells under the earth in the natural world. 290. (=the three Heavens. E. 304.)

272. 'Into all the earth' (Rev. v. 6)=into the universal world where there is religion. (=Heaven and the Church. E. 318.)

284. 'To reign upon the earth' (ver. 10)=to be in the Lord's Kingdom, and there one with Himself. 285. E. 333.

285^d. The reason 'earth'=the Church, is that 'land' often means the Land of Canaan; and in it was the Church; the heavenly Canaan is nothing else: also, because, when 'land' is mentioned, the Angels . . . do not think of a land, but of the human race which is upon it and its spiritual state.

—e. 'Earth' has also an opposite sense, and therein =damnation; for, when there is no Church with man, there is damnation. III.

[R.] 343. 'Holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree' (Rev.vii.1)=a nearer and consequently a stronger influx into lower things, where the good were conjoined with the evil, withheld and restrained by the Lord.

— 'The earth, and the sea'=all the lower things. (=the universal Spiritual World. E.420.)

395. 'To cast the censer into the earth' (Rev.viii.5)=influx into the lower parts. E.497, Ex. below at this ref.

398. When both 'the earth' and 'the sea' are mentioned in the Revelation, there is everywhere meant the universal Church; by 'the earth,' the Church from those who are in its internals; and by 'the sea,' the Church from those who are in its externals; for the Church is internal and external, internal with the clergy, and external with the laity. . . Ill.

400. 'They were cast into the earth' (Rev.viii.7)=with those who were in the internals of the Church and in faith alone.

416. 'Woe to the inhabitants of the earth' (ver.13)=lamentation over the damned state of those in the Church who in doctrine and life have confirmed themselves in faith separated from charity. . . 'The inhabitants of the earth'=those in the Church where the Word is and thereby the Lord is known. E.531.

420. 'I saw a star fallen from heaven into the earth' (Rev.ix.1)=spiritual Divine truth flowing in out of Heaven into the Church with them, exploring and manifesting. . . By 'the earth' is here signified the Church with those who are in its internals. (=to perish. E.535².)

425. 'A scorpion of the earth' (ver.3)=what is pervasive in the things of the Church.

470. 'He set his right foot upon the sea, and his left upon the earth' (Rev.x.2)=that the Lord has the universal Church under His auspices and dominion, both those therein who are in its externals and those who are in its internals. E.600².

475. 'Who created heaven and the things that are therein, and the earth and the things that are therein, and the sea and the things that are therein' (ver.6)=Who vivifies all who are in Heaven, and who are in the Church, and each and all things with them. . . By 'heaven' is meant the Heaven where the Angels are; by 'the earth and the sea' is signified the Church; by 'the earth,' those who are in its internals, and by 'the sea,' those who are in its externals. 'The things that are therein'=each and all things with them. 630. E.609.

498. 'To smite the earth with every plague' (Rev.xi.6)=to bring ruin upon the Church by evils and falsities of every kind.

507. 'They that dwell upon the earth' (ver.10)=those who are in the Church; here, those who are in the Church where there is faith alone: 'the earth'=the Church in which they are. E.660. 662.

528. 'To destroy them that destroy the earth' (ver.18)=the casting into Hell of those who have destroyed the Church. E.697, Ill.

541. 'To drag down from heaven, and to cast into the earth' (Rev.xii.4)=to estrange from the Church and to utterly destroy. E.720.

551^e. When 'world-orbis,' and 'earth' are mentioned together, 'world'=the Church as to good; and 'earth,' the Church as to truth. Ill. E.741⁵, Ill. 1003.

558. 'Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea, for the devil is come down to you having great anger' (ver.12)=lamentation over those who are in the internals and externals of the doctrine of faith alone, and thence in evils of life, because their like have been cast down from Heaven into the World of Spirits; and are consequently in conjunction with the men of the Earth, whom, from hatred against the New Church, they stir up to persevere in their falsities and in the evils thence derived. 560. (=lamentation over those who are merely natural and sensuous. E.752, Ex.)

564. 'The earth helped the woman; and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth' (ver.16)=that the reasonings from falsities in abundance which the dragonists put forth, fall to nothing before the truths rationally understood, which the Michaels, of whom the New Church consists, bring forward. 'The earth which helped the woman'=the New Church as to doctrine; and as it treats of the reasonings from falsities which the dragonists put forth, it is truths from the Word by which the earth, that is, the Church, helps the woman. 'To open her mouth'=to bring forward these truths. (=that those of the Church which is not in truths rendered assistance, and did not receive the cunning reasonings of those who were in faith separated. E.764.)

676. 'Go and pour out the vials of the anger of God into the earth' (Rev.xvii.1) = an influx into the Church of the Reformed.

677. 'And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth' (ver.2) = into those who are in the interior things of the Church of the Reformed . . .

801. 'All that are slain upon the earth' (Rev.xviii.24) = all in the Christian Church who have perished through falsities . . .

858. 'The four corners of the earth' (Rev.xx.8) = the universal Spiritual World; here, those who are in the universal World of Spirits.

861. 'To go up upon the breadth of the earth' (ver.9) = to spurn every truth of the Church . . .

865. 'From Whose face the heaven and the earth fled' (ver.11) = the universal Judgment upon all the first Heavens . . . which Heavens with their earth were completely dissipated. 877.

585. In (plants) there are not two sexes . . . earth alone is the common mother, thus as the woman; for it receives the seeds of all plants, opens them, carries them as it were in the womb, and then nourishes them, and then brings them forth, that is, ushers them into the day, and afterwards clothes and sustains them. But when he acquires the life of evil, he sinks down more and more below the plane of the earth there; first to the feet, then to the loins, then to the breast, and at last to the head; and then he is in Hell . . .

5742. On the destruction of the old Heaven and earth. Gen.art.

5746. Thus perished the old Heaven and the old earth . . .

5838. Very many were cast . . . beneath the earths . . .

E. 29°. As 'the earth' = the Church, it also = what is religious, and therefore what is idolatrous, as 'the land of Egypt,' 'the land of the Philistines,' 'the land of Chaldea' and 'of Babel,' and many other 'lands.'

193¹⁰. 'To put the talents in the earth' and 'in a napkin' = merely in the natural memory of man.

222°. 'To be written in the earth' (Jer.xvii.13) = to be condemned on account of the state of the life ; for 'earth' = what is damned.

[E. 222]. 'The Lord wrote with His finger in the earth' (John viii.)=that they were equally condemned on account of adulteries . . .

228°. 'The kings of the earth' (Rev.xxi.24)=all who are in truths from good. 294°.

—³. 'Heaven'=the internal Church, and also the Church with the Angels ; and 'earth'=the external Church, and also the Church with men.

—³². 'To restore the earth' (Is.xlix.8)=to restore the Church ; for . . . the Lord did not restore the earth to the Jewish people ; but He instituted the Church among the gentiles.

—⁶². In the opposite sense, 'the earth'=the Church devastated, which takes place when . . . there is only evil and falsity ; and as these damn a man, 'earth' in this sense, = damnation. III.

333°. 'The earth'=the Lord's Church in the Heavens and on earth—in terris.

342°. 'Those who are in heaven, on the earth, and under the earth'=those who are in the ultimates of Heaven. The higher ones there, are 'those who are in heaven ;' the lower ones are 'those who are in the earth, and under the earth ;' and the lowest are 'those who are in the sea.' For there are three Heavens, and each Heaven is distinguished into three degrees . . . and these three degrees of the ultimate Heaven are meant by 'those who are in heaven, those who are on the earth, and those who are in the sea.'

—⁴. Upon the mountains (in the Spiritual World) dwell the Angels who are in the Third Heaven ; upon the hills, those who are in the Second Heaven ; and upon the earth, and under the earth, and in the seas, those who are in the First Heaven.

—¹¹. 'The earth' (Ps.cxxxv.6)=those who are beneath.

365⁴¹. 'Violence shall no more be heard in thy land' (Is.lx.18) . . . 'Land'=the internal spiritual man, because there is the Church which in general is signified by 'land.'

374°. 'Land'=the Church as to the nation there. 388°.

—⁹. 'To harrow the earth' (Is.xxviii.24) = to deposit in the memory.

375²⁰. 'Field'=the Church, from the reception of truth ; and 'land'=the Church, from the perception of good.

400². 'The heavens and the earth' (Hag.ii.6)=all the interior things of the Church ; 'the sea, and the dry land,' all its exterior things.

401²¹. 'The earth which He stretched out above the waters' (Ps.cxxxvi.6)=the external of the Church, which in one word is called the natural man.

—²⁴. 'The land (of Joseph)' (Deut.xxxiii.13)=that Spiritual Kingdom ; likewise the Church thence derived.

405°. 'The earth'=the Church ; for when the idea is abstracted from the places and from the nations and peoples upon the earth, it is the idea of the Church there or among them.

406°. 'The earth'=those who are of the Church ; and abstractedly, the Church itself as to intelligence from spiritual truths.

413°. 'The land,' and 'the earth' (Is.xiii.9,13) means the earth which is in the Spiritual World ; for there are earths there equally as in our Earth, and during the Last Judgment, they are made a waste, and are shaken from their place . . . Yet by 'the earth' in the spiritual sense is everywhere meant the Church ; for, in the Spiritual World, the face of the earth is like the state of the Church with those who dwell upon the earth there ; wherefore, when the Church perishes, the earth perishes too ; for they make one ; and then in the place of the former earth, there comes forth a new one ; but these changes are unknown to us in our earths. 417, Des.

418°. The reason it is said 'the winds of the earth' (Rev.vii.1) is that by 'the earth' is meant every earth in the Spiritual World ; but in the spiritual sense by 'the earth' is signified Heaven and the Church. 420. 425. 426.

453¹¹. 'The earth'=the Church, and also Heaven.

497. In the Spiritual World there are earths, also hills and mountains, which are all inhabited. Upon the hills and mountains dwell the Angels, and there are the Heavens ; and upon the earths, which are beneath the hills and mountains, dwell those who were to be separated from each other ; wherefore, 'earths' here = the lower parts. . . For beneath upon the earths, there were Societies in which the good and the evil were together . . . 505.

505. In the Spiritual World there are mountains, hills, and valleys ; above the mountains and hills there, are the Angelic Heavens ; and in the valleys below are those who are not yet taken up into Heaven ; upon these, therefore, at this time, were the evil mingled with the good ; wherefore these valleys . . . are here meant by 'the earth.' Therefore, by being 'cast into the earth' is signified out of the Heavens towards the lower parts. But when the mountains, hills, and valleys all taken together are called 'the earth,' then 'the earth'=the Church there.

606°. Specifically, 'the sea' and 'the earth,' upon which he set his feet (Rev.x.)=the Ultimate Heaven and the Church on earth—in terris. Ex.

622°. Through the earths there, there exhale falsities of evil from the Hells. 632°.

654⁵⁶. 'They shall not dwell in the land of Jehovah' (Hos.ix.3)=that they have not the life of good such as there is in Heaven.

68¹². 'They shall sit upon the earth' (Ezek.xxvi.16) = that they will be in things falsified, thus in falsities . . . because under the earths in the Spiritual World are the Hells, from which evils and falsities are continually exhaling.

69¹³. 'The earth' (Zech.viii.12) = the Church as to the natural affection of truth.

— Moreover, there are lands in the Spiritual World . . . which in external appearance are quite similar ; for there are plains, valleys, mountains, hills ; there are rivers and seas ; and there are also fields, meadows, forests, gardens, paradises ; and these lands are beautiful to look upon entirely according to the state of the Church with those who dwell upon them ; and they are also changed according to the changes of the Church with them. In a word, there is a full correspondence of the lands there with the reception of the good of love and of the truth of faith with the inhabitants. Hence, too, it is, that 'land' in the Word = the Church ; for the quality of the land is according to the quality of the Church there ; the correspondence makes it so. In that World, the land itself makes one with the Church, as a correspondent does with its own thing to which it corresponds ; just as an effect does with its effecting cause.

—⁶. In the Spiritual World, when the Church with them is devastated, the earth completely changes its face ; the paradises, flowerbeds, greeneries, and everything else with which those earths had before blossomed, vanish, and in their stead there comes forth what is disagreeable, as sands, rocks, plains full of briers and thorns, and the like, which correspond to the falsities and evils that have devastated the Church. Its devastation as to the good of love and of charity is signified by 'making the earth empty' (Is.xxiv.1) ; and its desolation as to the truths of doctrine and of faith, is signified by 'voiding and despoiling it ;' and the change itself, by 'overturning its faces.'

— As the earths there are now inundated, now violently shaken ; and also here and there yawu and open towards Hell . . . which is according to the way and the degree in which falsities and evils are loved, and consequently the goods and truths of the Church are falsified and denied, it is said, that 'the cataracts from on high are opened,' that 'the foundations of the earth are shaken,' that 'the earth is broken, and staggers like a drunken man ;' for these things actually take place in the Spiritual World, when the states of the Church are there changed into what is contrary.

VOL. II.

A. 98. 'Jehovah God planted a garden in Eden, on the east' (Gen. ii. 8). . . 'The east'=the Lord. Thus 'a garden in Eden on the east'=the intelligence of the celestial man, which flows in through love from the Lord.

101. That the Lord is 'the east.' Ill. 109. 658.

—^e. They who dwelt in Syria were called 'the sons of the east.'

1290. 'When they journeyed from the east' (Gen.xi.2) = when they receded from charity.

1450. 'He removed thence into a mountain on the east of Bethel' (Gen.xii.8)=the fourth state of the Lord when a child, namely, the progression of the celestial things of love. 1451.

1451. 'The east'=Jehovah Himself as to love, Who is the east itself.

1453. 'Bethel on the sea, and Ai on the east' (id.)=that as yet He had an obscure state. . . 'Ai'=the Knowledges of worldly things . . . these are said to be 'on the east,' when they are in clearness; for 'the east,' relatively to the west=what is clear.

1593. 'Lot journeyed from the east' (Gen.xiii.11)=those things with the external man which recede from celestial love. 'The east'=the Lord, thus everything celestial. And as 'the east'=the Lord, it follows that 'the east,' here,=the Lord's internal man, which is Divine. Thus that the external man receded from the internal, is signified here by 'Lot journeyed from the east.'

1605. 'Towards the north, and towards the south, and towards the east, and towards the west' (Gen.xiii.14)=all whatever in the universe. . . 'The east'=those who were of yore, also celestial love.

2015⁷. 'The way of the kings from the rising of the sun' (Rev.xvi.12)=the truths of faith which are from the good of love.

2441⁷. By the sun, the Ancient Church understood the Lord, and the Divine Celestial of His love, wherefore they had the rite of praying towards the rising of the sun. 4288³. (Refs.) H.119⁹.

2468⁹. 'The sons of the east' (Is.xi.14)=those who, being in the Knowledges of good, are still not in charity.

3249. 'Eastward towards the land of the east' (Gen.xxv.6)=to the good of faith. . . The good of faith which is signified by 'the land of the east,' is nothing else than what is called in the Word charity towards the neighbour; and charity towards the neighbour is nothing but a life according to the Lord's precepts. That this is signified by 'the land of the east,' see 1250. Therefore, they who were in the Knowledges of the good of faith were called 'the sons of the east.' The land of the sons of the east was Aram, or Syria, which = the Knowledges of good. . . And as by the Syrians, or the sons of the east, are signified those who are in the Knowledges of good and truth, they, pre-eminently, were called 'wise ones;' as in the first book of Kings, where it is said of Solomon, 'The wisdom of Solomon was multiplied above the wisdom of all the sons of the east' (v.10); and in Matthew . . . 'There came wise ones from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is He who is born King of the Jews? We have seen His star in the east . . .' For in Syria there were the remains of the Ancient Church, wherefore there were still left there the Knowledges of good and truth; as may also be evident from Balaam . . . That he was of the sons of the east in Syria, is evident; for he said of himself . . . 'Balak the king of Moab hath brought me out of Syria, from the mountains of the east' (Num.xxiii.7). That it was Aram or Syria where were the sons of the east, may also be evident from the fact, that when Jacob went into Syria, he is said 'to have gone to the land of the sons of the east' (Gen.xxix.1). E.324¹⁰. 654²⁹.

3708. 'Thou shalt break forth to the sea and to the east' (Gen.xxviii.14)=the infinite extension of good; 'and to the north and to the south'=the infinite extension of truth; thus all states of good and truth. . . 'The east'=lucid and thus perfect good.

—⁴. 'To bring the seed from the east, and gather them from the west' (Is.xliii.5)=those who are in good.

—¹². 'Many shall come from the east, and even from the west' (Matt.viii.11)=those who are in the Knowledges and life of good, and who are in obscurity and ignorance; thus who are within the Church, and who are without it.

3762. '(Jacob) went to the land of the sons of the east' (Gen.xxix.1)=elevation to the truths of love. Ex.

—³. 'The east'=love.

— . That 'the sons of the east'=those who are in the Knowledges of truth and good, and therefore in the truths of love. Ill.

3900⁹. 'As the lightning goeth out from the east, and appeareth even unto the west' (Matt.xxiv.). . . In the supreme sense, 'the east'=the Lord; in the internal sense, the good of love, of charity, and of faith from the Lord. But 'the west,' in the internal sense, = that which sets or ceases to be; thus no acknowledgment of the Lord, nor of the good of love, of charity, and of faith. Thus (these words)=dissipation.

10189. 'The sides,' properly so called, (of the altar of incense)=good, because they look to the east and the west; and by the east is signified good in clearness, and by the west, good in obscurity.

—². Before the face (in Heaven) are they who are in the clear perception of good, thus they who are in the east; at the back are they who are in the obscure perception of good, thus they who are in the west; these who are in good constitute the Lord's Celestial Kingdom.

—³. The Angels have the Lord, who is the east itself, constantly before the face. It is the opposite with those who are in Hell . . .

—⁴. The Lord turns them to Himself, for He enters into them by the way of the east, and keeps them constantly in a determination towards Himself.

10235^e. The reason the brazen sea was placed from the right shoulder towards the east over against the south (1 Kings vii.39)=that it was towards the Lord; for the Lord is 'the east.'

H. 141. In the world . . . it is called the east where the sun rises in the equinoxes . . . But in Heaven it is called the east where the Lord appears as a Sun . . . Thus in Heaven all the quarters are determined from the east. The reason it is called the east where the Lord appears as a Sun, is that all the origin (or rising) of life is from Him as a Sun; and also, in proportion as the Angels receive light and heat, or love and intelligence, from Him, the Lord is said to arise with them. Hence, too, in the Word, the Lord is called 'the east.'

142. The other difference is, that with the Angels the east is always in front . . . For the whole Heaven turns itself to the Lord as to its common Centre . . . The interiors of the Angels are also actually turned forwards . . . 143, Ex. W. 105. 130. E. 422¹⁷.

—³. The dreadfulness of the Hells decreases . . . by degrees towards the east. To the east are they who have been haughty, and have not believed in the Divine, but still have not been in such hatred and revenge, nor in such deceit, as they who are in a greater depth in the western quarter. In the eastern quarter at this day there are no Hells, those which were there having been transferred to the western quarter in front.

J. 48. The Dutch were towards the east and the south. J.(Post.)2.

58⁴. In the east, dwelt those (of the Babylonians) who in the world had been in the highest degree of the delight of exercising command, and also in some natural lumen. They appeared there on mountains, but only in that quarter which looks to the north . . . D. 5233. 5346.

61. A vehement wind from the east . . .

—⁸. The Last Judgment upon (the Babylonians) in the eastern quarter. Des.

C. J. 42. In the eastern quarter (of London) dwell those who have led a life of charity . . .

48. In that Meditullium, the Dutch have received habitations in the east and the south.

119. That in the Spiritual World the east is where the Lord appears as a Sun; and that the rest of the quarters are thence derived. Gen.art.

120^e. Wherefore, the determination of the quarters in that World is not, as in the natural world, from the south, but it is from the east . . .

121. The Angels who are in a higher degree of love dwell in the east . . . Hence it is, that in the Word, by 'the east,' in the supreme sense, is meant the Lord; and in the relative sense, love to Him. 122.

123. As the Lord as a Sun is constantly in the east, the ancients . . . when engaged in prayer, turned their faces to the east; and that they might do the like in all worship, they also turned their temples thither. E.422¹⁷.

125. Those who are in love to the Lord from the Lord see Him directly; therefore they are in the east and the west . . .

R. 421³. As they confirm faith by excluding the works of charity, they . . . enter the cells nearer the east . . .

875. Two Angels . . . one from the southern part of Heaven, and the other from the eastern . . . The chariot in which the Angel from the east of Heaven was carried, shone like gold . . . He who came from the east of Heaven, appeared in a resplendent bright crimson garment . . . In the eastern Heaven are they who are in love from the Lord . . .

901. 'On the east three gates' . . . There were three gates on the east . . . because love and affection for good in a higher degree is signified by the east, and thus more . . . The reason this is signified by the east . . . is that the Lord is the Sun of the Spiritual World; and in front of Him are the east and the west . . . Therefore they who are more in love to the Lord and thence in affection, dwell in the east . . .

906. The extension of Heaven from the east into the west, is meant by 'length' . . . and the Angels who dwell in the east and west of Heaven are in the good of love . . . It is similar with the Church on earth . . . they who are in the good of love (dwell with the Angels as to the interiors of their minds) in the east and west of Heaven.

M. 2. There appeared an Angel flying beneath the eastern Heaven . . .

—³. There were six companies, and a seventh from the east, which, from its superior light, was not visible to the rest.

4. The seventh company . . . was from the east of Heaven; they were Angels from the same Society as the Angel who had the trumpet . . .

75². We turned our faces to the east (in order to visit the Heavens of the Golden Age).

76. (On our way to the people of the Silver Age) we first came to a hill on the confines between the east and the south . . .

78⁸. Of the circuit (of conjugal love, we concluded) that it had passed from the east into the south . . . and of the progression, that it had decreased according to its circulation; namely, that in the east it was celestial . . .

81. From the east to the west . . . was heard a glorification . . . made by the Angels of the eastern and western Heavens. Des.

—³. I looked again into the eastern Heaven, and it lighted up on the right side, and the luminosity entered the southern expanse . . .

—⁴. After this, there was heard a general glorification from the east to the west of Heaven, and also from the south to the north . . .

103. I looked towards the east in the Spiritual World, and I saw four horsemen . . . Three of them betook themselves to . . . the south, west, and north; and in a brief space the fourth stationed himself in the east . . .

—². The chariots . . . drove rapidly to a spacious house in the confines of the east and the south . . .

—³. At the eastern wall, where no windows were seen, there was set a table overlaid with gold . . . See 114.

115. At some height towards the east, I saw an Angel holding a paper in his right hand . . .

132. I once spoke with two Angels, one from the eastern Heaven and the other from the southern . . .

—³. They spoke in order; first, they who sat to the north . . . and last they who sat to the east . . .

135. All requested that they who were from the east would unfold this arcanum, because it was a matter of deeper understanding; and because they who are from the east are in flaming light, that is, in the wisdom of love . . .

155a. In the east, beneath the Sun, there appeared as it were a golden shower . . .

231. There were three entrances (to the Tribunal) on the northern side, and three on western, but none on the southern and the eastern sides; a sign that their judgments were not those of justice . . .

261. In the northern quarter near the east . . . are the places of instruction . . . This tract is near the east, in order that all may be instructed through influx from the Lord; for the Lord is the east, because He is in the Sun there . . . After the times of instruction . . . they are sent forth first into the west; and those who do not remain there, into the south; and some through the south into the east . . .

—². They said, If we look towards the east to the Lord, we shall be enlightened and we shall know . . .

268. We were told, that we must approach them from the east, in order not to enter into the mist of their phantasy . . . Turned away from the east and the south, they were looking to the west and the north . . .

T. 160². On the side towards the east (of the World of Spirits) are the Societies which are in love to God and towards the neighbour.

476. While a little child, he is kept in the eastern quarter, towards the north there . . . afterwards, when he becomes his own master, according to the increase in such things as interiorly regard God and love towards the neighbour, he is carried into the south to the east . . . For in the east dwell those who are in good from the Lord; for the Sun is there, in the midst of which the Lord is.

D. 5483. In the eastern quarter towards the north are they who are in lies . . . thus who have no religion; towards the south there, they who have no doctrine . . .

5503. They who were brought to the east . . . were they who said that they loved God, but were devoid of knowledges . . .

5535a. To be turned to the east, is to be turned to Heaven. Some also turn themselves to the east when they think about it . . . but still this appears . . .

[D.] 5602. They have books there . . . in Latin, Hebrew, and the Oriental . . .

5623. The Sun which is the Lord is always in the east.

5675. To the east are they who are in Divine love, thus in internal light.

5713. At the eastern part of London in the other life there is a little State, where upright and good men dwell . . . They are to the east there because the east is the good of love and of charity. That great city is preserved so long as there is such a State at the east.

E. 21. When Africa is mentioned, they perceive the east.

131²⁰. 'The east of Eden' = where the presence of the Lord is in celestial love.

179⁹. The east is where the Lord appears as a Sun, thus where He is constantly in the morning . . .

239¹⁰. 'The east,' and 'the west' = where the good of love is clear or obscure.

340²². The fructification of good is signified by 'he shall spread himself towards the west and the east' (Gen. xxviii. 14).

386¹¹. 'The east' (Amos viii. 12) = where good is.

401²³. In Heaven, they who are in the good of love to the Lord dwell from the east to the west; they who dwell in the east are they who are in the clear good of love . . .

405²³. 'The east' (Zech. xiv. 4) = Divine good.

417². In the eastern quarter dwell those who are in the good of love to the Lord; in like manner in the western; but the former are in the clear good of love, because in the interior good of love . . . 422³.

422. 'The rising of the sun,' or the east, = the Lord's Divine love. . . Where the Lord appears as a Sun, there in Heaven is the east . . . All the quarters are determined from the Sun which is the Lord; and where the Sun is, there is the east . . . In the quarter of the east dwell the Angels who are in love to the Lord, because they are under the Lord's nearest auspices; for the Lord flows into them proximately and directly from Divine love; hence it is that 'the rising of the sun,' or 'the east' = the Lord's Divine love.

—³. The heat there, which is spiritual heat or the good of love, inflows directly from the east into the west, and decreases according to the reception by the Angels. . . Whereas the light, which is spiritual light or Divine truth, also inflows directly from the east into the west, and also flows both ways into the sides; but with this difference, that the Divine truth which inflows from the east into the west in its essence is the good of love . . . Therefore in the Word . . . 'the east' = the good of love in clearness. E. 724²⁰.

—⁴. There are also quarters in the Spiritual World which differ from the above by thirty degrees, and which are under the auspices of the Lord as a Moon . . . In the eastern and western quarters there, dwell those who are in the good of charity towards the neighbour.

—⁵. That those who are in the good of love will be brought and gathered, is meant by 'I will bring thy seed from the east, and I will gather thee from the west' (Is. xliiii. 5).

—⁶. In many places it is only said 'from the east and the west' . . . and thereby are meant all who are in the good of love to the Lord and in the good of charity towards the neighbour. These quarters involve the other two, because all who are in good are also in truths . . . The latter are therefore understood when 'the east and the west' are mentioned. III.

—⁸. That 'the east' = the Lord as to the good of love, and, consequently, with those who receive, (it =) the good of love to the Lord. III.

—¹⁶. 'The eastern sea' (Zech. xiv. 8) = the ultimate end towards the east in the Spiritual World, where, before the Lord's Advent, there was no reception of Divine truth . . .

—¹⁷. 'Moses, Aaron and his sons, and the tribe of Judah' represented the Lord as to the Divine good and the Divine truth proceeding from the Divine love; hence their camp was 'towards the east' (Num. iii. 38).

—¹⁸. As the Lord is 'the east,' it is said 'as the lightning goeth forth from the east and appeareth even to the west, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be' (Matt. xxiv. 27).

— 'The rising of the sun,' when predicated of men, = the good of love proceeding from the Lord as a Sun received by them. III.

—²⁰. As the Lord is 'the east,' the star appeared to those who were from the east. . . And as the Orientals were in these Knowledges, they were called 'the sons of the east.' That they who were so called were from Arabia, is evident from Jer. xlviii. 28. . . That Job was from the sons of the east, is evident from Job i. 3.

—²¹. In the opposite sense, 'the east' = the love of self, because this love is opposite to love to the Lord; as in Ezek. viii. 16; Is. ii. 6.

431¹². The tribes of Judah, Issachar, and Zebulon, which encamped to the east . . . = the good of love to the Lord, the truth of that good, and the marriage of good and truth. . . Those also who dwell in the eastern quarter of Heaven, are all in the good of love to the Lord, in truths from that good, and thence in the heavenly marriage.

448⁷. 'The mountains of the east' = the Most Ancient Church, which was in love to the Lord. This Church is described by 'the mountains of the east,' because 'a mountain' = love, and 'the east,' the Lord.

600²¹. The brazen sea was placed towards the east, over against the south, because Divine truth purifying proceeds from the Lord's Divine love.

629⁷. Divine truth proceeding from the Lord is signified by 'the waters going forth from under the threshold of the house towards the east' . . . 'The east' = love to the Lord; because the east in Heaven is where the Lord appears as a Sun.

638¹⁶. The Mount of Olives was on the east of Jerusalem; and Jerusalem = the Church as to doctrine; and the whole Church and all the truth of doctrine receives light from the Lord in the east; and the east in Heaven is where the Lord appears as a Sun; and as the sun = Divine love, the east, and the Mount of Olives which was on the east of Jerusalem = the same.

— The Angels of the Third Heaven dwell in the east upon mountains, where olive groves flourish more than any other trees.

644²⁰. 'Rising' (Luke xii. 54) = the Advent of the Lord.

652². They who are in the clear affection of the good of love, dwell in the eastern quarter of the city, and also walk there. J. (Post.) 12.

971. The Celestial Kingdom consists of the Heavens and the Angels there who are in Divine good, and these Heavens are in the eastern and the western quarter.

J. (Post.) 15. The Dutch appeared in the corner towards the east and the south; to the east, because they love a naked religion without images . . . To the south, because they excel in understanding.

85^e. Without a plurality of wives, the Orientals would have blazed up into adulteries, and would thus have perished.

268. In the eastern quarter (of London), which stretches far out of the city . . . there dwell the best of them: all there worship the Lord.

East Wind. Eurus.

See EAST WIND—Ventus Orientalis.

A. 5215. 'Parched with the east wind' (Gen. xli. 23) = full of cupidities . . . In the genuine sense, 'the east wind,' and 'the east' = love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour; hence in the opposite sense, they = the love of self and the love of the world, and therefore concupiscences and cupidities.

—³. That 'the east wind,' or 'a wind of the east' = those things which are of cupidities and thence of phantasies. Ill.

—^e. Here, 'wind' = phantasies; and 'east wind,' cupidities.

7679^e. 'To pursue the east wind' (Hos. xii. 1) = to multiply vastation.

— A state of vastation and temptation is also called 'the day of the east wind' (Is. xxvii. 8).

S. 79⁵. 'To pursue the east wind, etc.' = to falsify truths.

E. 419¹⁸. 'The wind' (Hos. xii.) = falsity; and 'the east wind' = falsity drying up and dissipating truths. 654⁵⁸.

483¹⁵. 'The east wind from the wilderness' (Hos. xiii. 15) = its destruction from the fallacies which are from external sensuous things.

730¹². 'An east wind, the wind of Jehovah' (Hos. xiii. 15) = the ardour of cupidity from the love and conceit of destroying truths.

East Wind. Ventus Orientalis.

See EAST WIND, above; and also under WIND.

A. 842. When these Spirits, or phantasies, are dispersed, it is said in the Word to be done . . . by 'the east wind.'

—². The cohorts of Spirits who disperse (these Societies) are called 'the east wind.' 2128^e. D. 2122, Des. 2972. 3414. D. Min. 4814.

—⁴. That 'the wind,' and in special 'the east wind' = nothing else than the dispersion of falsities and evils; or, what is the same thing, of evil Spirits and Genii; and afterwards their disposition into order. Ill. D. 2124.

5215³. See EAST WIND—Eurus, here.

7679. 'Jehovah brought an east wind' (Ex. x. 13) = a means of destruction. The reason 'an east wind' has this signification, is that it was dry and tempestuous; and because it dried up the productions of that land, and by its violence shivered trees and ships at sea; therefore by it as by a means the effect of Divine power is described. Moreover, 'the east' = the good of love and of charity . . . which in its origin is most gentle . . . But when it descends into the Hells, it becomes ineludent and stormy . . . It is from this, too, that a wind from the east, or an east wind = a means of destruction. Ill.

—². From these passages it is evident, that 'an east wind' = a means of destruction, because it was dry and tempestuous. Hence, also, it = a means of devastation. Ill.

7682. 'And the east wind brought the locust' (id.) = dense falsity through the means of destruction with those who were infesting.

8201. 'Jehovah caused the sea to depart by a strong east wind' (Ex. xiv. 21) = a means of the dispersion of falsity. . . 'An east wind' = a means of destruction; here, of the destruction of falsity, thus of its dispersion.

J. 61. There then came a vehement wind from the east, which laid bare, shook, and overturned all things from their foundations . . . D. 5296.

—⁶. An east wind proceeded from the south through the west into the north, and laid bare all that region . . . The east wind proceeded, blowing to and fro; it overthrew, it destroyed, and blew them away. D. 5324. 5325. 5329.

R. 343⁴. Nothing but a strong influx is signified by 'an east wind.' Ill.

926³. Forthwith there came an east wind, and carried away everything that was there, and also dried up the swamp, and thus laid bare the stone under which lay the Word.

D. 2121. On the east wind.

2125. This is represented in the Word by 'an east wind' . . . as that it produced the locusts in Egypt, and dried up the Red Sea . . . for unless the evil consociations of Spirits are dissipated, they cannot bear anyone who is a son of Israel, but infest him . . .

E. 401³⁶. 'A desiccating east wind' (Jonah iv.8)=the falsity thence.

419². When the Divine influx is directed upon the evil who are to be cast back, in the lower parts of the Spiritual World there comes forth a wind that blows hard, like a storm; this wind is what is called in the Word 'the east wind,' ———²².

———²⁵. Those winds which are from the south, disperse truths with those who are in falsities, and those which are from the east disperse goods with those who are in evils.

———²⁶. Hence it is evident what effect is produced by the wind coming from the east, which is called 'the east wind,' namely, that with the evil it disperses all goods and truths which they have presented in an external form before the world . . . hence it is that withering and drying up are ascribed to this wind. Withering is predicated where there is no good, and drying up where there is no truth. Ill.

———²⁷. That the east wind also destroys all things where the evil are; their lands, their habitations, their treasures . . . is because in the Spiritual World all these things are correspondences . . .

514⁸. 'The east wind' (Ps.xlviii.7)=devastation and desolation . . .

538¹⁰. 'The east wind' (Ezek.xxvii.26)=an influx from Heaven.

3596². After the eating there followed the blessing of him who had made the savoury meat and brought it (Gen.xxvii.33). The reason is evident from an internal understanding of the rituals of the Ancient Church; for, with them, eating signified appropriation and conjunction, and conjunction with him with whom they had eaten, or of whose bread they had eaten . . . The eatings—comestiones—of the sanctified things in the Jewish Church represented nothing else . . .

3734. 'If He will give me bread to eat' (Gen.xxviii.20)=even to conjunction with Divine good. . . 'To eat'=to be communicated, appropriated, and conjoined.

4171. See COURSE at this ref.

4303. 'The Sons of Israel eat not the sinew of what is put out . . .' (Gen.xxxii.32)=that those things are not appropriated in which are falsities. 'To eat'=to be conjoined and appropriated.

4334⁴. 'Eating and drinking' (Matt.xxiv.38)=their state as to the appropriation of evil and falsity . . .

5078. Everything that serves for eating, or that is eaten . . . is predicated of good, and thus relates to the voluntary part.

5149. 'The bird did eat them out of the basket . . .' (Gen.xl.17)=that the falsity from evil consumed it. . . 'To eat'=to consume; for the term here used for 'to eat' in the Original Language denotes to consume. 5157.

5395. Have delight . . . only in eating, drinking . . .

6791. 'That he may eat bread' (Ex.ii.20)=confirmation in good . . . because 'to eat,' here, means feasting . . . and feasts were held among the Ancients within the Church for the sake of conjunction and of confirmation in good.

7326^e. The profanation of truth was signified by the eating of blood . . .

7810^e. A prohibition to eat anything but bread.

9391⁵. 'To eat lambs of the flock' (Amos vi.4)=to learn and appropriate to themselves the goods of innocence which are of the internal man; and 'to eat calves out of the midst of the fatted ones'=to learn and appropriate to themselves the goods of innocence which are of the external man. E.279⁴.

9393^e. 'To eat and drink (the Lord's flesh and blood),' in Heaven=to appropriate and conjoin.

10415. 'The people sat to eat and drink' (Ex.xxxii.6) =the appropriation of them. 'To eat'=the appropriation of evil; and 'to drink,' the appropriation of falsity.

10686. 'He did not eat bread, and he did not drink water' (Ex.xxxiv.28)=meanwhile no appropriation of the good of love and of the truth of faith. . . 'To eat'=the conjunction and appropriation of good; and 'to drink,' the reception and appropriation of truth.

H. 358. A man may eat and drink delicately, provided he does not make his life to consist therein. D.5794.

W. 331. Uses created for the nourishment of the body comprise all things of the vegetable kingdom which are for eating and drinking; as fruits, berries, seeds, pulse, and herbs; also all things of the animal kingdom which are eaten; as oxen, cows, bullocks, deer, sheep, kids, goats, lambs, and the milk of these; also fowls and fish of many kinds.

P. 313². 'Eating of the tree of knowledge'=the appropriation of good and truth as not from the Lord . . . but as from man.

R. 89. 'I will give to eat of the tree of life' (Rev.ii.7)

=the appropriation of the good of love and of charity from the Lord. . . The reason 'to eat'=to appropriate, is that as when natural food is eaten it is appropriated to the life of man's body, so when spiritual food is received it is appropriated to the life of his soul. E.109.

120. 'I will give him to eat of the hidden manna' (ver.17)=wisdom, and in that case the appropriation of the good of celestial love in works, and thus the conjunction of the Lord with those who work. E.146.

3858^e. It is utterly forbidden that the function of eating and the taste should be taken possession of by any Spirit.

4295. I thought in the street about eating, or of what I should eat . . . and I perceived that the Angels thought of nothing of the kind, but of Knowledges and knowledge, and that thence there came forth into my thought, together with those in the World of Spirits, the thought of eating. I spoke to them about it, and was informed that it was so . . .

6095. When the Africans are in a longing for truths, they go and seek foods; and that this is innate with them is evident from their little children, who frequently say to their nurses that they want to eat; and when food is given them, they clearly see whether it agrees, and this from correspondence; and after they have eaten they again ask to eat; from which it is evident that it is spiritual hunger which is the cause of this.

D. Min. 4733. They had been devoted solely to pleasure, chiefly that of eating . . .

E. 304¹⁴. 'To eat and drink'=to be instructed and to be appropriated.

[E.] 750¹⁶. 'Be not solicitous . . . as to what ye shall eat' . . . 'To eat' = to perceive good intellectually and thus spiritually.

A. 715⁶. (Animals) which are useful for life; as that they can be eaten.

1002. 'Not to eat' (Gen.ix.4) = not to commingle.

— . Regarded in itself, to eat the flesh of animals is a profane kind of thing; for in the most ancient time they never ate the flesh of any beast or bird; but only seeds, especially bread made from wheat; and also the fruits of trees, vegetables, and milk and its products, as butter. To slay animals and eat their flesh, would have been wickedness to them, and in like manner that of wild animals . . . But in process of time, when man began to become . . . more ferocious than the wild beasts, they first began to slay animals and eat their flesh. And as man was of such a character, it was permitted, and is permitted also at this day; and so far as he does it from conscience it is allowable . . . Wherefore also at this day no one is condemned from the fact that he eats flesh.

1003. Hence it is now evident, that 'not to eat the flesh in its soul, the blood' = not to commingle profane things with holy ones.

2177⁵. That Aaron and his sons should eat up the residue, represented what is reciprocal of man, and appropriation, thus conjunction through love and charity; wherefore it was commanded that they should eat it in the holy place . . . 2187.

T. 727. The eatings of the Sons of Israel from the sacrifices . . . signified nothing else than unanimity in the worship of Jehovah.

D. 397. A vision . . . concerning those who have been given to eatings . . . At dinner time an Angel spoke to me, saying that I should not indulge the stomach too much at table. While he was with me, there clearly appeared to me as it were a vapour exuding from the pores of the body . . . which sank down to the ground . . . where the collected vapour was turned into various little worms, which being gathered under the table, blazed up in a moment with a noise. Seeing a fiery light therein, and hearing the noise, I thought that thus all the little worms which could be generated from an immoderate appetite were east out from my body, thus were burnt, and that I was purified from them. Hence it may be inferred, what luxuries and the like things carry in their bosom.

Eber. Eber.

A. 470. Names never signify persons up to Eber.

737. Up to Heber, numbers, ages, and names signify nothing else but things.

1020. It is made up history up to Eber. 1403.

1137. On a certain Church which came forth in Syria, instituted by Eber, and which is to be called the Second Ancient Church. 1281. 1285.

—^c. By the names in this chapter, except Heber and his descendants, are meant so many nations . . . which constituted the Ancient Church.

1218. Here, it treats of Eber . . .

1219. It treats of Eber, by whom is meant this new Ancient Church.

1220. That by Eber is signified a new Church, which is to be called the Second Ancient Church, is evident from what follows, where it treats specifically of Eber, here named Eber because that new Church was from him. How the case was with Eber will be told in what follows.

1238. By 'Eber' is signified a nation the father of which was Eber; this being his name. Ex.

—². A certain external worship afterwards began in Syria, which in process of time spread far and wide, through many lands, especially through Canaan, and which was different from the worship of the Ancient Church. . . There thus arose as it were a new Church, which may therefore be called the Second Ancient Church. Of this, Eber was the first institutor; wherefore this Church was named from Eber. . . At that time, each nation recognized one father, from whom it was named ; thus the nation which recognized Eber as its father, was called the Hebrew nation.

1241. The first Ancient Church degenerated . . . and to prevent the destruction of the whole Church, the Lord permitted significative and representative worship to be restored somewhere ; and this was done by Eber. This worship chiefly consisted of external things ; the external things of the worship being high places, groves, pillars of stone, anointings ; besides priesthoods . . . and many other things which were called statutes. The internal things of the worship were doctrinal things from the antediluvian time, especially from those who were called 'Enoch' . . . From both these sources came the worship of this Church which was called Eber, but with additions and alterations, especially in the fact that sacrifices, which were unknown in the true Ancient Church, except with some of the descendants of Ham and of Canaan who were idolaters, began to be set before all other rituals. . . Hence it is evident what was the quality of this Second Ancient Church which was instituted by Eber and continued with his descendants who were called the Hebrew nation. 4449². 10603³.

1242. The two sons of Eber, called Peleg and Joktan = two worship, internal and external ; (for) by 'Eber' and the nation of Eber is signified this Second Ancient Church . . .

1245. 'Almolad, Shelaph, Hazarmaveth, Jerah, Hadoram, Uzel, Diklah, Obel, Abimael, Sheba, Ophir, Havilah, and Jobab' . . . were so many nations of the families of Eber, by whom are signified so many rituals.

1246. That these were so many nations of the families of Eber, may appear from the state in which men lived at that time. . . The sons of one father, when they multiplied, in like manner constituted houses, families, and nations. (As the tribes from the Sons of Jacob, which, however, all taken together were called Jacob.) So these nations were from Eber, and were called Hebrews.

1247. As Joktan the son of Eber=the external worship of this new Church . . . his sons must=the things belonging to external worship, which are rituals . . . But it is impossible to say what these kinds of rituals were . . . None of their names occur in the Word, except Sheba, Ophir, and Havilah, but these are not of this stock . . .

1283. Up to this point, except in what relates to Eber, the historicals were not true, but made up . . . 1403. 1540.

1327. The First Ancient Church, which was named from Noah ; the Second Ancient Church, which was named from Eber ; and the Third Ancient Church, which was named from Jacob . . .

1342. 'Shelah . . . begat Eber' (Gen.xi.14)=derivation (from that which is of knowledge). Eber was a nation which was called the Hebrew nation from Eber as its father, and by which is signified the worship of the Second Ancient Church in general. 1343. 1344.

4433². (The Israelites) received the worship instituted by Eber, which in externals was different from the worship of the Ancient Church. Refs.

P. 328². The Ancient Church was changed in a signal manner by Eber, from whom arose the Hebrew Church : in this Church worship by sacrifices was first instituted.

E. 391². Sacrifices were begun by Eber, and were afterwards continued among his descendants, who were called Hebrews. —³¹.

514¹⁸. 'They shall afflict Eber' (Num.xxiv.24). . . 'Eber,' whom they will afflict, =the externals of worship, such as there were among the sons of Jacob.

130. With him who wants to be wise from the world, his Eden is the love of self and of the world.

—². Such also are called 'the trees of Eden in Hell' (Ezek. xxxi. 16); where 'the trees of Eden' = the scientifics and Knowledges from the Word which they thus profane by means of reasonings.

305. 'To be cast out of the garden of Eden' (Gen. iii. 23) = to be deprived of all intelligence and wisdom.

—^e. As 'Eden' = love, it = wisdom, or the will of good.

330. To remove faith from its former seat, is signified by 'Cain dwelt towards the east of Eden' (Gen. iv. 16).

398. 'Towards the east of Eden' = near the intellectual mind, where before there reigned love; and also near the rational mind, where before there reigned charity. (For) 'Eden' = love.

—^e. As the understanding reigned in that mind instead of the will, or faith instead of love, it is said, that 'he dwelt towards the east of Eden.' . . .

R. 90⁴. 'Eden and the garden of God' = wisdom and intelligence.

M. 135. The garden in Eden = this wisdom.

T. 392². The human mind in which charity is conjoined with faith, and faith with charity . . . is meant by 'the garden of Eden.'

467. By 'the garden of Eden' in the Word is not meant any garden, but intelligence. . . That 'the garden of Eden'=intelligence and wisdom. Ill.

606^e. By 'the garden of Eden' is meant intelligence in spiritual things from the love of truth.

E. 131²⁰. 'The east of Eden' (Gen.iii.24)=where is the Lord's presence in celestial love.

326^f. 'To set the wilderness as Eden' (Is.li.3)=(that where there is no good there shall be good in abundance). 'Eden'=good in abundance.

654¹³. 'Eden in the garden of God' (Ezek.xxxi.)=the wisdom which is from the good of love.

—³⁷. 'The trees of Eden'=the Knowledges of good from the Word.

717⁹. 'Eden the garden of God' (Ezek.xxviii.)=intelligence through the Word from the Lord; for 'Eden,' like 'the east,'=the Lord.

721¹¹. That those who will be of that Church will acknowledge the Lord, and will receive love to Him and thence wisdom, is signified by 'He shall set the wilderness as Eden, and the solitude as the garden of Jehovah.' 'Eden'=love to the Lord; and 'the garden of Jehovah,' the wisdom thence derived.

730¹⁴. 'The garden of Eden' (Joel.ii.3)=the understanding of truth from good, and thence wisdom.

Edom. Edom, Edomus.

Edomite. Edomita.

A. 1675. 'Esau' or 'Edom,' in the genuine sense, =the Lord as to His Human essence.

2025². 'Who is this that cometh from Edom?' (Is.lxiii.) 'Edom'=the Lord's Human essence.

2468¹⁴. 'The tents of Edom, etc.' (Ps.lxxxiii.6)=those who are in the externals of doctrine and worship.

3300³. 'Edom' (Is.lxiii.)=the Divine good of the Lord's Divine Natural.

3302^e. 'Esau' and 'Edom' have almost the same signification, with this difference, that 'Edom'=the Divine Natural as to good to which are adjoined the doctrinal things of truth.

3320^e. This is the origin of Esau's name of Edom; for, in the Original Language, 'red' is expressed by 'Edom,' and this in order that by 'Edom' may be signified the good to which are adjoined the doctrinal things of truth.

3322. 'Therefore he called his name Edom' (Gen.xxv.30)=his quality thence derived as to the good to which are adjoined the doctrinal things of truth. . . 'Esau'=the good of the Natural, before the doctrinal things of truth are so fully conjoined with that good, and also the good of life from the influx from the Rational; and 'Edom'=the good of the Rational to which are adjoined the doctrinal things of truth. But in the opposite sense, 'Esau'=the evil of the love of self before falsities are so fully conjoined with that evil; and 'Edom'=the evil of that love when these falsities are adjoined. Ill.

—². 'Edom' (Is.lxiii.)=the Lord; and that it =the Lord as to the Divine good of the Divine Natural, is evident; for it treats of the conjunction of good and truth in the Lord's Human, and of the combats of temptations through which He conjoined these things.

—³. 'To march out of the field of Edom' (Judg.v.4) has almost the same signification as 'to come out of 'Edom' in Isaiah.

—'. 'Edom and Seir which shall be an inheritance' (Num.xxiv.18)=the Divine good of the Lord's Divine Natural.

—⁴. 'The remains of Edom' (Amos ix.12)=those who are in good within the Church.

—'. 'Over Edom will I cast out My shoe' (Ps.lx.8). 'Edom'=the good of the Natural. . . as is evident from the signification of 'a shoe,' which is the lowest of the Natural.

—⁵. 'These shall be snatched out of his hand, Edom and Moab. . .' (Dan.xi.41). 'Edom'=those who are in simple good, which is such good as exists with those who constitute the Lord's external Church. . . And as both Edom and Moab=those who are in good, in many passages both are mentioned together; but the difference is, that 'Edom'=the good of the Natural to which are adjoined the doctrinal things of truth, but 'Moab,' natural good such as there is with those with whom they are not conjoined. In the external form, the former and the latter appear alike, but not in the internal.

—⁶. Hence it is now evident why it is said 'Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, because he is thy brother' (Dent.xxiii.7), because by 'an Edomite' is signified the good of the Natural.

—⁷. But in the opposite sense, by 'Esau' and 'Edom' are represented those who turn aside from good by utterly despising truth, and who do not want anything of the truth of faith to be adjoined, which is chiefly owing to the love of self. . . and which was represented by 'the King of Edom going forth with much people and with a strong hand, and refusing to permit Israel to pass through his border' (Num.xx.20,21).

—'. That this evil of the love of self is of such a character as not to admit the truths of faith, thus not the doctrinal things of truth, is described in various places in the Word by 'Esau' and 'Edom;' and at the same time the state of the Church when it becomes of such a character. Ill.

—⁸. 'Edom' and 'Esau,' here, (Obad.)=evil, in the natural man originating in the love of self, which despises and rejects all truth, whence its devastation.

[A. 332²]. In Ezek. xxxv., it is manifestly evident, that 'Edom,' in the opposite sense, = those who despise, reject, and vilify spiritual goods and truths, which are 'the mountains of Israel.'

4241. 'The field of Edom' (Gen. xxxii. 3) = truth from good; (for) 'the field of Edom' = the Lord's Divine Natural as to good to which are conjoined the doctrinal things of truth, or truths. Ex.

4642. 'Himself is Edom' (Gen. xxxvi. 1) = the Lord's Divine Human as to the Natural and Corporeal; (for) 'Edom' = the Lord's Divine Human as to natural good to which are adjoined the doctrinal things of truth, thus as to the Natural and Corporeal; for doctrinal things are like a body to truth; or, in a spiritual sense, they are the corporeal things of natural truth . . .

4645^e. 'Esau himself is Edom' (ver. 8) = the Lord's Divine Human.

4646. 'The father of Edom' (ver. 9) = the Divine good from which other things were derived.

4648. 'In the land of Edom' (ver. 21) = in the Lord's Divine Human.

4650. 'These are the kings who reigned in the land of Edom' (ver. 31) = the chief truths in the Lord's Divine Human.

5099^e. In Jer. xlix. 7-22, it treats of Edom and its damnation . . . By 'Edom,' there, are signified those who from the evil of the love of self reject the truths of doctrine, and embrace falsities.

5311². These things are described by 'the dukes of Edom.'

5314. 'Then the dukes of Edom were dismayed' (Ex. xv. 15) = the like with those who are in the life of evil from the love of self. . . 'Edom' = those who from the evil of the love of self seize on falsities and reject truths; in the sense abstracted from person, 'Edom' = the evil of the love of self to which falsity is adjoined, and from which truth is rejected; thus also those who are in a life of evil from the love of self.

—³. Hence it is that those who reigned in Edom were called 'dukes' or leaders (III.); the reason being that by 'Edom' is signified the good of celestial love, and in the opposite sense, the evil of the love of self.

S. 18³. 'Edom' = what is natural.

R. 825^e. 'Edom' means 'redness,' here, (Is. lxiii.) redness from blood.

E. 328⁸. 'Edom,' from which He comes = His Human.

359³. The Lord Himself as to the Divine Human, is here meant (Is. lxiii.) by 'Edom.'

364⁷. In the Original Language, 'red' is called 'Adam,' and hence comes the name 'Adam,' and also the name 'Edom' . . . That 'Edom' is named from 'red,' see Gen. xxv. 30; and thence by it is signified the truth of good of the natural man.

400¹⁰. 'Edom and the inhabitants of Teman' (Jer. xlix. 21) = the evils and falsities opposite to the goods and truths of the Celestial Kingdom . . .

410⁴. 'Edom' (Jer. xlix.) = the conceit of man's own intelligence, and thence falsity destroying the Church.

—⁵. These things are also said (in Obad.) of Edom, by whom is here signified the conceit of the learning which is from man's own intelligence, and thence falsity destroying the Church.

433¹³. 'Egypt shall be for a waste, and Edom for a wilderness of a waste' (Joel iv. 19) = that false principles and the evils of the love of self, both from the natural man, will be destroyed.

514⁷. 'The Red Sea and the land of Edom where was Ezion-geber' (1 Kings ix. 26) was the last boundary of the Land of Canaan, and by the last boundaries of the Land of Canaan are signified the ultimates of the Church, which are the knowledges that comprehend the Knowledges of truth and good.

594¹³. 'To go forth out of Seir, and to march out of the field of Edom' (Judg. v. 4), when said of Jehovah = the illumination of the gentiles by the Lord, when He assumed the Human.

653³. As 'Edom' = the natural man who is in falsities from the love of self, and thence who adulterates the goods of the Church; its vastation is compared to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, in Jer. xlix. 17.

730²⁰. 'Egypt and Edom' = the natural man who has perverted the truths and goods of the Word. That he is to be destroyed, so that he shall not see anything except such things as those by which he confirms these things, is signified by 'Egypt shall be for a waste, and Edom for a wilderness of a waste . . . ' 'Egypt' = these scientifics; and 'Edom,' the conceit which falsifies by means of them.

811¹⁶. These things (in Obad.) are said of Edom, by which is signified the truth of the natural man; but here the falsity.

2309. Hence may be evident what is the character of the education of little children in Heaven ; to wit, that by means of the intelligence of truth and the wisdom of good they are introduced into the angelic life, which is love to the Lord and mutual love, in which loves there is innocence. But how contrary to this is the education of little children on earth, may be evident from this one instance among many. (This instance is quoted in full under CHILD, at this ref.) H. 344.

9468^s. 'They that were brought up upon scarlet have embraced a dunghill' (Lam. iv. 5). 'To be brought up upon scarlet' = to be instructed from infancy in the good of mutual love from the Word.

H. 329. Every little child . . . when he dies, is received by the Lord, and is educated in Heaven, and according to Divine order is taught and imbued with affections of good, and through them with the Knowledges of truth . . .

334. How little children are educated in Heaven . . . They learn to speak from their educatrix ; their first speech is only the sound of affection, which by degrees becomes more distinct as the ideas of thought enter . . . Into their affections, which all proceed from innocence, are first insinuated such things as appear before the eyes, and are delightful ; and as these things are from a spiritual origin, the things of Heaven at the same time flow into them, by means of which their interiors are opened, and thus they are perfected daily. After this first age has passed, they are transferred into another Heaven, where they are instructed by masters ; and so on. (P. 136^e, Ex.) M. 411.

5660-5667. How maidens are educated in the other life and in Heaven. They are kept together, three, four, or five; and each has her own chamber and therein her own bed; near it there is a closet for their clothes, etc.; and there they store the things they prize, with which they are much delighted. They are always kept at their own work, which is embroidery . . . and the things they make are either for themselves, or they give them to others . . . They receive their garments gratis, not knowing how, which they put on daily, and a better one for festivals. They also have a little garden; and so long as they are virgins, there are only flowers there, and not fruits until they become wives. When they see spots on their garments, it is a sign that they have thought what is evil, and that they have done something wrong; these spots cannot be washed out; when they have found out what they have thought and done . . . they see their blemishes and their evils, and if they then repent of them, the spots vanish from their garments of themselves. In like manner when they see any of their garments missing from their chamber, they at once know that they have done wrong . . . and if they themselves do not know what it is, a wife comes who tells them. If they see a new garment in their chamber, they then inmosty rejoice, because they know that they have acted well. When they see the flowers growing dim in their little gardens, or being changed into worse ones, they also take notice; but if they are changed into better and more beautiful ones, they are glad, because it is a sign that they have been thinking well. Silver and gold coins are also given them: these they take great care of, because they are tokens of diligence, or of virtue. They have the written Word, and hymn-books-Psalmodias; and with these they go to preachings. They also read in them; and if they do not read, either some garment is taken away, or their little garden vanishes. Preachers sometimes visit and examine them.

A. 1568. Delights and pleasures . . . are the effects of the goods of the internal man and of its joys and felicities; and when they are the effects, they completely correspond, and then belong to the internal man and not to the external; for, as is known, an effect is not of the effect, but of the efficient cause. Examps.

1807°. All effects whatever are representatives of the uses which are the causes . . .

2621°. Every effect has its own cause . . . the cause is the being of the effect, but the effect is the manifesting of the cause.

2991. Natural forms are effects, nor can they appear as causes, still less as causes of causes, or beginnings, but they receive forms according to the use in the place in which they are; still the forms of the effects represent those things which belong to the causes . . .

3298. 'Her days were fulfilled to bring forth'=the first state of effect. . . For 'to bring forth' . . . regards good and truth, and in this sense it=to come forth. . . After the conception (of good and truth), the efficient or conceived seed begins to produce the effect. This takes place in the womb. When these states are fulfilled, and the time is near to bring forth, then the effect begins, and is called the first of the effect; for then the offspring begins to act as of itself . . . which is called the state of effect.

3533. From the effect. Sig. . . For the Natural sees from the effect; but the Rational, from the cause.

3562. Unless what is lower exists from interior things, as an effect from its own efficient cause, it does not exist. . . In like manner the end is the inmost of all effect; for the effect is from such a cause . . .

3573³. From effects and their signs it is in some measure evident . . . —⁴.

3630. Celestial and spiritual things flow in with man . . . into adequate and suitable forms, and so present the effects which appear to man. But these effects appear to man no otherwise than as natural, thus under an altogether different form and appearance . . .

4073^e. Man is in effects, and therefore does not see these things.

4104⁴. Such as the ends are, such come forth the causes, and such thence the effects. . . Effects are the ultimate things with man, and are called the ultimate ends; effects are also those things which are called generals. . . In this case . . . all ultimate ends or effects are arranged in order according to the end itself; and this in the Natural, because effects, or what is the same, generals, are there. Ex.

4269. Effect. Sig.

9824². Things successive . . . present themselves together in ultimates; as for example, end, cause, and effect; the end is the first in order, the cause is the second, and the effect is the last; thus they advance successively; but still in the effect, which is the last or ultimate, the cause is presented together, and the end in the cause. Hence the effect is the complement, in which the interior or prior things are collated and entertained. Examp.

from the cause; for an effect is nothing but a cause in the external form, because, when a cause becomes an effect, it clothes itself with such things as there are in externals, in order to appear in a lower sphere, which is the sphere of effects. Ex.

—⁴. The case is the same with man . . . the proximate cause by which the will produces the effect, is his understanding; and the effect which is produced is in the body, thus of the body . . .

H. 112. Uses . . . presented in act, or in effect . . .

512^e. (These are) the very effects of spiritual life; and the effect derives its all from its own efficient cause; for such as is the latter, such is the former.

W. 2. Thought is the first effect of life, and sensation and action are the second effect of life. . . Inmost thought, which is the perception of ends, is actually the first effect of life.

165^e. The terraqueous globe . . . is as it were a matrix, from which effects, which are the ends of creation, are produced.

178. The atmospheres are the active forces, the waters are the middle forces, and the earths are the passive forces, from which all effects come forth.

187^e. To see from effects alone, is to see from fallacies . . .

208. There are such degrees in every ultimate, thus in every effect. For . . . every effect consists of a cause, and this of an end; and the end is the all of the cause, and the cause is the all of the effect . . . and the end makes the inmost thing, the cause the middle thing, and the effect the ultimate thing.

212. That the ultimate degree is the complex, the containant, and the basis of the prior degrees, is manifestly evident from the progression of ends and causes to effects. That the effect is the complex, the containant, and the basis of the causes and the ends, may be comprehended by enlightened reason; but not so clearly, that the end, with all things belonging to it, and the cause, with all things belonging to it, are actually in the effect; and that the effect is their full complex. Ex.

257. Effects enum.

P. 178. Whatever a man loves, he wants the effect of, and he leads himself to the effect by reason. . . Therefore, if he knew the effect or event from Divine prediction, his reason would cease to act, and with reason his love; for the love closes with reason in the effect; and from that it then begins anew. It is the very delight of reason, from love to see the effect in thought; not in the effect, but before it; or not in the present, but in the future. Hence man has what is called hope. (Continued under END.)

M. 8⁵. As love is the efficient, and as it is the efficient through wisdom, the seat of both is in the effect, and the effect is use.

408. To think and conclude from effects, is to do so from the lower region of the mind . . .

461³. They who investigate effects are called Spirits of knowledges, and abstractedly, knowledges. —⁷.

I. 10². There are two things which effect all the effects in the universe, life and nature; and they effect them according to order . . .

D. Wis. ii². No effect comes forth of itself, but from a cause prior to it, which is called the efficient cause . . .

C. 4. There is an internal and an external effect, or an internal and an external work. The external effect or work proceeds and comes forth from the internal effect or work, as act from endeavour. Ex.

De Verbo 19. Natural things are effects from spiritual ones; and spiritual things are effects from celestial ones; and an effect consists of so many things which do not appear before the eyes, and which are causes, that ad infinitum may be said of it. An effect is gross; and the cause enters into everything of the effect, and compounds it as its own general . . .

A. 31². In Ezek.xxxii.7,8, it treats of Pharaoh and the Egyptian, by whom in the Word is meant the Sensuous and the Scientific: here, that through sensuous and scientific things they have extinguished love and faith.

195³. 'Egypt' (Jer.xlvi.)=reasoning about Divine things from sensuous and scientific things.

273. 'Egypt' and 'Memphis' (Hos.ix.6)=those who want to be wise about Divine things from themselves and their own scientifics.

870². 'Egypt' (Hos.vii.11; xi.11)=one who has knowledge.

1063. Hence Egypt is called 'the land of Ham.'

1163⁶. 'Egypt'=knowledges. 2162¹⁶. 2831⁶. R.90².

1164. 'Egypt' (Jer.xlvi.8)=those who believe nothing unless they apprehend it from scientifics; hence all things doubtful, negative and false.

—⁵. 'Cush' and 'Egypt,' simply, =the Knowledges and the knowledges which are truths, and which are useful to those who are in the faith of charity; thus in a good sense. III.

—'. 'The labour of Egypt' (Is.xlv.14)=knowledge. 1171².

1186⁶. 'Egypt' (Hos.xi.11)=the knowledge of the man of the Church.

—⁷. The knowledge of the Spiritual Church is 'Egypt' (Is.xix.23-25).

1195. Hence the Egyptian-Aegyptiaca-idols, and hence their magic; and as this was the source of their rituals, they utterly rejected the rites of the Ancient Church . . . 1343⁵.

1232². 'Egypt' (Hos.xii.13)=knowledge perverting.

1238². (Egypt one of the countries of the Ancient Church.)

1368². 'The sons of Egypt' (Ezek.xvi.26)=scientifics.

1401. 'Towards the south into Egypt' (Gen.xii.9,10) treats of the Lord's fifth state.

1402. The things which are said about the sojourning of Abram in Egypt, represent and signify the Lord's first instruction. . . 'Egypt'=knowledge. 1502.

1461. 'Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn'=instruction in Knowledges from the Word. . . 'Egypt'=the knowledge of Knowledges.

—². That 'Egypt'=useful knowledges, thus, here, the knowledge of Knowledges which is able to serve as vessels for celestial and spiritual things. III.

—'. See CORNER at this ref.

—'. 'Egypt' (Is.xix.18-22)=those who are in scientifics, or in natural truths, which are vessels for spiritual truths.

—². 'Egypt' (Is.xix.23-25)=the knowledge of natural truths.

—³. That knowledge, or human wisdom, is signified by 'Egypt,' is evident in Daniel, where the knowledges of celestial and spiritual things are called . . . 'the desirable things of Egypt' (xi.43).

—⁶. The Lord's being brought into Egypt when an infant, had no other signification than what is here signified by Abram.

—'. The migration of Jacob and his sons into Egypt, in the inmost sense, represented the first instruction of the Lord in Knowledges from the Word. III. His instruction when a child is meant by these words, 'Out or Egypt have I called My Son' (Matt.ii.15; Hos.xi.1).

—^e. The Lord is called 'a vine out of Egypt' (Ps. lxxx.8), in respect to the Knowledges in which He was instructed. 5113¹¹.

1466. 'When he drew nigh to come into Egypt' (Gen. xii.11)=when He began to learn. 'Egypt'=the knowledge of Knowledges.

1472. 'When the Egyptians see thee' (ver.12)=the knowledge of Knowledges, the quality of which when they see celestial Knowledges is described. Ex. 1473. 1474.

1479. 'It came to pass when Abram came into Egypt' (ver.14)=when the Lord began to be instructed. . . 'Egypt'=the knowledge of Knowledges. Hence 'to come into Egypt'=to be instructed.

1480. 'The Egyptians saw the woman that she was very beautiful' (id.)=that the knowledge of Knowledges was very pleasing to itself.

1482. 'Pharaoh'=the same as 'Egypt;' and here 'Egypt' or 'Pharaoh' is used in the best sense, because they are predicated of the knowledge of Knowledges which the Lord first seized on in childhood.

1502. Israel's sojourn in Egypt was not reckoned from the entrance of Jacob into Egypt, but from the sojourning of Abram in Egypt. 1847.

—'. By this is confirmed that 'Egypt' in the Word =nothing else but knowledge. 1541. 1543. 1544. 1895. 1929. 1951. 2607.

1542. As the Lord was born as another man, and informed as another, He had to learn scientific; which is represented and signified by the sojourning of Abram in Egypt.

1543. 'Abram went up out of Egypt' (Gen. xiii. 1) = from scientific, which left the Lord.

1847°. Temptations were represented by the bondage in Egypt . . .

1866. 'From the river of Egypt to the . . . river Euphrates' (Gen. xv. 18) = the extension of spiritual and celestial things. 'To the river of Egypt' = the extension of spiritual things . . . The reason 'the river of Egypt' = the extension of spiritual things, is that 'Egypt' = scientific, which, together with the rational and intellectual things of man, are spiritual things.

1890. The external affection of knowledges is 'Hagar the Egyptian handmaid.' 1892. 1895.

1949°. Hence it is that . . . 'his mother took for Ishmael a wife out of the land of Egypt' (Gen. xxi. 21).

2220°. 'Which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt' (Rev. xi. 8) . . . 'Sodom' = all evil from the love of self; and 'Egypt,' instead of Gomorrah = all the falsity thence derived.

2588¹². In Is. xix. 23-25, the Spiritual Church is treated of; the Spiritual of which is 'Israel; the Rational is 'Asshur;' and the Scientific is 'Egypt;' which three constitute the intellectual things of that Church; and which succeed in this order; wherefore it is said, 'Israel shall be the third with Egypt and with Asshur;' and 'blessed be Egypt my people . . .'

2718. 'A wife (for Ishmael) from the land of Egypt' (Gen. xxi. 21) = the affection of knowledges which is possessed by the man of the Spiritual Church.

2781°. 'The Egyptians' = knowledges, of which it is said that 'they shall help vainly and emptily' (Is. xxx. 7).

2799¹⁴. 'In the way of Egypt' (Amos iv. 10) = the scientific which lay waste when we reason from them in Divine things.

from the entrance of Jacob, to the going out of his sons, was about 215 years . . . But there were 430 years from the entrance of Abraham into Egypt; wherefore it is said (in Exod. xii. 40, that 'the dwelling of the Sons of Israel, which they dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years') on account of the internal sense; in which sense, by the sojourning of the sons of Jacob in Egypt is represented and signified the vastation of the Church, the state and duration of which is described by the number 430 years . . . 7985. Ex.

2986°. The descendants of Jacob in Egypt became still more Gentiles, and that so completely, that they did not know who Jehovah was, and therefore not what any Divine worship was.

3024°. 'The daughter of Egypt' = the affection of reasoning from scientific about the truths of faith, whether it is so; thus the religiosity which thence arises, which is such that nothing is believed unless it is apprehended by the senses; thus nothing of the truth of faith.

3048°. That 'the Egyptians' shall help vainly and emptily' = that knowledges will be of no use to them.

3142°. 'A vine out of Egypt' (Ps. lxxx.) = truth from scientific.

3240°. The desolation of the Spiritual Church is here (Jer. xxv. 17-26) treated of; the differences of which Church are mentioned in order, and are signified by 'Egypt,' etc.

3322°. Hence it is evident why it is said, 'Thou shalt not abominate . . . an Egyptian, because thou wast a sojourner in his land' (Deut. xxiii. 7), because . . . by 'an Egyptian' is signified the truths of the Natural, which are scientific: thus it is mentioned in a good sense.

3325¹³. See HAM at this ref.

3368. 'Go not down to Egypt' (Gen. xxvi. 2) = not to scientific.

— 3. The reason it is here said that Isaac was not to go down to Egypt, that is, not to scientific, is that scientific have been treated of before; for the sojourning of Abraham in Egypt represented the instruction of the Lord in scientific, in His childhood . . .

3419°. The doctrinal things of love to the Lord and of charity towards the neighbour, are rejected at this day, partly by those who are called . . . 'Philistines' and also 'Egyptians.'

3448¹⁰. In Ezek. xxxii., it treats of Egypt, by which is signified those who pervert truths through reasonings from scientific. Refs.

4588^e. 'The king of Egypt' (Ex.i.)=the Scientific in general which extinguishes truths; which is done when the Scientific enters into the things which are of faith in an inverted way, believing nothing but that which is dictated by what is sensuous and scientific.

4601². The profanation of good through faith separated was represented . . . by the Egyptians being immersed in the Red Sea.

4680². This Church turned aside . . . in Egypt, Babel, and elsewhere, into things magical . . .

4728^t. In Ezek.xxxi., it treats of Egypt, by which is signified the knowledge which from itself enters into the mysteries of faith, that is, those who do so.

4735¹⁵. 'Egypt' (in connection with the plagues)=knowledge which from itself enters into heavenly arcana, and thus perverts, denies, and profanes Divine truths. Refs.

4760. 'They brought Joseph into Egypt' (ver.29)=consultation from scientifics; (for) when the Divine truth is brought to these scientifics, it is to consult them. Ex.

4788. 'The Midianites sold him to Egypt' (ver.36)=that those who are in some truth of simple good consulted scientifics. Ex.

4789. 'Egypt'=knowledge in general. Refs.

4964. '(Joseph) was made to go down into Egypt' (Gen.xxxix.1)=to the scientifics which are of the Church; (for) 'Egypt'=knowledge, or what is scientific in general. . . In the Ancient Church . . . the scientifics treated of the correspondences of the natural world with the Spiritual World, and of the representatives of spiritual and celestial things in things natural and earthly. . . Egypt was among those regions and kingdoms where the Ancient Church was; but as scientifics were especially taught there, 'Egypt'=what is scientific in general; and therefore 'Egypt' is so often treated of in the prophetic Word; and there specifically means such a Scientific. The Egyptian-Aegyptiaca-magic itself also thence originated; for they knew the correspondences of the natural world with the Spiritual World, which they afterwards abused for magic. As, therefore, such scientifics existed among them, to wit, such as taught correspondences, representatives, and significatives, and as these were of service to the doctrinal things of the Church, especially for the understanding of those things which were said in their Word . . . hence it is, that 'he was made to go down into Egypt'=to the scientifics which are of the Church. As the Lord is represented by 'Joseph' (these words)=that when the Lord glorified His internal man . . . He first imbued the scientifics of the Church, and from and by means of them advanced to things more and more interior, and at last even to Divine things . . . Hence it is evident what is signified by these words in Hosea: 'When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called My Son out of Egypt.' 4969.

4966^e. These were the scientifics which in the genuine sense are signified by 'Egypt.'

4973. 'And he was in the house of his lord the Egyptian' (ver.2)=in order that it might be initiated in natural good; (for) 'lord'=good; and 'the Egyptian,' the Scientific in general, and thence what is natural.

4980. 'Jehovah blessed the house of the Egyptian for Joseph's sake' (ver.5)=that from the Divine at that time it had the celestial Natural; (for) 'the house of the Egyptian'=the good of the natural mind.

5013^e. That natural men consider spiritual things as things of service, is represented by the Egyptians regarding the Hebrews as mere servants; for the Egyptians represent those who are in natural knowledge, thus the Natural . . .

5044^t. 'How say ye to Pharaoh, I am the son of the wise, I am the son of the kings of antiquity? The princes of Zoan are become fools, the princes of Noph are deceived; and they have seduced Egypt, the corner stone of the tribes' (Is.xix.11,13); speaking of Egypt, by which is signified the Scientific of the Church, thus natural truth which is the ultimate of order; wherefore Egypt is here called 'the corner stone of the tribes;' for 'tribes'=all truths in one complex. Here, however, 'Egypt'=the Scientific which perverts the truths of the Church, thus truths in the ultimate of order falsified, which are 'the princes of Zoan,' and 'the princes of Noph.' The reason he calls himself 'the son of the kings of antiquity,' is that scientifics were there from the truths of the Ancient Church . . .

5077. 'The king of Egypt' (Gen.xl.1)=the natural man.

5079. 'Against their lord the king of Egypt' (id.)=that they were contrary to the new state of the natural man; that is, the external sensuous things or those of the body were, which are signified by 'the butler and the baker.' 'The king of Egypt'=the Scientific in general; for 'the king of Egypt' has a like signification to 'Egypt;' for the king is the head of the nation. . . As it is the Scientific in general which is signified by 'the king of Egypt,' it is also the natural man; for the whole Scientific is the truth of the natural man. A new state thereof is here signified. Ex.

5113⁴. 'What hast thou to do with the way of Egypt that thou shouldst drink the waters of Sihor?' (Jer. ii.18). . . 'Egypt' and 'the waters of Sihor'=scientifics which pervert.

5191. In Gen.xli., it treats of . . . the exaltation of the Celestial of the Spiritual over those things which are of the natural man, thus over all the scientifics there, which are 'Egypt.'

5212². 'The outcasts in the land of Egypt' (Is.xxvii.13)=exterior truths, or scientifics.

magical miracles. But they who were called the wise did not care for such things; but solved allegorical matters, and taught the causes of natural things; in such things especially consisted the wisdom of that time . . . (Hence it is said that) 'the wisdom of Solomon was multiplied . . . above all the wisdom of the Egyptians.' . .

—³. But in the internal sense, by the Egyptian-Aegyptiacum-wisdom, nothing else is signified than the knowledge of natural things, and by the magic, the knowledge of spiritual things . . . and by 'Egypt' in general, knowledge. Ill.

5275. The reason the things (relating to the seven years of plenty and the seven years of famine) took place in the land of Egypt, was that the land of Egypt, and Pharaoh, in the internal sense, means the Natural; the glorification of which in the Lord is there treated of . . .

5276. 'Great abundance of provision in all the land of Egypt' (Gen.xli.29)=the multiplication of truth in both Naturals. . . The 'land of Egypt'=both Naturals; for 'Egypt'=knowledge; and as it=knowledge, it also =the Natural, because that is called scientific which is in the Natural; therefore 'the land of Egypt'=the natural mind in which is the Scientific; hence 'all the land of Egypt'=both Naturals, to wit, the interior and the exterior.

5279. 'The land,' here, of Egypt,=the natural mind. 5280. 5299. 5301. 5302. 5341. 5356. 5510.

5316. 'See, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt' (ver.41)=dominion over both Naturals. 5329. 5333- 5338.

— . Pharaoh . . . submitted Egypt wholly to Joseph . . . in order that Joseph might put on the representation of the Celestial of the Spiritual which the Lord had while He was in the world, and by means of which He disposed His Natural, and also His Sensuous, so as successively to make both Divine.

5366. 'Pharaoh said to all Egypt' (ver.55)=apperception in both Naturals, in general and in particular.

5373. 'Every land came to Egypt' (ver.57)=that goods and truths were collated into the scientifics which are of the Church.

—². In its own proper sense, 'Egypt'=knowledge, and therefore scientifics; and the scientifics which are signified by 'Egypt' in a good sense, are the scientifics of the Church. Refs.

5397. (In Gen.xlii.) it treats of the endeavour to appropriate the truths of faith by means of the scientifics of the Church, which are 'Egypt,' and without a medium . . .

5402. 'That there was provision in Egypt' (ver.1)=an animus to procure truths for themselves by means of scientifics.

— . By the scientifics of the Church, which here are 'Egypt,' are meant all the Knowledges of truth and good before they have been conjoined with the interior man, or through the interior man with Heaven, thus through Heaven with the Lord. The doctrinal and ritual things of the Church, and also the Knowledges . . . are nothing but scientifics, until a man has seen from the Word whether they are true, and has thus appropriated them to himself . . .

[A.] 5406°. Hence it is that not only here, but also everywhere in the Word, it is said 'to go down from the Land of Canaan to Egypt,' and 'to go up from Egypt to the Land of Canaan;' for 'the Land of Canaan'=what is heavenly, and 'Egypt,' what is natural; for 'the Land of Canaan'=the heavenly kingdom . . . whereas 'Egypt' in the representative sense is the natural kingdom, consequently the goods and truths which are of the external Church, and which for the most part are scientifics.

5580. '(The provision) which they had brought from Egypt' (Gen.xliii.2)=(the truth) which is from scientifics. . . In a good sense, 'Egypt'=the scientifics which are of the Church; namely, those which are of service for the form of the Church. By such things a man is introduced into the truths of the Church . . .

5637. 'They arose and went down to Egypt' (ver.15)=elevation to procure for themselves life from the interior things of scientifics. . . The interior things of scientifics are those things which are spiritual in the Natural . . .

5700. '(They set) for the Egyptians that did eat with him by themselves' (ver.32)=the separation of the scientifics which are in inverted order. . . 'Egypt,' or 'the Egyptians,' in a good sense,=the scientifics of the Church; but in the opposite sense, they=the scientifics which are in inverted order, thus which are contrary to the truths of the Church. . . The reason 'Egypt'=these scientifics, is that the scientifics of the Ancient Church, which were representatives and significatives of celestial and spiritual things, and which had been more cultivated among the Egyptians than among others, they had turned into things magical, whereby they completely inverted the scientifics of the representative Church . . .

5701. 'Because the Egyptians cannot eat bread with the Hebrews' (id.)=that they cannot be at all conjoined with the truth and good of the Church. 'The Egyptians'=those who are in inverted order, thus who are in evil and falsity.

5702. 'Because that is an abomination to the Egyptians' (id.)=that they are in what is opposite. 'The Egyptians'=those who are in inverted order. . . They who are in inverted order . . . have such an aversion for the good and truth of the Church, that when they hear it . . . they feel nausea and as it were vomiting. . . That all things of the Hebrew Church . . . were an abomination to the Egyptians. Ill. . . Thus the Egyptians abominated all the things of that Church. The reason was, that the Egyptians had also primitively been among those who constituted the Ancient Representative Church; but they afterwards rejected the God of the Ancient Church, that is, Jehovah or the Lord, and served idols, especially calves; they also turned into things magical the very representatives and significatives . . . of the Ancient Church . . . Hence they were in inverted order, and consequently abominated all things which were of the Church. 5871.

5874. 'And the Egyptians heard' (Gen.xlv.2)=even to ultimates. . . 'The Egyptians'=scientifics, thus ultimates; for the scientifics with man are his ultimates. Ex.

5886. 'Whom ye sold into Egypt' (ver.4)=the internal which they had estranged. . . By 'Egypt' are here signified the lowest things; for to reckon anything among scientifics without acknowledgment, is to reject it to the sides, thus to the last or lowest things . . .

5904. 'I have dominion in all the land of Egypt' (ver.8)=that he himself disposes the scientifics there. . . 'The land of Egypt'=the natural mind, thus all scientifics; for these belong to that mind: scientifics are what constitute the Intellectual of that mind. 5908.

5922. 'Ye shall tell my father all my glory in Egypt' (ver.13)=the communication of the Spiritual Heaven in the Natural with spiritual good. . . 'Egypt'=the scientifics which are in the Natural, thus the Natural.

5942. 'I will give you the good of the land of Egypt' (ver.18)=the possession of scientifics.

5945. 'Take you carriages out of the land of Egypt' (ver.19)=the doctrinal things of scientifics. (See CHARLOT, here.)

5949. 'The good of the whole land of Egypt is yours' (ver.20)=that they have what is primary in the natural mind.

5958. 'Ten asses carrying of the good of Egypt' (ver.23)=scientifics, with many things for service. . . 'Asses'=scientifics; here, the lowest scientifics, which, as they carry interior things, are things for service; and 'the good of Egypt'=scientifics, but the scientifics of the Church; for these are properly signified by 'Egypt.' The reason these are 'the good of Egypt,' is that they were sent by Joseph to Israel . . .

5964. 'They went up out of Egypt' (ver.25)=recession from the scientifics of the Church. . . The reason these scientifics are here signified, is that they were in them while they were in Egypt with Joseph.

5968. 'He has dominion in all the land of Egypt' (ver.26)=that the natural mind is under his Power.

6004. 'Fear not to go down into Egypt' (Gen.xlvi.3)=that natural truth with all things belonging to it, must be initiated into the scientifics of the Church.

— 2. The scientifics of the Church at that time were representatives and significatives of rituals; for all the rituals of the Church were from such things: there were also scientifics which were of service to the doctrinal things of charity . . . and from these scientifics they knew who are meant by the poor, the needy, etc. . . Such scientifics flourished in Egypt; wherefore by 'Egypt' are signified scientifics; and that natural truth, which is 'Jacob,' was to be initiated into such scientifics, is represented by Jacob going down into Egypt with all that belonged to him. Ex. 6018.

6025. There was no son born to the sons of Jacob in Egypt. . . Their sons being all born in the Land of Canaan, represented that thence come such things as are of the Church. . . But the reason there were sons born to Joseph in Egypt, was that there might be represented the dominion of the internal man in the external . . .

'Manasseh'=the Voluntary; and 'Ephraim,' the Intellectual which are of the Church in the Natural.

6047. In the Word there is described the Lord's Kingdom, and that therein the Spiritual, the Rational, and the Scientific will be conjoined . . . is described by the names 'Israel,' 'Asshur,' and 'Egypt' . . . in Is. xix. 18-25.

6052. 'An abomination of the Egyptians is every shepherd of the flock' (Gen. xlvii. 34)=thus separation from perverted scientifics.

6083. 'The [land of Egypt, it is before thee' (Gen. xlvii. 6)=that the scientifics of the natural mind are under the auspices of the celestial internal. 'The land of Egypt'=the natural mind where scientifics are. Refs.

6103. 'He gave them a possession in the land of Egypt, in the best of the land' (ver. 11)=in the inmost of the natural mind where scientifics are.

6111. 'The land of Egypt and the Land of Canaan laboured from before the famine' (ver. 13)=that this desolation was in the Natural where scientifics are, and within the Church.

6112, 6113. 'Joseph gathered up all the silver that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the Land of Canaan' (ver. 14)=every true and adaptable scientific that was in the Natural and in the Church. 6917.

6116. 'When the silver was consumed out of the land of Egypt, and out of the Land of Canaan' (ver. 15)=that the true and adaptable Scientific was no longer to be seen in the Natural and within the Church, on account of the desolation.

6147. 'From the end of the boundary of Egypt and to the end of it' (ver. 21)=extension through the whole Natural where scientifics are. . . For the Natural is that which contains, and scientifics are the things which are contained; hence there is signified by 'Egypt' both the thing containing and the thing contained; that is, both the Natural and that which is scientific . . .

6169. 'Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt' (ver. 27)=that spiritual good lived among the scientifics which are of the Church.

6173. 'And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt' (ver. 28)=that natural truth was in scientifics. . . 'The land of Egypt'=the scientifics of the Church.

6181. 'Bury me not, I pray, in Egypt' (ver. 29)=regeneration not in scientifics.

6183. 'Thou shalt carry me out of Egypt' (ver. 30)=that there may be elevation from scientifics.

6234. 'Thy two sons that were born to thee in the land of Egypt' (Gen. xlviii. 5)=good and truth in the Natural from the Internal. 6252.

6235. 'Before I came unto thee into Egypt' (id.)=before the truth of the Natural was in scientifics.

6432. That 'in their youth they committed whoredom with Egypt' (Ezek. xxiii. 3)=that they falsified the truths of the Church through scientifics.

6507. 'The Egyptians wept for him' (Gen. l. 3)=the sadness of the scientifics of the Church . . . because the good of the Church, which is represented by 'Israel' had left them . . .

6525. 'All the elders of the land of Egypt' (ver. 7)= which were in agreement with truth. . . 'The land of Egypt'=the natural mind where scientifics are; thus, also, where truths are; for scientifics are the truths of the natural mind, and, when they are true, they are called scientific truths.

6553. 'And Joseph returned into Egypt, he and his brethren' (ver. 14)=the life of the celestial internal and that of the truths of faith in scientifics.

6580. 'And Joseph dwelt in Egypt' (ver. 22)=the life of the scientifics of the Church from the internal.

6589. 'The land of Egypt,' from which they were to go up' (ver. 24)=the vastated Church: the Egyptians represented this because they oppressed the Sons of Israel; and its destruction was represented by their submersion in the Red Sea.

6596. '(Joseph) was put in an ark in Egypt' (ver. 26)=concealment in the scientifics of the Church. Ex.

6638. 'Of those who came into Egypt with Jacob' (Ex. i. 1)=after truths had been initiated in scientifics.

6639. As in those chapters of Genesis where it treats of the coming of the sons of Jacob and of Jacob himself into Egypt to Joseph, it has treated of the initiation of the truths which are of the Church into scientifics; and as the Church is not established until this initiation is effected, therefore, according to the series of the things in the internal sense, it here treats of the Church established, and how it is continually being infested by scientifics and falsities. For however much truths have been initiated, and the Church established with man, still scientifics and falsities continually rise up and assault the things which are of the Church with him. These are the things which are represented by Pharaoh and the Egyptians afflicting the Sons of Israel, and wanting to murder their infant boys. . . The man of the Church who comes into the other life must be purified from such things as infest truths and goods, otherwise he cannot be elevated into Heaven. . . On his arrival there, he is therefore kept in a state in which he is assaulted by the scientifics which disagree with truths, and also by the falsities which do so, and this until these scientifics become of no account to him, and are removed. This rarely takes place with a man while he is living in the body; but in the other life it takes place with those who are to be elevated into Heaven; yet with the greatest variety. . . These are the things, which, in the internal sense, are described by the Sons of Israel being oppressed by the Egyptians, and by their afterwards being set free, and, after various states in the wilderness, being at last introduced into the Land of Canaan.

6643. 'Joseph was in Egypt' (ver. 5)=that the celestial internal was in the Natural.

6651. 'There arose a new king over Egypt' (ver. 8)=separated scientifics which are contrary to the truths of the Church.

6666. 'The Egyptians made the Sons of Israel serve' (ver. 13)=a striving to subjugate . . . on the part of those who are in separated scientifics which are contrary to the truths of the Church. Des. 6863. 6896. 7199.

6673. 'The king of Egypt said to the Hebrew midwives' (ver. 15)=an influx from separated scientifics into the Natural where are the true scientifics of the Church.

[A.] 6679. 'They did not as the king of Egypt spake to them' (ver.17)=that it was not done as those who are in falsities were striving for.

6684. 'The Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women' (ver.19)=that the scientifics of the Church are not such as the scientifics which are contrary to them.

6692. The reason 'the Egyptians'=scientifics which are contrary to the truths of the Church, is that the representatives and significatives of the Ancient Church . . . were there turned into things magical. Ex. This may be evident also from the hieroglyphics of the Egyptians, which they used for holy things; for by means of them they signified spiritual things, and perverted Divine order.

—². In the deepest of the Hells of the magicians are the Egyptians.

6729^e. 'The daughter of Egypt'=the affection of reasoning about the truths of faith, as to whether it is so, from scientifics, while what is negative is regnant; thus=the religiosity which thence arises; and which is of such a character that nothing is believed but what is false.

6750^e. That the Scientific was the first plane with the Lord when He made His Human Divine truth . . . is signified by the Lord, when an infant, being brought into Egypt . . .

—¹. 'Egypt'=scientifics; but by scientifics are not meant philosophical scientifics, but the scientifics of the Church. These are the scientifics, which, in the genuine sense, are signified by 'Egypt.'

6758. 'He saw an Egyptian man smiting a Hebrew man' (Ex.ii.11)=an estranged Scientific endeavouring to destroy the truth of the Church. 'An Egyptian man'=what is scientific estranged from truth.

6799. 'The king of Egypt died' (ver.23)=the end of the former falsity. . . Pharaoh, or 'the king of Egypt'=a false Scientific.

6855. 'Land,' here the land of Egypt (id.)=the place and state where they are being infested by falsities.

6865. 'Bring thou forth My people the Sons of Israel out of Egypt' (ver.10)=the consequent deliverance of those who were of the Spiritual Church from infesting falsities. 6871. 6897.

6901. 'Thou shalt come in, thou and the elders of Israel, unto the king of Egypt' (ver.18)=communication with those who are in falsities, and who infested.

6907. 'The king of Egypt will not give you to go' (ver.19)=that falsity would set itself in opposition.

6910. 'I will smite Egypt with all My wonders' (ver.20)=the mediums of the Divine power against falsities.

6914. 'I will give the grace of this people in the eyes of the Egyptians' (ver.21)=the fear, by reason of plagues, of those who are in falsities of those who are of the Spiritual Church. . . It treats of those who are in falsities, who are signified by 'the Egyptians,' that goods and truths were to be taken away from them, and transferred to those of the Spiritual Church. 7771.

—². The things which the women of the Sons of Israel borrowed from the Egyptians . . . were afterwards applied to the use of constructing the ark, etc.

6920. 'Ye shall spoil the Egyptians' (ver.22)=that such things were to be taken away from those who were in falsities and thence in evils.

6976. The land of Egypt=the natural mind which is in falsity, thus the Natural.

7016. 'Let me go, I pray, and I will return to my brethren who are in Egypt' (Ex.iv.18)=elevation to interior and more spiritual life in the Natural. 7020. 7025. 7029.

7103. 'The king of Egypt said unto them' (Ex.v.4)=reply by those who are in falsities. . . 'The king of Egypt'=a false Scientific.

7130. 'The people scattered itself abroad in all the land of Egypt' (ver.12)=that they overspread the natural mind in every direction.

7203. 'I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians' (Ex.vi.6)=that the Lord will release them from the infestations of those who are in falsities. . . 'The Egyptians'=those who infest by means of falsities injected.

7220. 'Speak to Pharaoh king of Egypt' (ver.11)=warning to those who infest by means of mere falsities. 7228. 7243.

7221. 'The land of Egypt'=a state of infestations.

7235. 'Bring ye out the Sons of Israel from the land of Egypt' (ver.26)=that those who are of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom should be delivered from the vicinity of those who are in falsities.

7238. 'To bring out the Sons of Israel from Egypt' (ver.27)=that they should leave them and not infest. . . 'Egyt'²=the falsity from which comes infestation.

7240. 'The land of Egypt' (ver.28)=where those who are of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom were infested by falsities. This was in the Lower Earth, which is near the Hells. The land of Egypt, where the Sons of Israel were, and which was called 'Goshen,'=that Lower Earth; but where the Egyptians were,=the Hells around, from which came the infestations by falsities. 7445.

7274. 'In the land of Egypt' (Ex.vii.3)=where are they who are infesting.

7276. 'I will give My hand upon the Egyptians' (ver. 4)= . . . that those who are in falsities shall be compelled through Divine power.

7278. 'Out of the land of Egypt' (id.)=from infestations.

7280. 'And the Egyptians shall know that I am Jehovah' (ver. 5)=that they will have fear of the Divine. . . 'The Egyptians'=those who are in falsities and infest. 7281.

7296. As the Egyptians applied themselves to such things, they called themselves 'the son of the wise, and of the kings of antiquity' (Is.xix.11). The Egyptians called the knowledges of things wisdom.

7320. 'The Egyptians shall labour to drink the waters out of the river' (ver.18)=that they would want to know scarcely anything about truths. 'The Egyptians'=those who falsify truths . . .

7324³. 'Egyt'²=the scientifics of the Church: scientifics are Knowledges, but in a lower degree.

7337. 'The magicians of Egypt did so with their enchantments' (ver.22)=that their falsifiers fashioned the like. Ex.

7385. 'Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt' (Ex.viii.6)=the effect of the power of internal truth through external truth against falsities. . . 'The waters of Egypt'=falsities.

7387. '(The frog) covered the land of Egypt' (id.)= that the natural mind was filled with falsities and consequent reasonings. 7389.

7409. 'The land stank' (ver. 10)=consequent noisomeness and loathsomeness. 'The land,' here the land of Egypt,=the natural mind.

7420. '(Lice) in all the land of Egypt' (ver.17)= (evils) through the whole natural mind.

7441². 'The fly in the extremity of the rivers of Egypt' (Is.vii.18)=falsities which are in the extremes of the natural mind, thus which are in the Sensuous nearest the body.

7442. 'The houses of the Egyptians shall be filled with the baneful flying thing, and also the land whereon they are' (Ex.viii.21)=that the falsities of malevolence will take possession of all things of the natural mind. . . 'A house of the Egyptians'=the interiors of the natural mind . . . and 'the land of Egypt'=the natural mind in general.

7454. 'We shall sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians to Jehovah our God' (ver.26)=that infernal noisomeness and defilement would flow in. Ex.

7465. Each miracle that was done in Egypt signifies some special state into which those come in the other life who are in falsities and infest. There are ten states into which they successively come before they are entirely stripped of all truth, thus before they are cast into Hell. For they who are in the knowledge of faith, but in evil of life, are not conveyed into Hell immediately after death, but successively. They are first convinced that they are in evil; afterwards the knowledge of faith is taken away from them; and at last they are left to the evil of their own life. This is effected by a number of successive states; and these are the states which are described by the miracles done in Egypt, consequently by the evils which befel the Egyptians before they were immersed in the Red Sea.

7505². 'A pestilence in the way of Egypt' (Amos iv.10)=the vastation of good and truth through falsities, which are 'the way of Egypt.'

7506. 'The cattle of the Egyptians' (Ex.ix.4)=the goods and truths of the Church possessed by those who infest. 'The Egyptians'=those who have been of the Church, and thence in the knowledge of the truth and good of faith, but in a life of evil, and who infest in the other life. Refs.

7511. 'And all the cattle of the Egyptians died' (ver. 6)=the consumption of the truth and good of faith with those who infest.

7519^e. 'The land of Egypt which he shall smite' (Jer. xliii.11)=the natural mind.

7522. 'It shall be for dust in all the land of Egypt' (ver.9)=the damnation of these falsities in the natural mind. 7525.

7532. '(The ulcer was) upon all the Egyptians' (ver. 11)

= that (filthy things came forth) upon those who were infesting.

[A.] 7554. 'Such as has not been in Egypt from the day it was founded, even until now' (ver. 18) = that with others there is no such destruction in the natural mind. 7578.

7569. 'There shall be hail in all the land of Egypt' (ver. 22) = falsity destroying in the natural mind. 7571. 7580.

7576. 'He made hail to rain upon the land of Egypt' (ver. 23) = the natural mind thus taken possession of by the falsities of evil.

7579. 'The land of Egypt' = scientific truth which belongs to the natural mind.

7634. 'What things I have wrought in Egypt' (Ex. x. 2) = what has befallen those in the other life who infest the upright.

7655. 'Knowest thou not yet that Egypt perisheth' (ver. 7) = that from what has taken place it may be known that all who assail these simple ones are cast into Hell, whence there is no escape. . . 'Egypt' = infestation, thus also those who infest.

7668³. 'The way of Egypt' = a perverted Scientific.

7674. 'Over the land of Egypt for the locust' (ver. 12) = that falsity may take possession of the whole Natural of those who infest. 7675. 7678. 7693.

7705. 'There was not one locust left in all the boundary of Egypt' (ver. 19) = that those falsities appeared no more in the extremes. . . 'Egypt' = the Natural.

7732. This is to be removed from the Egyptians, thus from those who are in mere falsities from evil, who are now signified by 'the Egyptians.'

7766. 'I will still bring one plague upon Pharaoh, and upon Egypt' (Ex. xi. 1) = the end of vastation, which is damnation. The plagues brought upon Egypt = successive states of vastation. . . The last is the damnation of faith separated from charity; for the first-born given to death in Egypt = the damnation of that faith. Ex. . . . 'Egypt' = the natural mind. 7778.

7772. 'The man Moses was very great in the land of Egypt' (ver. 3) = respect now for Divine truth . . . in the minds of those who infest.

7781^e. The Egyptians perverted all truths and goods by applications to evil uses.

7786. 'That ye may know that Jehovah doth distinguish between the Egyptians and Israel' (ver. 7) = that the nature of the difference between those who are in evil and those who are in good may be known. . . The 'Egyptians' before = those who are in falsity; but now, after they have been vastated as to the truths of the Church which they knew, they = those who are in evil; for by the death of the first-born is signified damnation, which is a state of evil.

7826. 'In the land of Egypt' (Ex. xii. 1) = when those of the Spiritual Church were still in the neighbourhood of those who infest. . . This neighbourhood is signified by the Sons of Israel being in the midst of the land of Egypt, or in the land of Goshen . . . 7940.

7844. 'Between the evenings' = the state of deliverance of those who are in truth from good, and the state of damnation of those who are in falsity from evil; which states are signified by the going out of the Sons of Israel from Egypt.

—². It also = the end of the state of infestations, and the beginning of the state of the damnation of those who are signified by 'the Egyptians.'

7869. 'I will pass through the land of Egypt' (ver. 12) = presence with those who have infested.

7898. 'In this same day I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt' (ver. 17) = that there was then a state of charity and faith, whereby separation was effected from those who were in evils and falsities.

7932^{1,2}. 'The Egyptians' = those who infested.

7964. 'Egypt was urgent upon the people in hastening to send them away out of the land' (ver. 33) = that from aversion and fear they pressed them to depart.

7980. 'Because they were driven out of Egypt, and could not stay' (ver. 39) = for they were removed by those who were in falsity from evil.

7983. 'The dwelling of the Sons of Israel which they dwelt in Egypt' (ver. 40) = the duration of infestations.

7988. 'All the armies of Jehovah went forth out of the land of Egypt' (ver. 41) = that those who were in truth from good, and were still detained there, were taken out . . . and delivered from infestations. 8100.

7990. 'To bring them forth out of the land of Egypt' (ver.42)=deliverance from spiritual captivity. 8049.

8065. 'Jehovah hath done to me in my going forth out of Egypt' (Ex.xiii.8)=that they were delivered by the Lord from spiritual captivity and from damnation. 8069.

8096. 'To repent and return to Egypt' (ver.17)=to go away from good, thus to decline from truth . . . and fall into falsities. 8097.

8125. (In Ex.xiv.) they who are in faith separated from charity are represented by 'the Egyptians' . . . Hell is signified by 'the Red Sea' . . . in which the Egyptians were immersed.

8154. 'The Egyptians pursued after them' (ver.9)=the effect from the endeavour to subjugate of those who were in falsities from evil. 8208.

8161. 'Behold, the Egyptian marching after them' (ver.10)=the oppressiveness of the falsity continually increasing. 'The Egyptian'=those who are in falsities from evil, thus also the falsity from evil itself.

8165. 'Were there no graves in Egypt, that thou hast taken us to die in the wilderness?' (ver.11)=that if there were damnation, it would be all the same whether it came through the falsities of the infesters, or through a state of temptations in which they yielded.

8166. 'What is this that thou hast done to us to bring us forth out of Egypt?' (id.)=that it was in vain that they had been delivered from infestations by falsities. 8167. 8168. 8169.

8174. 'The Egyptians whom ye see, ye shall not add to see them any more for ever' (ver.13)=that the falsities which are once removed will be removed to eternity.

8185². 'The land of Egypt' (Zech.x.10)=scientifics. . . 'The pride of Asshur shall be cast down, and the staff of Egypt shall recede' (ver.11)=that they shall not trust any longer in their own wisdom, but in wisdom from the Lord.

8186. 'Behold, I harden the heart of the Egyptians' (ver.17)=the obstinacy of falsity from evil.

8196. 'It came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel' (ver.20)=between the falsities of evil on the one side, and the goods of truth on the other.

8212. 'Jehovah looked forth to the camp of the Egyptians' (ver.24)=the extension thence of the Divine influx towards those who were endeavouring to do violence by means of falsities.

8214. 'And troubled the camp of the Egyptians' (id.)=that thence the extensions of falsity from evil relapsed upon them.

8217. 'The Egyptian said' (ver.25)=the thought of those who were in falsities from evil.

8219. 'Because Jehovah fights for them against the Egyptians' (id.)=that the Lord alone sustains the combat against falsities and evils.

8223. 'Let the waters return upon the Egyptians' (ver.26)=that the falsities from evil would flow back to them, and would environ those who are in falsities from evil.

8227. 'And the Egyptians fled to meet it' (ver.27)=that they themselves immersed themselves in falsities from evil.

8228. 'And Jehovah shook off the Egyptians into the midst of the sea' (id.)=that thus they themselves cast themselves into Hell, where there are falsities from evil.

8236. 'Jehovah saved Israel in this day out of the hand of the Egyptians' (ver.30)=that in this state the Lord protected those who were of the Spiritual Church from all violence from falsities from evil.

8237. 'And Israel saw the Egyptians dead on the sea shore' (id.)=the aspect of the damned scattered here and there.

8238. 'And Israel saw the great hand which Jehovah did against the Egyptians' (ver.31)=the acknowledgment of the Lord's omnipotence. . . 'The Egyptians'=those who are in damnation; now, those who are in Hell.

8313. (The Philistines) are distinguished from the Egyptians in this respect, that they exclude the goods of charity . . .

8364. See DISEASE at this ref.

8401. 'To their going forth out of the land of Egypt' (Ex.xvi.1)=to their state when first delivered from infestations. . . 'The land of Egypt'=infestations by those who are in evil and thence in falsities. 8528. 8570. 8646. 8751.

8407. 'We might have died by the hand of Jehovah in the land of Egypt' (ver.3)=that it would have been better for them to have been left by the Lord when they were in a state of infestations.

8409. 'The horses of Egypt' (Is.xxxi.)=scientifics from a perverted Intellectual.

8413². The former good or delight is meant by the flesh and bread in the land of Egypt.

8528. 'The Egyptians' and 'Pharaoh'=those who infested the upright in the other life; and who also infest them at this day. 8570. 8668. 8673. 8676. 8763.

8904⁴. 'The sons of Egypt'=scientifics. Refs.

9197. 'Because thou hast been sojourners in the land of Egypt' (Ex.xxii.20)=that they were protected from falsities and evils when they were infested by the infernals. 9270.

— The afflictions and oppressions of the Sons of Israel in Egypt=the infestations of the faithful who belonged to the Spiritual Church by the infernals before the Lord's Advent; and the protection and bringing out of the Sons of Israel from Egypt=the protection and deliverance of those who were of the Spiritual Church by the Lord while He was in the world, and when He rose again. 9292.

[A.] 9292. 'Thou wentest forth out of Egypt' (Ex. xliii.15)=deliverance from infestation by falsities.

9294¹. By the bringing forth of the Sons of Israel out of Egypt, the like was represented as by the first of the three feasts, which was named the passover.

9340. 'Egypt'=the Scientific in both senses, both true and false.

—⁶. 'The Sons of Israel brought up out of the land of Egypt' (Amos ix.7)=those who are initiated into spiritual truths and goods through scientific truths.

9341². 'A vine out of Egypt'=the Spiritual Church represented by the Sons of Israel.

9348⁴. 'The land of Egypt into which he was brought with hooks' (Ezek.xix.4)=the Scientific through which comes falsity.

9391⁸. The Ancient Church . . . was in Egypt; but in Egypt they cultivated the scientifics of that Church, whence they excelled in the knowledge of correspondences and representations . . . Hence it is that by 'Egypt' in the Word is signified the Scientific in general both as to truth and as to good; and also the Natural; for the Scientific belongs to the natural man.

9818². 'Egypt' (Is.xxxi.) = knowledge in general. Life 30. 79.

10156. The reason 'the land of Egypt'=Hell, is that by it in the genuine sense is signified the Natural and its Scientific; and to be brought out of the natural man and its Scientific, and elevated into the spiritual man and its intelligence and wisdom, is also to be brought out of Hell . . . for if man does not become spiritual he is in Hell; for the knowledge of the natural man . . . is in the light of the world . . .

10283⁹. 'To commit whoredom with the sons of Egypt great in flesh' (Ezek.xvi.)=to falsify the truths of the Church by means of scientifics which are solely from the natural man, thus by means of sensuous scientifics.

10292⁶. The things which were carried down to Egypt involve such things as are in the external or natural man; since by 'Egypt' is signified the Scientific, which is of the natural man.

10400. 'To make the Sons of Israel to come up out of the land of Egypt' (Ex.xxxii.1)=elevation out of the natural or external man to the internal or spiritual man, in order to become the Church; for by 'the land of Egypt' is signified the Natural or external of the Church. 10435.

10407³. The Egyptians were (in externals without an internal) more than others; and as they surpassed other nations in the knowledge of correspondences and representations, they made themselves various idols, as is evident from the Egyptian-Aegyptiacis-idols which still remain; but their primary idol was a calf . . .

10409. 'Which made thee come up out of the land of Egypt' (ver.4), when said concerning those who are in externals without an internal, = to lead themselves . . . which is not to be elevated out of the natural man to the spiritual, or out of the world to Heaven; but is to cast one's self down to Hell, thus from freedom into slavery. 10426.

10659. 'Because in the month Abib thou wentest forth out of Egypt' (Ex.xxxiv.18)=that then there was deliverance from Hell.

H. 307³. 'The Egyptian' (Is.xix.)=the Natural (of the man of the Spiritual Church).

—(d). That 'Egypt,' and 'the Egyptian,' in the Word, =the Natural, and consequently the Scientific. Refs.

S. 21. How the knowledge of correspondences came to be cultivated in Egypt, etc.

79⁴. 'Egypt' (Hos.ix.3)=the Scientific of the natural man.

102. The ancient Word was in Egypt, etc.

117. From these Words, religious things spread through Egypt and Ethiopia into the kingdoms of Africa.

P. 255². The ancients had the knowledge of correspondences . . . which was especially cultivated in Egypt; hence their hieroglyphics . . .

R. 134². In the Word, by 'Egypt' is signified the knowledge of the natural man.

298⁵. 'Egypt' (Dent.xvii.16)=knowledge and reasoning from our Own intelligence, whence is the falsification of the truth of the Word, which here is 'a horse.'

392². 'An altar to Jehovah in the midst of the land of Egypt'=the worship of the Lord from love in the natural man.

405³. These things are said to the king of Egypt (Ezek. xxix.) because by 'Egypt' is signified the Natural separated from the Spiritual.

444². The Natural of the Church, which also is the Scientific, is signified by Egypt and its river the Nile.

485². 'Egypt' (Is. xxxvi. 6; Ezek. xxix. 6)=the natural man who trusts in his own strength, wherefore it is called 'the staff of a bruised reed.'

502. 'Which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt' (Rev. xi. 8)=the two infernal loves, which are the love of dominion from the love of self, and the love of reigning from the pride of our own intelligence . . . (= by means of the evils of the love of self, and by means of the falsities thence. E. 653.)

503. What 'Egypt'=in the Word, shall be told. 'Egypt'=the natural man conjoined with the spiritual, and in this case, the affection of truth, and the consequent knowledge and intelligence. In the opposite sense, it=the natural man separated from the spiritual, and in this case, the pride of our own intelligence, and consequent insanity in spiritual things. (Both significations fully ill.)

—⁴. As the Egyptians became such, they were devastated as to all the goods and truths of the Church. Their devastations are described by the miracles performed there, which were the plagues, and which signified so many cupidities of the natural man separated from the spiritual, which acts solely from its own intelligence and the pride thereof.

—⁵. The reason 'Egypt'=both intelligence and insanity in spiritual things, is that the Ancient Church, which had spread into many kingdoms of Asia, was also in Egypt; and at that time the Egyptians more than others cultivated the knowledge of correspondences between spiritual and natural things, as is evident from the hieroglyphics there. But when that knowledge with them was turned into magic, and became idolatrous, their intelligence in spiritual things became insanity; hence 'Egypt,' in the opposite sense,=the latter.

T. 635. In seven chapters in the Revelation there is described the consummation of the present Church, in like manner as the devastation of Egypt is described; and both are described by the like plagues, each one of which signifies some falsity which furthered its devastation even to destruction; wherefore also this Church which is at this day destroyed, is called 'Egypt' (Rev. xi. 8). (A parallel drawn between the plagues of Egypt, and those of the Revelation.)

—⁶. The reason the like things are said of Egypt, and of the Church whose consummation and end are described in the Revelation, is that by 'Egypt' is meant a Church which in the beginning was pre-eminent; wherefore 'Egypt,' before its Church was devastated, is compared to the garden of Eden, and to the garden of Jehovah (Gen. xiii. 10; Ezek. xxxi. 8); and is also called 'the corner stone of the tribes, the son of the wise, and of the kings of antiquity' (Is. xix. 11, 13).

D. 475^{8e}. These things are what are described by 'Egypt' in the Prophets; for 'Egypt'=knowledge, thus natural theology.

4777. How the Heavenly doctrine would proceed in Africa . . . After a time it would turn itself back through an interior tract even towards Egypt.

5406. On the way, (the Babylonians who had lived in good) borrowed silver and garments from the others, as the Sons of Israel did from the Egyptians; which signified Knowledges from those who were in Knowledges. The Egyptians from whom they borrowed these things, were Protestants who were not in good, although they were in truths. 5412.

E. 141³. 'The sons of Egypt with whom she has committed whoredom' (Ezek. xvi.)=scientifics and Knowledges of every kind wrongly applied to confirm falsities.

—⁹. The Sons of Israel did not want to enter into Canaan, but to return to Egypt; the Land of Canaan=Heaven and the Church with their truths; and Egypt=these falsified and turned into magic.

—¹³. The like is signified by their being commanded to borrow from the Egyptians gold, silver, and garments; for by the Egyptians are signified scientifics of every kind which are used to falsify truths.

193⁹. By the Egyptians are represented those who are merely natural, and yet possess many Knowledges.

223¹⁴. 'Egypt'=the natural man and his Scientific.

235⁴. 'Egypt'=the Knowledge of things both spiritual and natural.

275². 'The Egyptians'=the knowledges which are of the natural man.

—¹⁹. 'A bird out of Egypt'=a concordant Scientific.

279⁸. As a calf=the good of the natural man, and his truth, which is the Scientific; and the natural man and his Scientific are also signified by 'Egypt,' 'Egypt' is in the Word called 'a calf;' wherefore, also, after they had applied the scientifics of the Church to things magical and idolatrous, they turned the calf into an idol . . .

328¹⁶. 'My people went down into Egypt to sojourn there' (Is. lii. 4)=the instruction of the natural man by means of scientifics and by means of the Knowledges of truth. 'Egypt'=scientifics and also Knowledges, but such as are from the sense of the letter of the Word; and 'to sojourn'=to be instructed.

340¹⁵. 'The evil languors of Egypt' (Deut. vii. 15)=falsities originating from the evils in the natural man.

—¹⁸. By 'Israel,' 'Asshur,' and 'Egypt,' are signified the three things which exist with the men of the Church; namely, the Spiritual, the Rational, and the Scientific. . . As the whole Rational of man is formed by means of scientifics, and both from the Spiritual which is out of Heaven from the Lord—for all the intelligence of truth, and all the application of knowledges to truth is thence—it is said that ‘there shall be a path out of Egypt into Asshur, in order that Asshur may come into Egypt, and Egypt into Asshur;’ and that ‘the Egyptians shall serve with Asshur;’ and afterwards that ‘Israel shall be the third with Egypt and Asshur, a blessing in the midst of the land.’ ‘The midst’=the inmost, from which are all the rest. . . And as the Spiritual is that from which the Rational and the Scientific are applied to genuine truths, Israel is called ‘the inheritance,’ or the heir of the house, who possesses all things; and Asshur ‘the work of My hands,’ because the Rational is thence formed; and Egypt is called ‘the blessed people,’ because in the Scientific, as in their ultimate, all things are together. 388²⁰, 585¹³.

[E.] 355³⁶. By ‘Egypt’ in the Word is signified the Scientific which is in the natural man; consequently, also, the natural man; and as the natural man with the Scientific which is in it has not any understanding, but only thought from the memory, which is a species of imagination from the objects it has seen and heard, and which is beneath the Spiritual, in which nevertheless reside all the truths and goods of Heaven and the Church,—hence by ‘Egypt’ in very many places is signified a false Scientific; for, when the spiritual man does not flow in, the scientifics of the natural man are turned into mere falsities, and his thoughts into confirmations of falsity and into reasonings therefrom against truths. Hence may be evident what is signified by ‘the horses of Egypt,’ and by ‘its chariots’ (Is.xxxi.1) . . . These things are signified by ‘Woe to them that go down to Egypt’ . . . Wherefore, also, it is said, ‘Egypt is man, and not God; and his horses are flesh, and not spirit’ . . .

386⁸. ‘Egypt’ (Jer.xlii.)=the Natural; and ‘to come into Egypt,’ and ‘to sojourn there’=to become natural.

— That ‘Egypt’=the Scientific which is of the natural mind; that consequently it=the Natural; and that ‘the land of Egypt’=the natural mind. III.

391¹³. ‘Egypt’=the natural man and his Scientific.

— ‘Five cities in the land of Egypt speaking with the lips of Canaan’=a number of truths of doctrine which are genuine truths of the Church.

— ‘An altar to Jehovah in the midst of the land of Egypt’=the worship of the Lord from the good of love through true scientifics which are in the natural man. . . True scientifics are also Knowledges from the sense of the letter of the Word.

— ‘The boundary of Egypt’=the extremes: the extremes of the natural man are sensuous things.

401²¹. ‘Egypt’=the natural man such as he is from birth; to wit, that he is in mere falsities from evil.

405¹⁵. ‘A vine out of Egypt’=the Spiritual Church, which begins with man by means of scientifics and Knowledges in the natural man.

406³. ‘Egypt’=the Scientific of the natural man. 410⁶.

410⁶. ‘The fly in the extremity of the rivers of Egypt’=the falsity in the extremes of the natural man.

419¹⁸. ‘To carry down oil into Egypt’ (Hos.xii.1)

431⁹. As by ‘Egypt’ is signified scientific truths which are in the natural man, and upon these are founded the truths from good which are the truths of the spiritual man, Egypt is called ‘the corner stone of the tribes.’

433¹³. ‘Egypt shall be for a waste, and Edom for the wilderness of a waste’ (Joel.iv.19)=that the principles of falsity and the evils of the love of self, both from the natural man, will be destroyed.

439⁶. That the natural man, when he is subjugated, will supply concordant scientifics, and Knowledges of truth and good, is signified by ‘fat ones shall come out of Egypt’ (Ps.lxviii.31). ‘Egypt’=the natural man as to scientifics.

440². In order that such things might be represented by Ephraim and Manasseh, they were born to Joseph in the land of Egypt; for . . . by the land of Egypt is signified the Natural . . .

448³. When Joseph was carried down into Egypt, and obtained dominion over the whole of that land, and invited thither his father and his brethren, and nourished them, and so long as he was the lord of the land, by the land of Egypt was represented the Spiritual Church in the Natural, and by Jacob and his sons the Spiritual Church; but the end of the representation of the Spiritual Church in the Natural by Egypt, took place when Moses was born and began to lead the Sons of Israel out of Egypt.

—¹⁶. That at that time the Church on earth was established by Him, is meant by, ‘Then came Israel into Egypt’ (Ps.ev.23) . . . For the establishment of the Church by the Lord was represented by the coming of the Sons of Israel into Egypt; and also by the Lord being brought down into Egypt when He was an infant.

502⁶. ‘The outcasts from the land of Egypt’ (Is.xxvii.13)=those who have been deceived by means of scientifics; thus the gentiles who have been in falsities from ignorance of truth.

503³. By ‘the Egyptians’ (at the time of the plagues) are signified merely natural men . . . and by the plagues of Egypt, those changes which precede the Last Judgment; in like manner as do these in the Revelation; for by the sinking of Pharaoh and the Egyptians in the Red Sea, was represented the Last Judgment and damnation.

513¹. The reason a like plague took place in Egypt, was that by ‘Egypt’ is signified the natural man as to his Scientific, or the Scientific which is of the natural man. By 'the river of Egypt' is signified intelligence acquired by means of scientifics.

514¹⁵. 'The Egyptians'=merely natural men: that 'Jehovah shall bring them back into Egypt in ships' (Dent.xxviii.68)=that they would be merely natural through the doctrinal things of falsity.

518¹⁶. By 'a vine out of Egypt' are meant the Sons of Israel. . . Their stay in Egypt represented the first initiation into the things of the Church; for 'Egypt' signified the scientifics which are of service to the things of the Church. . . 654¹⁷.

—²⁸. 'The rivers of Egypt' (Is.xxxvii.25)=Knowledge and apperceptions of truth, because 'Egypt'=the natural man as to scientifics; and Knowledge and apperception belong to the natural man.

—³⁰. 'The staff of Egypt shall recede' (Zech.x.11)=that the scientifics which are of service to reasonings shall avail nothing.

—³⁸. 'Egypt riseth up like a flood' (Jer.xlvi.8). . . By 'Egypt' is signified scientifics which confirm.

532³. 'Egypt' (Is.xx.3)=the external or Natural as to the Scientific. . .

—¹⁰. As by 'Egypt' is signified the natural man as to the Scientific there. . . Egypt is called in the Word 'a furnace of iron.' Ill.

543⁶. The Egyptian-Aegyptiacae-plagues = spiritual plagues; and the plague of locusts, the destruction of the whole natural man through an irruption of evil and falsity from the Sensuous. By 'Egypt' is signified the natural man as to the Scientific and as to pleasure therein. . . Therefore it is said that 'the locust shall come up upon all the land of Egypt'. . . By 'the land of Egypt' is signified the Natural with the men of the Church. —

555⁷. 'To commit whoredom in Egypt'=to falsify truths by means of the scientifics which belong to the natural man; and to falsify truths there, is to turn holy things into magical ones, as the Egyptians did.

559⁹. 'There shall be no work for Egypt' (Is.xix.15). By 'Egypt' is signified knowledge both of spiritual things and of natural things. That 'there shall be no work for it which the head or the tail may do'=that it does not possess spiritual things, or natural things which confirm spiritual ones.

569⁴. The river of Egypt (as one of the boundaries of Canaan)=the knowledge of the natural man.

—⁵. Therefore the two rivers, the river of Egypt, or the Nile, and the river of Assyria, or the Euphrates, signified the boundaries of the Church, and also introductions into the Church; for the Knowledge and knowledges which are signified by the river of Egypt do introduce; for without Knowledge and knowledges no one can be introduced into the Church, or perceive the things which belong to the Church. . .

—¹⁶. To investigate spiritual things by means of the scientifics of the natural man, is signified by, 'What hast thou to do with the way of Egypt that thou drinkest the waters of Sihor?' (Jer.ii.18). . . Egypt and its river = the scientifics of the natural man.

—¹⁹. 'Against the army of Pharaoh king of Egypt. . .' (Jer.xlvi.2). By these words is signified the destruction of the Church and its truths by means of false reasonings from scientifics. . . By 'Egypt' and its 'army' are signified scientifics which confirm.

576⁷. 'Broidered work from Egypt' (Ezek.xxvii.7)=the knowledge of such things as are of the Church. . .

624¹¹. 'By a prophet Jehovah made Israel to come up out of Egypt' (Hos.xii.13). . . By 'Egypt' is meant the natural man, who, when separated from the spiritual man, is damned; therefore (these words)=that by means of the Divine truth, the Lord leads out of damnation those who are in truths from good.

627⁹. 'The rivers of Egypt shall be diminished and dried up' (Is.xix.6)=that all things of natural intelligence will perish. . . 'Egypt'=what is natural.

—¹⁰. 'Thou hast trusted upon the staff of this bruised reed, upon Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it; so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust upon him' (Is.xxxvi.6). By 'Egypt' is signified the natural man separated from the spiritual, and his Scientific, which, when separated from the intelligence of the spiritual man, is foolish, and is applied to confirm evils of every kind; wherefore it is a false Scientific. . .

—¹². 'Egypt' (Ezek.xxix.7), here, too, =the natural man separated from the spiritual, and that its Scientific applied to evils is mere falsity. These things are said of those in the Church who trust in their Own intelligence.

—¹³. 'Fat ones out of Egypt' (Ps.lxviii.31)=those who are in the knowledge of spiritual things. . . who will accede to the Lord's Kingdom, because they are in light from the spiritual man.

633². 'Egypt shall not be inhabited forty years; I will give Egypt for a waste in the midst of the desolate lands. . .' (Ezek.xxix.12). By 'Egypt' is signified the Church as to scientific truths, upon which doctrine is founded. The scientific truths at that time were the knowledges of correspondences and representations, upon which was founded the doctrine of their Church. But as the Egyptians turned these knowledges into magic, and thus perverted the Church, its vastation is (here) described. That 'Egypt shall be scattered among the nations, and dispersed into the lands'=that evils and falsities will take complete possession of that Church, and will pervert all its scientifics. Hence it is evident, that by 'forty years' is signified its plenary state of vastation . . . But the beginning of a new Church, which is signified by the end of the forty years, is meant by these words: 'At the end of forty years will I gather together the Egyptians from the peoples whither they were scattered; and I will bring back the captivity of Egypt' (ver. 13, 14).

654. That 'Egypt,' here, (Rev. xi. 8)=the natural man separated from the spiritual, and thence falsities flowing forth from the evils of the love of self, and therefore from the pride of man's Own intelligence. Ex.

—². But as by 'Egypt' is signified the natural man in both senses, namely, both conjoined with the spiritual man, and separated from it—thus in a good sense, and in an evil sense—by 'Egypt' are also signified various things which belong to the natural man, which in general relate to Knowledges and scientifics; for the truths and falsities of the natural man are called Knowledges and scientifics.

—³. The reason that by 'Egypt' in the Word is signified the natural man in both senses. . . consequently all that which properly belongs to the natural man, was that in Egypt they cultivated knowledges, especially the knowledges of correspondences and representations . . . But as they made for themselves images according to correspondences, which, when from being internal men they became entirely external, they began to worship with a holy rite, and thus made for themselves idols, and therefore turned the representatives of spiritual and celestial things into idolatrous ones, and also into magical ones; hence it is that by 'Egypt' in the Word, in a bad sense . . . is signified the false Scientific of the natural man; and also what is idolatrous and magical.

—⁴. Concerning this matter, namely, the conjunction of the spiritual man with the natural, and the separation of the natural man from the spiritual, it treats in many places in the Word, especially where it treats of Egypt; because by 'Egypt' is signified the natural man both conjoined with the spiritual man, and separated from it; and where it treats of the natural man separated from the spiritual, Egypt is censured and rejected. And as by 'Egypt' in a wide sense is signified the natural man, by 'Egypt' is also signified a true Scientific and a false Scientific; for the truths and falsities which are in the natural man are called scientifics. And as true and false scientifics are signified by 'Egypt,' faith is also signified by it, since faith is of truth and truth is of faith; whence faith conjoined with charity is also signified by 'Egypt' in a good sense; and faith separated from charity, in a bad sense; for faith conjoined with charity exists when the spiritual man is conjoined with the natural, and then by 'Egypt' are signified true scientifics; whereas faith separated from charity exists when the natural man is separated from the spiritual, and then by 'Egypt' is signified a false Scientific . . .

—⁶. Wherefore, it is first to be demonstrated from the Word, that by 'Egypt' is signified the natural man conjoined with the spiritual, or a Scientific vivified by the influx of spiritual light; or, what is like this, faith conjoined with charity, which in itself is faith. And afterwards it shall be demonstrated, that by 'Egypt' in the opposite sense is signified the natural man separated from the spiritual, or a Scientific not vivified by any influx of spiritual life; or, what is like this, faith separated from charity, which in itself is not faith. Fully ill.

—⁷. 'Egypt' (in Is. xix. 18-25)=the natural man conjoined with the spiritual, thus = the nations and peoples who have been outside the Church; and as they have not been in truths they have been natural men; but when they heard the Gospel they acknowledged the Lord, and thence being instructed in the truths of doctrine, they received faith. . . 'Five cities in the land of Egypt speaking with the lip of Canaan'=that with them there will be many doctrinal things according to the truths of doctrine of their Church. . . 'The land of Egypt'=the Church of such gentiles. . . 'In that day there shall be an altar to Jehovah in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at its boundary to Jehovah'=that then there will be the worship of the Lord from the goods of charity and thence from the truths of faith in all things which belong to the natural man. . . 'Then shall Jehovah be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know Jehovah in that day'=the acknowledgment of the Lord and of His Divine. . . 'Thus shall Jehovah smite Egypt, in smiting and in healing. . . '=temptations, and thus conversion, and healing from falsities by means of truths. 'In that day there shall be a path from Egypt into Asshur, so that Asshur shall come into Egypt, and Egypt into Asshur'=that then they will have the Rational opened by means of true scientifics, so that a man shall view the scientifics which belong to the natural man rationally and thus intelligently: 'Egypt'=the Scientific of the natural man. . . 'In that day Israel shall be the third with Egypt and with Asshur, a blessing in the midst of the land'=influx into both from spiritual light. . . 'Egypt'=the natural man who has light from the world. . . 'Blessed be Egypt My people'=the natural man enlightened.

—¹². 'That the extension of the Land of Canaan, by which is signified the Church, was from the river of Egypt to the river of Assyria. Ill. . . For the Church, which in itself is spiritual, is terminated in the natural man, to wit, in his Rational and Scientific. . .

—¹⁴. 'The rivers of Egypt'=the knowledge of the natural man from a spiritual origin.

— 'The rivers of Egypt'=the intelligence of the natural man from scientifics, which are from a spiritual origin when they are applied to confirm the truths of the Church which are spiritual.

—¹⁵. As every man with whom the Church is to be implanted, is first to be instructed in scientifics; for without the introduction of the natural man through scientifics, which also are matters of varied experience from worldly things and intercourse with men, man cannot become rational; and if he does not become rational neither can he become spiritual . . . and as the Church was to be instituted with the Sons of Israel, the natural man with them was therefore to be instructed first, that is to say, in truths naturally and also scientifically understood. In order that this might be represented and signified, it came to pass that Abraham . . . sojourned in Egypt with his wife . . . and afterwards that Jacob with his sons . . . by command went into Egypt, and dwelt in Goshen, which was the best of the lands of Egypt . . . and this in order that they might first be instructed in truths naturally and scientifically, before they were instructed in them spiritually; for everyone acquires a Rational by means of truths scientifically and naturally understood, into which the Spiritual can flow and operate . . . Thus man founds the Church with himself. Wherefore it is said of Abraham and of Jacob, that on account of a famine in the Land of Canaan they went into Egypt to sojourn there . . .

—¹⁹. As by 'Israel' in the supreme sense is meant the Lord, He Himself, when an infant, was carried down into Egypt . . . by which is signified the Lord's first instruction . . . But this withdrawal into Egypt only represented the instruction . . .

—²⁰. From these things it may be evident what is meant by 'Egypt' where it treats of the Church to be established by the Lord. III.

— 'The labour of Egypt, and the merchandise of Ethiopia and of the Sabians' (Is. xlv. 14) = the delight of natural love from the acquisition of the Knowledges of truth and good . . .

—²¹. By 'the fat ones out of Egypt,' are signified the gentiles who are in the affection of knowing truths.

—²². It is said 'as a bird out of Egypt' (Hos. xi.), because a bird = thoughts from true scientifics.

—²³. 'From the ear of the river to the river of Egypt, which Jehovah shall shake off' (Is. xxvii. 12) = all rational and scientific truth which is of service to the Spiritual. . . That those will accede to the Church who otherwise would perish through reasonings from scientifics applied to the confirmation of falsities, is signified by 'they shall come that were perishing in the land of Asshur, and the outcasts from the land of Egypt . . .

—²⁴. 'The pride of Asshur shall be cast down, and the staff of Egypt shall recede' (Zech. x. 11) = that reasonings from scientifics confirming the evils and falsities of the natural man shall be dispersed. . . 'The staff of Egypt' = the Scientific confirming.

—²⁵. 'At the end of forty years I will gather Egypt out of the peoples . . .' (Ezek. xxix.). By 'Egypt,' here, is signified the Church with those who are in moral life from natural lumen. . . The scientifics by which they have confirmed falsities, are signified by 'Egypt which Jehovah will gather from the peoples whither they have been scattered.'

—²⁶. That they who are in natural lumen from scientifics alone, and with whom good cannot be implanted through truths, will be in evils and falsities of every kind, is signified by, 'If the family of Egypt go not up, there shall be the plague wherewith Jehovah shall smite the nations' (Zech. xiv. 18).

—²⁷. The natural affection of knowing truths from a spiritual affection, is signified by 'Egypt,' 'Ethiopia,' and 'Seba' (Is. xliii. 3).

—²⁸. As by 'Egypt' is signified the natural man, and all the intelligence of the spiritual man is ended and founded in the natural man, and in his Knowledges and scientifics, on which account man, without them, is not intelligent and wise, and not even rational—for the spiritual man acts as one with the natural man as cause does with effect; and it acts as one through correspondences—hence it is that in ancient times, when the Representative Church was in Egypt also, the King of Egypt or Pharaoh was called 'the son of the wise,' and 'the son of the kings of antiquity;' and Egypt was called 'the corner stone of the tribes.'

—²⁹. Therefore, also, it is said of Solomon . . . that 'his wisdom . . . was before all the wisdom of the Egyptians' . . . By 'the Egyptians' are meant all who are learned from knowledges, especially from the knowledge of correspondences, and are thence in intelligence; wherefore also the knowledges of the Egyptians are called 'things stored up of gold and silver,' and 'desirable things,' in Daniel xi. 43.

—³⁰. Therefore, also, the Sons of Israel were commanded, when they went out of Egypt, 'to borrow of the Egyptians vessels of gold, and vessels of silver, and garments' . . . The knowledges and Knowledges of truth and good (thus signified) were forcibly taken away from Egypt, because they had applied them to confirm evils and falsities, and had turned them into things idolatrous and magical; wherefore, when the Egyptians were deprived of them, and had thus become merely natural, they were shortly afterwards sunk in the Red Sea; by which was represented the lot of those who abuse knowledges to confirm evils and falsities; for after death they are deprived of all knowledge of good and truth, and are then cast into Hell . . .

—³¹. As by 'Egypt' is signified the knowledge from which man has intelligence, it is said of Tyre, 'Fine linen of brodered work from Egypt was the expansion, which was for an ensign to her' (Ezek. xxxvii. 7). . . By 'fine linen of brodered work from Egypt' is signified the Scientific from spiritual truth . . .

—³². As all the scientifics which are of service to the spiritual man for the confirmation of truths are from the Lord, namely, all the application of them to confirm the truths and goods of Heaven and the Church, Joseph 'was carried down into Egypt,' and there made the ruler of the whole land; (for) as the Natural of man is to be subordinated to the Spiritual . . . Joseph was made the lord of Egypt . . .

—³³. As Solomon represented the Lord as to both the Celestial and the Spiritual Kingdoms, and all who are of those Kingdoms are in intelligence and wisdom by means of the Knowledges of truth and good, and by means of the scientifics which confirm them, Solomon 'took the daughter of Pharaoh to wife, and brought her into the city of David' (1 Kings iii. 1); and also afterwards 'built for the daughter of Pharaoh a house near the porch' (vii. 8); by which there was also represented, that the knowledge upon which all intelligence and wisdom are founded, is signified by 'Egypt' in a good sense . . .

—³⁴. Man is born natural, and first draws in scientifics from a master and parent, also from the reading of books, and at the same time from life in the world; and unless the man becomes spiritual . . . he applies the scientifics which he draws in to confirm the appetites and pleasures of the natural man, in a word, his loves, which are all contrary to Divine order; and it is this natural man which is signified by 'Egypt' in the opposite sense. II.

[E. 654]⁸⁵. That falsity will destroy the whole natural man, and all things which are there, through application to evils, is signified by 'the sword shall come into Egypt, and they shall take her multitude, and overturn her foundations' (Ezek.xxx.4). That there are no confirmations and corroborations of truth by means of the scientifics of the natural man, is signified by 'they that support Egypt shall fall, and the pride of her strength shall come down' (ver.6). . . Evil cupidities from the natural man are signified by 'the fire which Jehovah shall set into Egypt' (ver.8) . . . That thus the Church will be devastated through the falsities of evil doing violence to the goods of charity and the truths of faith, is signified by 'the violent of the nations shall be brought to destroy the land, and they shall draw their sword against Egypt, to fill the land with the slain' (ver.11). . . . That there is not any truth which is the head, and consequently not any truth of life from the Lord, is signified by 'there shall be no more a prince from the land of Egypt' (ver.13). That nothing but evils from the love of self will take possession of the natural man, is signified by 'I will set fire into Egypt, and I will scatter Egypt among the nations' (ver.16, 23).

—⁴¹. By 'Egypt which is vanity and emptiness' (Is.xxx.7), is signified both the Sensuous and the Natural, which, regarded in themselves, are devoid of good and devoid of truths.

—⁴². By these words (in Is.xxxi.) is described the state of those who want to be wise from themselves . . . in the things which are of Heaven and the Church . . . and as such are merely natural, and therefore take all things from the fallacies of the senses and from scientifics evilly applied, they pervert and falsify the truths and goods of the Church; wherefore it is said of them, 'Woe to them that go down into Egypt for help, and do not look to the Holy One of Israel, and do not seek Jehovah' (ver.1). The imaginary things which are from the fallacies of the senses, are signified by 'the horses of Egypt on which they stay' . . . That the natural man does not understand Divine things from himself, is signified by 'Egypt is a man, and not God' (ver.3). That the intelligence is from the proprium, in which there is no life, is signified by 'his horses are flesh, and not spirit': the horses of Egypt=the imaginary things which in themselves are dead because they are fallacies.

—⁴³. Here, (in Jer.xlvi.), by 'Egypt' is also signified the natural man with his scientifics separated from the spiritual, which takes place through the pride of man's Own intelligence, which through reasonings from scientifics destroys the truths and goods of the Church. For by 'the army of the king of Egypt, which was by the river Euphrates' (ver.2) are signified scientifics falsely applied, and reasonings from them . . . 'Egypt cometh up as a flood, and the waters are moved like the floods' (ver.8)=the natural man reasoning from himself . . . against the truths of the Church. . . 'Go up into Gilead, and take balm, daughter of Egypt' (ver.11)=the truths of the sense of the letter of the Word, and thence reasoning and support. . . By 'the daughter of Egypt' is signified the affection of falsity which appertains to such a Church.

—⁴⁷. That truth is not to have dominion over good, is signified by 'He shall not lead the people back into Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses' (Deut. xvii.16).

—⁴⁸. That by 'Egypt' is signified the natural man separated from his spiritual man, may also be evident from these things (in Is.xix.1-17) when regarded in the spiritual sense; and man becomes merely natural, when in his life he does not look to the Lord, but to himself and the world. Hence he has the pride of his Own intelligence, which is general with the learned; and with them perverts the Rational, and shuts up the spiritual mind. In order that it may be known that the natural man is signified by 'Egypt'; man's Own intelligence, by its 'river'; and falsities, by 'the waters of the river of Egypt,' I will explain these things . . . seriatim. 'Jehovah rideth upon a swift cloud, and cometh into Egypt' (ver.1)=the visitation of the natural man from Divine truth spiritual natural. . . 'The idols of Egypt shall be moved before Him, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it' (id.)=a mass and crowd of falsities in the natural man, from which is the worship; and its terror on account of the visitation. 'I will shut up Egypt in the hand of a hard lord, and a fierce king shall rule over them' (ver.4)=that the evil of falsity and the falsity of evil will reign there. . . 'Zoan' and 'Noph' were in the land of Egypt, and signified the enlightenment of the natural man from spiritual light. 'They have seduced Egypt, the corner stone of the tribes' (ver.13)=that the natural man is perverted, in which are yet nevertheless founded all the truths and goods of the Church. 'There shall be no work for Egypt, which the head and tail, branch and rush, may do' (ver.15)=that they no longer have either the intelligence or the knowledge of truth, and therefore neither spiritual truth nor natural truth.

—⁵². 'That all the inhabitants of Egypt may know that I am Jehovah' (Ezek.xxix.6)=that they may know and believe that all truth and good even in the natural man are from the Lord. . . 'That the land of Egypt shall become a solitude and a waste' (ver.9)=that consequently the natural man is devoid of all truth and devoid of all good. . . 'I will give the land of Egypt for a waste from the tower of Syene even to the border of Ethiopia' (ver.10)=the destruction of the Church from princes to ultimates in the natural man.

—⁵⁵. 'They have called Egypt, and they have gone away to Assyria' (Hos.vii.11)=that they have trusted in the scientifics of the natural man and thence in reasonings, which are deceptive. . . 'This is their derision in the land of Egypt' (ver.16)=the vituperation of the doctrine from the natural man, and its contempt.

—⁵⁶. 'Ephraim shall return into Egypt' (Hos.ix.3)=the understanding of truth destroyed, whence they have become natural. . . 'Egypt shall gather them' (ver.6)=that they have become merely natural.

—⁵⁷. 'Israel shall not return into Egypt' (Hos.xi.5)=that a man who has become of the Spiritual Church will not become natural. . . For man is first natural, afterwards he becomes rational, and at last spiritual. When man is natural, he is in Egypt . . .

—⁵⁸. By 'oil being carried down into Egypt' (Hos. xii. 1)=that the good of love is perverted through the scientifics of the natural man.

—⁵⁹. 'Who depart to go down into Egypt, and have not asked at My mouth' (Is. xxx. 2)=from the proprium of the natural man, and not from the Word. 'To trust in the shadow of Egypt' (id.)=lest they trust and have faith in such things as are of the natural man, who is in no light of Heaven. 'Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be for shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt for ignominy' (ver. 3)=no capacity of resisting evils from man's Own intelligence, nor from the knowledge of the natural man.

—⁶⁰. 'What hast thou to do with the way of Egypt, to drink the waters of Sihor?' (Jer. ii. 18)=instruction solely from the natural man, whence come mere falsities. . . . 'Thou shalt also be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria' (ver. 36)=a perverted and vile state to be led by the natural man and by reasonings thence, because one is thus led by the falsities and evils which are from proprium.

—⁶¹. As to be instructed by ourselves is to be instructed by the natural man and his scientifics and the conclusions therefrom, it is said 'We have given the hand to Egypt, to Assyria, that we may be satisfied with bread' (Lam. v. 6). By 'Egypt' is signified the natural man whence come falsities . . .

—⁶². We often read in the historicals and also in the propheticals of the Word, that the Israelitish people burned with the desire to return into Egypt, and that this was forbidden them, and that plagues and penalties were denounced against them to prevent them from doing so. . . The reason was, that the Sons of Israel were to represent the Church from its first rise to its end; and the Church is first formed with man by means of knowledges and Knowledges in the natural man. . . In a word, man must first enrich the memory with knowledges, afterwards his understanding must be cultivated thereby, and at last his will. The memory is of the natural man; the understanding is of the rational, and the will is of the spiritual man. . . Therefore the Sons of Israel were first brought into Egypt, afterwards underwent temptations in the wilderness, and at last were brought into the Land of Canaan. . . By their stay and sojourn in Egypt, was represented the instruction of the natural man; by their wanderings for forty years in the wilderness, were represented the temptations by means of which the rational man is formed; and by the Land of Canaan . . . was represented the Church, which, regarded in itself, is spiritual. But they who do not want to be reformed and regenerated, stop at the beginning of the way, and remain natural. Wherefore, the Sons of Israel, who did not want it, so often desired to return into Egypt . . . for they were natural . . . and yet they had to represent the things of the Spiritual Church. . . Hence it may be evident why the Sons of Israel were so severely prohibited from returning into Egypt; for by doing so they would have represented that from being a spiritual man they had become natural; and when the spiritual man becomes natural, he no longer sees and perceives any truths and goods, but falls into falsities and evils of every kind.

—⁶⁷. By 'Egypt' (in Ezek. xxxiii.) is signified the natural man separated from the spiritual. . . 'There were two women the daughters of one mother, who committed whoredom in Egypt' (ver. 2, 3)=falsifications of truth and of good; and as the sons of Jacob were merely natural men, they became imbued with the idolatrous things of the Egyptians, by which is signified that they falsified all the truths of the Church. (Explained at great length.) —⁷¹.

—⁷². 'Egypt shall be for a waste' (Joel iv. 19)=that the natural man will be devoid of truths, and consequently in mere falsities.

—⁷³. The wars between the Sons of Israel and the Egyptians involve like things . . . and also those between the Assyrians and the Egyptians. III.

— By 'the king of Egypt taking away the treasures of the house of Jehovah and of the house of the king' (1 Kings xiv. 25, 26), was represented the devastation of the Church as to the Knowledges of good and truth by the scientifics which are in the natural man falsely applied.

—⁷⁴. The quality of the natural man when subordinate and thus conjoined with the spiritual, is described by Joseph (in Egypt), and by the sons of Israel called thither, and dwelling in the land of Goshen, which was the best of the lands of Egypt. Where it treats of Joseph, there is described the dominion of the Lord over the natural man . . . But afterwards, there is described the quality of the natural man when separated from the spiritual, by Pharaoh making the Sons of Israel serve in a grievous manner; and its vastation as to all the truths and goods of the Church, is afterwards described . . . by the plagues inflicted there; and its final destruction, by the sinking of Pharaoh and his whole army in the Red Sea . . .

655². These two Kingdoms into which the Hells are distinguished, are meant by 'Sodom and Egypt.'

659¹. 'The multitude of Egypt'=the scientifics of the natural man . . .

706²⁴. Those of the Church who have become natural, are meant by 'those who have sojourned in Egypt, and have returned thence' (Jer. xli. 28).

721¹⁸. 'Egypt,' 'Siu,' and 'No' (Ezek. xxx. 15)=the scientifics and the fallacies of the natural man which obstruct the reformation of man by means of truths from the Word.

[E.] 727¹⁹. 'The staff of Egypt'=power from the confirmation of falsities by means of the scientifics of the natural man.

730²⁰. 'Egypt,' and 'Edom' (Joel iv.)=the natural man who has perverted the truths and goods of the Word . . .

—²¹. The state of the natural man before he is regenerated, is represented by their stay in the land of Egypt; for the land of Egypt signified the natural man with scientifics and Knowledges, together with the cupidities and appetites which reside in it.

—²⁹. 'The wilderness of the land of Egypt' (Ezek. xx. 36)=the state of the natural man before regeneration.

—⁴⁰. 'The day when she came up out of the land of Egypt' (Hos. ii. 15)=when from natural they have become spiritual.

734²³. The natural man separated from the spiritual is signified by 'Egypt.' His crowd of false reasonings and combatings against the truths and goods of the spiritual man, is signified by 'I will mix up the Egyptian against the Egyptian . . .' 746⁶.

799¹⁴. That the natural man and his cupidity will destroy them, is signified by, 'Egypt shall gather them, Moph shall bury them' (Hos. ix. 6).

811⁸. 'Nebuchadnezzar shall come and smite the land of Egypt' (Jer. xliii. 11)=the destruction of the natural man as to all goods and thence truths from the Word . . . 'To kindle a fire in the houses of Egypt' (ver. 12)=that the loves of self and of the world will destroy all things of the natural man.

827⁷. 'Egypt'=the natural truths which are called scientifics.

846². In many passages, 'Egypt'=the natural understanding of the Word.

1029¹⁵. 'Whoredom in Egypt'=the falsification of truth from the natural man, which is effected by means of fallacies, appearances, and scientifics.

Coro. 27². 'Egypt,' and 'Asshur,' in a good sense, =the Church as to Knowledges and as to perceptions.

41³. The consummation of the Noetic Church in Egypt is described by the sinking of Pharaoh and the Egyptians in the Red Sea.

Ehrenpreus. D. 5996.

Eighth. Octavus.

A. 2044. 'A son of eight days' (Gen. xvii. 12)=every beginning of purification. 'A week'=an entire period . . . and as the eighth day is the first day of the week following, it here=every beginning. Hence it is also evident, that as the circumcision itself was a representative of purification, so also is the time (when it was to be performed), namely, the eighth day.

2633. 'A son of eight days' (Gen. xxi. 4)=a beginning and a continuation.

2866. 'These eight did Mileah bear' (Gen. xxii. 23)=the second class of those who are saved. . . As the eighth day is the first of the week following, 'eight'=something else which is distinct from what was before.

3325⁸. The reason (the first-born sons of the oxen and sheep) were to be given to Jehovah on the eighth day' (Ex. xvii. 30), was that 'the eighth day' signified what is continuous from a new beginning, to wit, what is continuous of love.

8400^o. 'Fifteen' has a like signification to 'eight'; for the eighth day is the first of the week following. That 'the eighth'=every beginning, thus what is new distinct from what was before. Refs.

8421^v. A week=a whole period, or a full state; whence the day preceding the seventh, or the sixth, =the end of that state; and the day following, or the eighth, the beginning of the same state. Refs.

9227. 'On the eighth day thou shalt give it to Me' (Ex. xvii. 30)=the beginning of the following state, when one lives from good: he is then with the Lord.

9228^e. From these things it may now be evident, that by 'the eighth day' is signified the beginning of the following state.

9296⁶. The reason the eighth day also was called 'a sabbath' (Lev. xxiii. 39), is that by 'the eighth' is signified the beginning of a new state.

—³. What is full, and in every way, is also signified by 'eight,' after 'seven,' in Micah: 'Then shall we raise up upon (Asshur) seven shepherds and eight princes of men' (v. 5) . . . a total deliverance or a deliverance in every way from the falsity thence derived, is signified by 'the eight princes of men who will destroy.'

—⁴. That 'eight'=what is full, and in every way, is also evident from an experience concerning the intromission and reception of Societies into Heaven. The Societies first received appeared to the number of twelve, and afterwards to the number of eight; for they who are intromitted and received into Heaven, are they who have been purified from earthly loves, and have afterwards been instructed. By the number eight on that occasion was signified what is full. See 2130.

—⁵. The like is signified by 'eight' elsewhere in the Word; as that the porch of the gate of the house was 'of eight ells'; and that there were 'eight steps' to the house (Ezek. xl. 9, 31, 41).

10624. The numbers 'two,' 'four,' and 'eight' belong to the celestial class.

R. 739. By '(the beast which was and is not) being himself the eighth' (Rev. xvii. 11), that is, the eighth mountain, is signified that it is the Divine good itself; for by 'the seven mountains' are signified the Divine goods of the Word; hence by the beast himself being the eighth mountain, is signified that it is the Divine good itself. Good is also signified by 'the eighth' . . .

E. 384². When the Angels were discoursing about the conjunction of good and truth . . . there came forth the number four; sometimes also the number two, or the number eight, or sixteen; because these numbers signify like things . . .

1067. (The beast) itself is the eighth, and is of the seven—that the good and truth is profaned that the Word with them is Divine. . . The reason the beast is called the eighth king, is that by 'a king' is signified truth, and by the number 'eight,' good . . .

Eighteen. Octodecim.

A. 1709. 'Three hundred and eighteen' (Gen. xiv. 14) = their quality, namely, that they are the holy things of combat; for the number 'eighteen' involves this, and also the number 'three hundred'; for these numbers are composed of three and six. 'Three' = what is holy; and 'six,' combat.

Eighty. Octoginta.

A. 1963. 'Abram was a son of eighty years and six years' (Gen. xvi. 16) = the Lord's state as to celestial goods acquired through the combats of temptations; (for) 'eighty' has a like signification to 'forty,' which = temptations.

4617. 'A hundred years and eighty years' (Gen. xxxv. 28) = the quality of the state; 'a hundred' = a full state; and 'eighty,' temptations; here, through temptations.

7284. 'Moses was a son of eighty years' (Ex. vii. 7) = the state and quality of the law from the Divine . . . as it was among those of the Spiritual Church at the first time of visitation. What 'eighty' here specifically signifies, cannot be declared, because it involves every state and every quality of the law from the Divine at that time with them. 'Eighty' = states of temptation; but when it does so, it has a like meaning to 'forty'; but being also made up of ten and eight multiplied into each other, its signification is to be sought from this source likewise.

Eisleben. T. 796.

El. El.

See also ELOHIM.

A. 1992². As the name Shaddai originated with the nations in Syria, He was not called Elohim Shaddai, but El Shaddai; and in Job only Shaddai, and El or God is mentioned separately.

4402. 'He called it El Elohe Israel' (Gen. xxxiii. 20) = interior worship from the Divine Spiritual . . .

—⁴. In the supreme sense, 'El Elohe' is the same as the Divine Spiritual. . . In the Original Language, 'El Elohe' means 'God God,' and strictly according to the words, 'God of gods.' In the Word, Jehovah or the Lord is in very many places called 'El' in the singular, also 'Eloah,' and He is also called 'Elohim' in the plural. . . That 'El' involves one thing, 'Eloah' another, and 'Elohim' another, everyone may judge from the fact that the Word is Divine. . .

—⁵. 'El' and 'Elohim,' or 'God,' is mentioned when it treats of truth. . . Hence it is that by 'El' and 'Elohim,' in the supreme sense, is signified the Divine Spiritual; for this is the same as the Divine truth; but with this difference, that by 'El' is signified truth in the will and in the act, which is the same as the good of truth. 'Elohim' is mentioned in the plural, because by truth Divine are meant all truths which are from the Lord.

—⁶. As, then, in the supreme sense, 'El' and 'Elohim' = the Lord as to truth, they also = Him as to power; for it is truth of which power is predicated. . . Wherefore, where in the Word, it treats of power from truth, the Lord is called 'El' and 'Elohim,' or 'God.' Hence also it is, that in the Original Language, 'El' likewise means one who is powerful.

—⁶. That 'El,' or 'Elohim,' or 'God,' are used in the Word where it treats of the Divine Spiritual, or, what is the same, of the Divine truth, and consequently of the Divine power. III.

—⁹. That 'El,' or 'God,' in the singular, is used when it treats of the power which is from Divine truth, or, what is the same thing, from the Lord's Divine Spiritual. III.

—^e. 'Gods' (Elim), in the opposite sense.

4559. 'He called the place El-Bethel' (Gen. xxxv. 7) = a holy Natural. 'Bethel' = the Divine Natural; but when it is called 'El-Bethel,' it does not = the Divine, but a holy Natural. Ex. 4560.

6003. 'I am God, the God of thy father' (Gen. xlv. 3) . . . In the Original Language, 'God' is here first mentioned in the singular ('El'), but the second time in the plural ('Elohim'). . . The reason is, that by 'God' (El) is signified that God is one and single; and in the second place by 'God' (Elohim), that He has a number of attributes. . .

Elam. Elam.

A. 1223. 'The sons of Shem, Elam and Asshur,' etc. (Gen. x. 22) . . . 'Elam, Asshur,' etc., were so many nations, by which are signified those things which are of wisdom: by 'Elam,' faith from charity. 1227.

1228. That 'Elam' = faith from charity, or that faith itself which constitutes the internal Church, is evident from Jer. xlix. 34-39. Here, under the name of 'Elam,' faith is treated of, or, what is the same, the internal Church become perverted and corrupt; and then concerning the same restored. . . So in Isaiah xxi. 1, 'Elam' = the internal Church.

[A.] 1661. 'Chedorlaomer king of Elam, etc.' (Gen. xiv. 1) = so many kinds of apparent goods and truths. 1685.

1667. 'Elam' = faith from charity; here, therefore, truth and good; for faith, and the things which belong to faith, are nothing but truths; and charity, and the things which belong to charity, are goods; here, however, the goods of infancy, which, although they appear to be goods, are not goods. . .

3240⁵. The desolation of the Spiritual Church is here treated of (Jer. xxv. 17-26); the diversities of which Church are mentioned in order, and are signified by . . . 'Elam,' etc.

E. 357²⁷. 'Behold, I break the bow of Elam, the beginning of his power' (Jer. xlix. 35). By 'Elam' is meant the knowledge which is of the natural man, and the confidence thence derived.

418⁷. 'Upon Elam I will bring the four winds from the four ends of the heavens, and I will scatter him into all these winds, so that there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come' (Jer. xlix. 36). By 'Elam,' here, are signified those who are in the Knowledges which are said to be of faith, and are not at the same time in any charity. . .

659⁴. 'Elam,' and 'all the uncircumcised slain with the sword' (Ezek. xxxii. 24) = the Hells where are these falsities, that is, those who are in such falsities.

P. P. Jer. xlix. 'Elam' = the falsification of doctrine.

2220³. That all the cupidities were imbued with the love of self, is signified by 'the daughters having become haughty' (Ezek. xvi. 50).

2715². A self-exalted heart never receives, but a humble one.

4347². He who is of a self-exalted mind is in the love of self, and not only sets himself above others, but also cares nothing for the Divine; consequently he repels the influx of good, and therefore its conjunction with truths. . .

8313⁴. They who are in faith without charity, are self-exalted. . .

9039⁶. The Lord powerfully influences those who are humble, but not those who are self-exalted; because the former receive His influx, whereas the latter repel it.

275⁸. 'Thou rulest in the lifting up of the sea' (Ps. lxxxix. 9). . . By 'the lifting up of the sea,' is signified when the natural man exalts itself against the Divine, by denying those things which are of the Church.

285². By 'the throne high and lifted up' (Is. vi. 1) is signified the Divine proceeding from which is Heaven.

410³. 'Everyone that is magnificent and high' = those who are in the love of self and the love of the world; and 'everyone that is lifted up and low' (Is. ii. 12) = those who are in the love of their Own intelligence. This is further described by 'the day of Jehovah being upon all cedars that are high and lifted up. . . upon all the high mountains and the hills that are lifted up. . .'

412⁸. 'The elations of man' and 'the strife of tongues' (Ps. xxxi. 20) = the evils of falsity and the falsities of evil; for 'elations' are said of the evils which are of the love of self.

455¹⁰. 'The elations of man' = the pride of man's Own intelligence.

601⁶. 'The elation of Jordan which is wasted' (Zech. xi. 3) = the Church as to Divine truth introducing.

6524. 'The elders of Pharaoh's house' (Gen.1.7)=which agree with good. 'Elders'=the chief things of wisdom, thus agreement with good. . . . The reason 'elders'=the chief things of wisdom, is that in the Word 'old men'=the wise, and, in a sense abstracted from person, wisdom. As the twelve tribes of Israel=all truths and goods in the complex, there were princes set over them, and also elders; and by the princes were signified primary truths, which are of intelligence; and by the elders, the chief things of wisdom, thus those which are of good. Ill.

—². 'The assembly of the elders' (Ps.cvii.32)=those who are in good, which is of wisdom.

—³. 'The elders' (in Rev.iv.)=those things which are of wisdom, thus which are of good. That 'the elders'=these things, is evident from the description. . . . —⁴.

—^e. In order that the elders might represent those things which are of wisdom, there was taken of the spirit of Moses and given to them, from which they prophesied. (Num.xi.17).

8578. 'Take with thee of the elders of Israel' (Ex. xvii.5)=from primary truths. 'The elders of Israel'=the primary things of wisdom and intelligence which agree with good and with truth; thus primary truths; for these are of intelligence and wisdom. 8585.

9404. 'And seventy of the elders of Israel' (ver.9)=all who are in good from truths. . . . 'The elders of Israel'=those who are in good from truths, and in truths from good; for by 'old men' in the Word are signified those who are in wisdom, thus who are in the life of good from the doctrine of truth.

9421. 'He said to the elders' (ver.14)=those who are solely in the external sense. . . . The reason the elders of the Israelitish people here represent these, is that they were the heads of the people, and thus represented the whole people.

9930¹⁰. 'The twenty-four elders'=all those who are in good from truths; and, in the abstract sense, all goods from truths.

L. 16⁶. His being taken and condemned by the chiefs of the priests and by the elders, signified that this was done by that entire Church.

R. 233. 'Upon the thrones I saw twenty-four elders sitting' (Rev.iv.4)=the ordination of all things in Heaven for the Last Judgment.

—². The twelve tribes of Israel and their elders=all who are of the Lord's Church. . . . and, abstractedly, all truths and goods therein. . . . The twelve apostles and the twenty-four elders=all things of the Church. . . . Hence it is evident why 'thrones' and 'elders' are mentioned when judgment is treated of. Ill.

251. 'The twenty-four elders fell down before Him that sat upon the throne, and worshipped Him that liveth for ever and ever' (ver.10)=the humiliation of all in Heaven before the Lord. By 'the twenty-four elders' are meant all who are of the Lord's Church; here, all who are of His Church in Heaven. The elders, as the heads, represented all.

268. 'In the midst of the elders' (Rev.v.6)=from inmost things, and consequently in all things of the Church. . . . 'The twenty-four elders'=the Church as to all things of it.

275. 'The four animals and the twenty-four elders fell down before the Lamb' (ver.8)=humiliation, and from humiliation the adoration of the Lord from the higher Heavens. . . . The higher Heavens are therefore signified by 'the four animals' and 'the twenty-four elders'. . . . By 'the twenty-four elders' are also signified the Angels in the higher Heavens, because these elders were the nearest round the throne. 369. So8. E.322.

[R.] 521. 'The twenty-four elders, who sat before God upon their thrones, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God' (Rev. xi. 16)=the acknowledgment by all the Angels of Heaven that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and the highest adoration. By 'the twenty-four elders sitting upon the thrones' are signified all in Heaven; in special, in the Spiritual Heaven.

617. 'They sung as it were a new song before . . . the four animals and before the elders' (Rev. xiv. 3)=celebration and glorification of the Lord before . . . the Angels of the higher Heavens. . . The former Heavens are from the ancients and the most ancients; and the Lord is acknowledged in these Heavens as the God of Heaven and earth.

E. 237³. 'The elders' (Ezek. vii. 26)=the intelligent.

270. 'Upon the thrones I saw twenty-four elders sitting'=all truths from good in the higher Heavens ordered by the Lord before the Judgment. . . 'The twenty-four elders upon the thrones'=all the truths of Heaven in the complex ordered before the Judgment. . . 'The elders'=those who are in truths from good; and, abstractedly, truths from good. The reason the higher Heavens are here meant, is that all there are in truths from the good of love; and also because the lower Heavens are spoken of in the words which immediately follow.

—³. That 'elders'=truths from good. III.

290. 'The twenty-four elders fell down before Him that sat upon the throne'=humiliation, and at the same time acknowledgment by those who are in truths from good. 349.

—². 'The twenty-four elders'=all who are in truth from good both in the Heavens and on earth.

307. 'One of the elders' (Rev. v. 5)=a Society of Heaven which surpassed the rest in wisdom. 'Elders'=those who are in truths from good . . . thus those who surpass all others in intelligence and wisdom . . .

313. 'The elders' (ver. 6)=those who are in truths from good; here, therefore, those who are in the Second Heaven. Ex. . . In general, by 'the four animals' is signified all the Divine good in the universal Heaven which guards; and by 'the elders,' all the Divine truth proceeding from the Divine good also in the universal Heaven; and both guard, because they are united. Thus by 'the four animals' and 'the elders,' taken together, is signified the Divine good united to the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord, and, from this, the whole angelic Heaven; but, specially, the two inmost Heavens. 324^e. 1206.

326^e. 'The elders have ceased from the gate' (Lam. v. 14)=that those who are in truths from good, or, abstractedly, the truths from good by which there is admission into the Church, have no existence.

448¹⁶. 'Elders' (Ps. cv. 22)=those who are in intelligence and wisdom.

462. 'The Angels' (Rev. vii. 11)=those who are in the First Heaven; 'the elders'=those who are in the Second Heaven; and 'the four animals'=those who are in the Third Heaven. Ex.

471. 'One of the elders answered, saying unto me'

(ver. 13)=influx out of Heaven from the Lord, and consequent perception. . . By 'the elders' is signified Heaven where the Lord is.

637¹¹. 'The elders of the daughter of Zion' (Lam. ii. 10)=the wise and intelligent in the Church; and, abstractedly, wisdom and intelligence.

750¹². 'Priests' (Lam. ii. 19)=those who teach good; 'elders,' those who teach truth.

851². By 'the elders of the people, and the princes thereof' (Is. iii. 14) the like things are signified as by the twelve disciples; namely, all of the Church who are in its truths and goods; and, in the abstract sense, the truths and goods of the Church in the whole complex.

863³. 'The elders of the daughter of Zion'=those who were in Divine truths.

Elealeh. Elealeh.

E. 911¹⁹. By 'Jazer,' 'the vine of Sibmah,' 'Heshbon,' and 'Elealeh' (Is. xvi. 9), are signified the men of the external Church, who explain the Word in favour of the loves of the world; for these places were in the inheritance given to the Reubenites and Gaddites, by whom was represented the external Church, because they dwelt beyond Jordan. 'The vine of Sibmah'=their Church.

Eleazar. Eleazar.

A. 7230⁵. 'Eleazar the son of Aaron' (Ex. vi. 25)=the doctrinal things derived from the doctrine itself of charity.

9811. So long as Nadab and Abihu lived, the two younger sons of Aaron, who were Eleazar and Ithamar, represented the Divine in the ultimate Heaven, which proximately succeeds after the prior or middle, and which is the Divine Natural. 9812.

Elegant. Elegans.

Elegantly. Elegantiter.

A. 1648. What seems to them to be elegant, from self or from the love of self . . .

6414. 'Giving discourses of elegance' (Gen. xlix. 21)=gladness of mind . . . for all discourse proceeds from the mind; and when the mind is glad and cheerful, it speaks with elegance. E. 439².

6924. They said that this was too elegantly expressed . . . They rejected such things as produce a shade, which are chiefly affectations of elegance and of learning.

8971. They say that the writings of men are more elegant, because composed in a more elegant style as to the literal sense.

H. 238. It is thus evident how elegant and delightful is the speech of the Angels . . . D. 4867.

R. 454. (The neatness and elegance of the discourse of the solidians). Sig.

M. 56⁴. The fourth said that the Lord has taken away beauty and elegance of life from the man, and has transcribed them into the woman . . .

175³. From the elegance and neatness of the composition of the words, they appear to be sublime and erudite . . .

218. That the intelligence of women in itself is elegant, etc.

D. 3423. Lest anything of the love of self should flow in from the artificial elegance and combination of the words . . .

6050. See ENGLAND at these refs. J.(Post.) 6. 11. 227.

E. 8^e. How elegant is the internal sense of the Word . . .

A. 5079^e. The sun is elementary fire.

7324^e. Not elementary fire . . .

8812^e. It is felt in the body as elementary heat . . .

S. 66^e. From exhalations stored up in the earth, gold draws its element; silver, its; and iron, its.

M. 192^e. Stripped of the exuviae which were composed of the elements in waters and earths . . .

I. 9³. The nature of the sun's heat is similar to the heat from elementary fire.

10. Regarded in itself, elementary fire is relatively dead.

T. 20^e. As of a conflux of elements into such a form . . .

103³. Within a certain envelope of elements from nature . . .

125³. The sun . . . must act by means of the element in which the subject is.

491³. The earth merely supplies fluids and elements, and the shrubs appropriate them . . .

504^e. Nor can the elements rise up through the root, unless . . .

699. They have taught that when the Word is added to the element, it becomes a sacrament.

D. Love v². Their use is . . . to supply new elements to the blood . . .

Coro. 17². Each world . . . consists of three atmospheres or elements . . .

29³. The direful persuasion that . . . nature is what is called God, and that He is composed of the elements thereof.

Elephant. Elephas.

W. 346². The perfect animals are elephants, etc.

T. 68². Than a locust against an elephant . . .

D. 1641. If they could see what is comprised in a single idea . . . cohorts of elephants, etc., would be represented.

4705. Elephants, etc. appear in the other life . . . It was Societies of Spirits that so appeared, to which such animals correspond; as those who are in general knowledge, to elephants and camels.

5896. The chariot seemed to be changed into an elephant, and he seemed to himself to be sitting above the elephant, and presently to be thrown down by the trunk of the elephant, and to be trampled on.

E. 1200². (The elephant is an animal of an intermediate character, which appears in the World of Spirits.)

Elevate. Elevare.

Elevation. Elevatio.

Elevable. Elevabilis.

See ARISE, and ASCEND.

A. 358. When charity shines forth from the face, the face is said to be elevated; but when the contrary, the face is said 'to fall.'

361. 'If thou doest well, elevation' (Gen.iv.7)=if thou wiltest well, charity is with thee.

363^e. 'Elevation'=that charity is present.

1745. 'I have lifted up my hand to Jehovah' (Gen. xiv.22)=the quality of the mind with the Lord. . . The lifting up of the hand to Jehovah is a gesture of the body which corresponds to an affection of the mind . . . Here, therefore, the uplifting of the hand=the mind, or the affection of the mind.

2119^e. They who are good, are by degrees elevated by the Lord into Heaven.

2438³. These are elevated into Heaven by the Lord. 2699².

2762. When they are being elevated out of the World of Spirits into Heaven . . .

2857. The elevation of the Rational after temptation. Sig.

2927. The mind is elevated by gladness and joy.

3171. The Natural is said to be elevated, when spiritual things are appropriated to it; for all elevation is done by spiritual and celestial things, as by these man is elevated towards Heaven, thus nearer to the Lord.

3334. Man is said to be elevated, when he is being perfected as to spiritual and celestial things . . .

3761. 'Jacob lifted up his feet'=the elevation of the Natural. . . The elevation which is here signified, is the subject treated of in this chapter (Gen.xxix.), and which is an elevation from external truth to internal good. In the supreme sense, it treats of how the Lord elevated His Natural even to the Divine . . . and in the representative sense, of how the Lord elevates the Natural of man . . .

4038². The things which elevate themselves from the Natural towards the Rational . . .

4103. The elevation of the good meant by 'Jacob.' Sig. . . By the elevation which is here signified by 'to arise,' is meant a closer approach to the Divine. As for man, he is said to be elevated, when he approaches more closely to heavenly things; the reason of which is, that Heaven is believed to be elevated on high . . .

4104. The elevation of truths and their affections. Sig. —³. Truths and affections are elevated, when the things of life eternal and of the Lord's Kingdom are set before those which belong to our life in the body. When a man recognizes the former as the chief and primary thing, and the latter as an instrumental and secondary one, truths and their affections are elevated with him . . .

[A.] 4311². When (the Israelites) were in a holy external . . . the Holy in which they were was elevated into Heaven . . .

4339. The lifting up of the eyes is an external which corresponds to the elevation of the mind.

4353^e. This remains with a man after death, and by it he is elevated into Heaven by the Lord.

4947^e. They are then elevated into Heaven. 6928^e. 7090³. R. 153⁴.

5057³. Wherefore, they are elevated into a certain Society of Heaven . . .

5124². They are then elevated, or 'lifted up,' out of vastation to heavenly Societies. 'To be lifted up,' or to be elevated, is to progress towards interior things; for what is elevated, or high, is predicated of interior things . . .

5145⁵. All those with whom the interior voluntary things have been terminated, are elevated to Heaven . . .

5356^e. Goods together with truths are then in the middle, and according to the zeal of the affection are elevated upwards, thus to Heaven towards the Lord, from whom is the elevation.

5392². They can then be elevated to Heaven.

5527². I have seen them elevated into angelic Societies . . .

6183. 'Thou shalt carry me out of Egypt' = that there may be elevation from scientifics. . . For going from Egypt to Canaan is called 'ascending,' by which is signified elevation. . . What elevation from scientifics is. Ex.

6202^e. Into such a state does man come . . . when he is to be elevated to spiritual things.

6262. 'Israel sail to Joseph' = elevation to the internal. . . The reason it = elevation, is that in this verse it treats of the influx of love . . . which influx is an elevation to the internal; for the external cannot be in love towards the internal, except by means of influx and elevation from the internal . . .

6309^e. In order that they may not be contrary, man is regenerated, and is also elevated from sensuous things towards interior ones; and in proportion as he is elevated from them, he leaves evils and falsities behind. But he cannot be elevated, unless he is in the good of faith and of life.

6312. As the Hells are in this sensuous lumen, man must perish if he is not elevated out of it: he is elevated by means of the good of faith.

6313. When a man is being elevated towards interior things, he comes from the gross sensuous lumen into a milder lumen . . . This elevation from sensuous things was known to the ancients . . . wherefore, their Sophi said, that when the animus is withdrawn from sensuous things, it comes into an interior light, and at the same time into a tranquil state . . . Man can be still more interiorly elevated, and the more interiorly he is elevated, the clearer is the light he comes into, and at last into the light of Heaven . . . The three Heavens are distinct from each other no otherwise than according to elevations towards interior things, thus according to the degrees of the light.

6315. The man who in his life has been elevated from sensuous things by means of the good of faith, is alternately in sensuous lumen and in interior lumen . . . If (when in sensuous life) he were to speak and think about (spiritual things), he would make no account of them, unless he were instantaneously elevated thence towards interior things by the Lord. . . He who is in the good of life, is elevated from one lumen into the other,—into the interior lumen the instant he begins to think evilly; for the Angels are near him. . . I have often perceived the elevations . . .

6368^e. By means of these states, the latter are elevated into Heaven.

6380². They who are of the external Church cannot elevate the thought higher than to the Lord's Divine Natural; whereas they who are of the internal Church, elevate it above the Natural to the internal; for everyone who is in faith in the Lord, has an idea about Him according to the capacity of elevating the thoughts . . .

6443². They who are being elevated into Heaven, are at first in obscurity . . .

6476. Whenever I have read the Lord's Prayer, I have plainly perceived an elevation towards the Lord . . .

6598. One man excels another in the faculty of understanding and perceiving what is honest . . . just . . . and good. The cause consists in the elevation of the thought to the things which are of Heaven . . .

6629. They who are in the good of love and of charity, as to the internal man are in Heaven . . . Hence they have an elevation of the mind towards interior things . . .

6658. To be elevated towards interior things, which is signified by 'to go up from the land,' and to come into the Land of Canaan, = that the Church will be established . . .

6663. Very many Spirits . . . before they can be elevated into Heaven . . . are infested . . .

6692². Those who . . . have excogitated many arts . . . in order to raise themselves above others . . .

6844². When a man thinks about such things as are of love and faith in God, if he is in good, he is elevated from sensuous things . . . This the man does not know.

6854². The spiritual . . . could not before be elevated into Heaven . . . But after the Lord came into the world . . . He elevated them to Heaven . . .

6897. Elevation and deliverance from infestation by false scientifics. Sig. . . Elevation towards interior things is elevation from infestation by falsities to the truths and goods of faith.

6952. The power of elevating from the ultimate of the Sensuous. Sig.

—⁶. The interiors of man, together with sensuous things, are elevated upwards by the Lord, when the man is in the good of faith and of charity. . . He who is elevated upwards by the Lord, wills good and thinks truth. The elevation by the Lord actually takes place . . .

6953. 'He put forth his hand, and took hold of it' = elevation towards interior things.

—c. When the Sensuous is elevated towards interior things, power is communicated by the Divine. Sig.

6954². Man does not look upwards of himself . . . This is effected by the elevation. When the interiors are elevated, the Sensuous is elevated . . . But none can be thus elevated, except those who have lived in the good of faith and of charity. That there are elevations towards interior things, I know from actual experience ; for they have been perceived a thousand times.

7016. Elevation to an interior and more spiritual life in the Natural. Sig. and Ex.

7038. 'That they may serve Me' = elevation into Heaven to perform uses thence.

7196. 'To give them the Land of Canaan' = whereby they might be elevated into Heaven. 7211.

7306. Elevation to things more confirming. Sig. . . 'Morning' . . . here, = elevation, because it is predicated of those who are in falsities, who cannot be enlightened, but can be elevated in respect to attention.

7435. Elevation to a sign of power still greater. Sig. 'To arise in the morning' = elevation . . . to attention. 7538.

7443^o. From this Sensuous, thus from the falsities there, they who are in good and truth can be elevated . . . and when they are elevated, they are also separated from those who are in falsities there.

7456. When man is in the Holy of worship, he is withheld from such things, and they who are in the good of faith and of life are elevated from the Sensuous, where such things are.

7607^o. From the fact that man can look above himself . . . it is clearly evident that there is an elevation of the mind by the Divine ; for no one could ever look above himself, except by means of an elevation by Him who is above.

7816. To look above self is to be elevated by the Lord ; for no one can look above himself, unless he is elevated by Him who is above.

7860. The state of the elevation of (those of the Spiritual Church), is represented by introduction into the Land of Canaan.

7931^e. Those could then be elevated into Heaven who could not be elevated before. Ex.

8170. Elevation from a state of despair by truth Divine. Sig.

8258. In the internal sense of (Ex.xv.) the Lord is celebrated, because . . . He elevated into Heaven the good who had been infested. 8309. 8325.

8325. Elevation is spoken of, because before the external sight of Spirits Heaven is on high . . .

8559^e. When, therefore, man is in good, that is, in the affection of doing what is good for the sake of what is good, thus for the sake of the neighbour, he is elevated into Heaven ; for he is in the order of Heaven . . .

8604. 'When Moses held up his hand' (Ex.xvii.11) = when the faith with those of the Spiritual Church looked towards the Lord. . . 'To hold up the hand' = to determine the spiritual power upwards, thus to the Lord. Ex.

8764. That they were thus elevated by means of truths to heavenly light. Sig. . . 'To bear (on the wings of eagles)' = to be elevated. . . The reason elevation thither is effected by means of the truths of faith, is that the truth of faith is that which elevates man even to Heaven, where is its good.

8945. 'Thou shalt not go up in steps above to My altar' = no elevation to the interior things which are celestial. Ex.

—³. In the other life, no one is allowed to be elevated any higher into Heaven than to the degree of good in which he is ; for if he is elevated any higher, his filthy things are made manifest . . .

9127⁴. They who are in faith and in love to the Lord are elevated by the Lord from the life of the sensuous things of the body towards the life of their spirit, thus from the light of the world into the light of Heaven . . .

9224^e. (The error) that those who are in Hell can be elevated into Heaven . . .

9231. The internal man is so distinct from the external, that he can be . . . elevated into Heaven even to the Lord . . .

9256⁴. Then, at the same time, all the earthly and worldly things which they have drawn with them from the life in the world, are elevated, so that they all together look upwards.

9278⁴. Until he is elevated from external into internal things, and thus into the light of Heaven . . .

9330^o. In the other life, falsities are removed from those who are in truths from good . . . and thus they are elevated into Heaven.

9333^o. They who in the world have lived the life of faith and charity, can then be withheld from evils, and held in good, and thus be elevated into Heaven.

9405^o. The former suffer themselves to be elevated by the Lord into the light of Heaven ; but the latter do not suffer themselves to be elevated . . . 9406.

9407¹⁵. When a man is in good, and from good in truths, he is elevated into that Divine light . . .

9435^e. There are like degrees of ascent from the world to Heaven with those who are being regenerated by the Lord ; for man is elevated from external to internal things, because from the natural man which is in external things, to the spiritual which is in internal ones. Such elevation or ascent was also represented by Moses when he put on the representation of a holy external . . . 9436. Sig.

9517. Heaven and the Church, or the Angels of Heaven and the men of the Church, are guarded by the Lord by means of the elevation of their interiors to Himself; and, when they are elevated, they are in the good of love to Him and in the good of love towards the neighbour. Elevation to the Lord is attended with this. . . They who are elevated by the Lord continually turn their faces to Him, because the Lord keeps them conjoined with Himself by the good of love; whereas they who are not elevated turn their faces from the Lord.

[A.] 964^S. Hence it is, that the higher a man can be elevated towards interior things, the more he comes into the perception of good and the light of truth . . .

972⁶. Therefore, man is elevated from the Sensuous to interior things by the Lord . . . 973⁰.

973⁰. While a man is being regenerated, the hinge of the determinations is turned inwards, and in the proportion that it can then be turned inwards, can the man be elevated by the Lord towards Heaven to Himself . . .

975². From being truth in knowledge, it becomes truth in faith, when it is elevated from the external man into the internal.

976³. Wherefore, they who are to be elevated into Heaven are first prepared . . . For if they were elevated into Heaven before, they could not possibly remain in the Societies there . . . When, however, they have been prepared, they are elevated and introduced by the Lord into Heaven . . .

1015⁶. The case is otherwise with those who suffer themselves to be elevated by the Lord into the light of Heaven; for these are first elevated above the scientifics of the natural man . . .

—³. When a man becomes spiritual, his interiors, which see from the light of Heaven, are opened, and then the man looks upwards, which is effected through elevation by the Lord; thus he looks into Heaven and to the Lord: thither are also elevated all things which are of his will and of his thought, thus his heart, that is, his love.

1020². The elevation of all things of worship by the Lord in a dim state of love. Sig.

1020³. Of himself, man cannot elevate anything into Heaven, but the Lord elevates it: in man there is only the capacity of its being done, with which he is endowed while he is being regenerated. 1070².

1028⁴. All the interiors of such are turned outwards, almost like the interiors of animals, nor are they suffered to be elevated upwards to the Lord; when yet it is peculiar to man as distinguished from beasts, that he can be elevated to Heaven and to the Lord by the Lord, and thus be led: all those are thus elevated who love what is good and true for their own sake . . .

1033⁰. This is called looking upwards, because the man is then elevated as to his interiors . . . by the Lord to Heaven, thus to the Lord: the interiors are also actually elevated, and are then actually withdrawn from the body and the world. When this takes place, the interiors of the man come actually into Heaven, and into its light and heat: hence he has influx and enlightenment . . .

1042⁰. For, when the internal is elevated, the external also is elevated . . . But when the internal cannot be elevated, because it is closed, the external looks to nothing but self and the world . . .

H. 465^e. In proportion as the mind can be withdrawn from sensuous things . . . is it elevated to spiritual and celestial things.

N. 41. The interiors with those who are spiritual, are actually elevated towards Heaven . . .

L. 33². This is why a man is . . . elevated into Heaven, when, from the Lord, he has conquered in temptations.

Life 15. The reason a man who is not spiritual can think and speak rationally . . . is that the understanding of man can be elevated into the light of Heaven . . . but the will of man cannot be in like manner elevated into the heat of Heaven . . . This also constitutes the difference between a man and a beast; (255) and by this (too), it is possible for man to be reformed and become spiritual; but he is not reformed until his will also is elevated.

W. 66. Man alone is a recipient of the life . . . of the three degrees of the Spiritual World. Hence it is, that, unlike any animal, man can be elevated above nature . . . nay, can be elevated into wisdom so far as to see God.

67. How man is elevated from the ultimate degree to the first one. . . He is elevated by means of knowledges into the second degree; and as he perfects his understanding by knowledges, he is elevated into the third degree, and then he becomes rational.

68. The elevation of the interiors of the human mind. Ex.

138. This turning towards the Lord . . . is a kind of elevation; for the man is elevated into the heat and light of Heaven . . . Hence the elevation, which is like rising from a mist into the air . . .

239². The mind of man is of three degrees . . . and it is by virtue of this that he can be elevated into angelic wisdom, and possess it while he lives in the world; but still he does not come into it until after death . . .

242^e. The understanding of man can be elevated into wisdom, but not his will, except in proportion as he shuns evils as sins. 243, From experience.

245. Hence it is, that, as to wisdom, man can be elevated even into the third degree.

256. By correspondence with the two higher degrees, (the natural degree of the mind,) while elevated, appears as if it were discrete. Gen.art.

— This may be comprehended by the understanding, when it is elevated to the degree of light in which the Angels are; for the understanding can be elevated even to this, and be enlightened according to its elevation.

—². As the natural degree is elevated to a degree of what is higher, so the higher acts from within upon the exterior Natural, and illuminates it . . .

—³. From this it is evident, that so long as a man lives in the world, and is thereby in the natural degree, he cannot be elevated into wisdom itself, such as it is with the Angels, but only into higher light reaching to the Angels . . . 257. —⁴, Ex.

258. Hence it is, that man can become rational according to this elevation; if he is elevated to the third degree, he becomes rational from the third degree; if he is elevated to the second degree, he becomes rational from the second degree; and if he is not elevated, he is rational in the first degree. . . The reason a man does not become rational to the possible height, is that the love . . . cannot be elevated in the same manner as the wisdom . . . The love is elevated solely by shunning evils as sins; and then by the goods of charity which are uses . . . If, therefore, the love . . . is not elevated at the same time, however much the wisdom . . . may have ascended, it falls back again down to its love. Hence it is, that if a man's love is not elevated at the same time into the spiritual degree, he is not rational save in the ultimate degree. Hence it is evident . . . that rationality, which is the faculty that is capable of being elevated, is still with man, whether it is elevated or not.

259. With such persons (idiots, etc.) the Rational cannot be elevated. Ex.

266. As the natural mind can be thus elevated, an evil man equally enjoys . . . rationality; and, as the natural mind can be elevated so far, it follows that he can think and speak these things.

267. The natural man can elevate his understanding into higher light to whatever extent he desires; but he who is in evils and the falsities thence, does not elevate it higher than the higher region of his natural mind, and rarely to the region of the spiritual mind. The reason is, that he is in the delights of the love of his natural mind, and if he elevates it above that mind, the delight of his love perishes. If it is elevated higher, and sees truths opposite to the delights of its life, or to the principles of its Own intelligence, it either falsifies them, or passes them by, or retains them . . . as means to the life's love, or to the pride of its Own intelligence.

369². Hence it is, that he who elevates his mind to the Lord, is wholly elevated to the Lord.

414. That love or the will can in like manner be elevated . . . if it loves wisdom its consort in that degree. Gen.art.

—². But the love or will cannot be thus elevated by means of anything of honour, glory, or gain as an end, but by means of the love of use . . . But the love or will is elevated into the heat of Heaven, and the understanding into the light of Heaven; and if both are elevated, a marriage of them takes place there . . .

416. That otherwise the love or will drags the wisdom or understanding from its elevation, to act as one with it. Gen.art. 417.

419. That the love or will is purified in the understanding, if they are elevated together. Gen.art.

421. That the love or will is defiled in the understanding, and by it, if they are not elevated together. Gen.art.

422. The love cannot elevate itself, unless it is acquainted with truths: and it can only be acquainted with these by means of an elevated and enlightened understanding; and then, in proportion as it loves the truths by doing them, it is elevated.

VOL. II.

—². Man can be elevated from one degree into another; but he is not elevated by wisdom alone, but by a life according to wisdom . . .

424². When this love (of self) drags back the understanding from its elevation, which it does when it is alone . . .

—³. Those who have been in the love of dominion from the love of self, and at the same time in the elevation of the understanding above others, appear in body like Egyptian mummies . . .

P. 16². The reason a man can be in evil and at the same time in truth . . . is that the understanding of man can be elevated into the light of wisdom . . . while his love remains below . . .

74³. As the affection of beasts cannot be elevated above their knowledge, nor their knowledge above their affection; but if they are elevated, they are both elevated together; and as they have not any spiritual mind, into which, or into the light and heat of which, they can be elevated; they have not the faculty of understanding, or rationality; nor the faculty of freely willing, or freedom; but they have mere natural affection with its knowledge.

75. Wherefore, man can be elevated from natural knowledge into spiritual intelligence, and thence into celestial wisdom . . . This elevation as to affection would not exist, unless he had the capacity of elevating the understanding from rationality, and of willing it from liberty.

—³. Wherefore, they who do not want to understand anything but what is of the world and its nature . . . cannot be elevated from knowledge into intelligence, and still less into wisdom . . .

R. 226. 'Come up hither' = elevation of mind. E. 263.

914. The understanding with every man is such that it can be elevated even into the light of Heaven, and also is elevated if from any delight he wills to see truth. . . . For the delight of love and wisdom elevates the thought, so that it sees as in light that a thing is so . . .

M. 188. That with men there is an elevation of the mind into higher light, and that with women there is an elevation of the mind into higher heat . . . Gen.art.

—². It is said elevation into higher light and heat, because it is an elevation into the light and heat in which are the Angels of the higher Heavens. There is also an actual elevation as from a mist into the air . . . wherefore the elevation into higher light with men, is elevation into higher intelligence, and from this into wisdom; and the elevation into higher heat with women, is elevation into a marriage love more chaste and pure, and constantly to the marriage principle, which from creation is latent in their inmosts.

—³. Regarded in themselves, these elevations are openings of the mind; for the human mind is distinguished into regions . . .

269². The understanding with every man is elevable according to Knowledges; but not the will, except by a life according to the truths of the Church and of reason . . .

347. To become spiritual, is to be elevated from the Natural, that is, out of the light and heat of the world into the light and heat of Heaven. No one knows anything about this elevation but he who has been elevated: nevertheless, the natural man who is not elevated perceives no otherwise than that he is elevated: the reason is, that, equally with the spiritual man, he can elevate his understanding into the light of Heaven . . . but if the will does not at the same time follow the understanding into that height, he is still not elevated; for he does not stay in that elevation . . .

[M.] 495. To this end there has been given to man the faculty of elevating the understanding (up to the Third Heaven); but if the love of his will is not elevated at the same time, he does not become spiritual, but remains natural. Nevertheless, he retains the faculty of elevating the understanding: the reason he retains it, is that he may be able to be reformed . . .

I. 14. That the understanding in man can be elevated into the light, that is, into the wisdom, in which are the Angels of Heaven, according to the cultivation of the reason; and that his will can be elevated into the heat of Heaven, that is, into love, according to the deeds of the life; but that the love of the will is not elevated, except in the proportion that man wills and does those things which the wisdom of the understanding teaches. Gen.art.

15². Man is man because his understanding can be elevated above the desires of his will.

—⁵. The reason man thinks and speaks, is simply because his understanding is separable from his will, and is elevable even into the light of Heaven . . .

T. 69. The human mind can be elevated into a degree higher and higher . . . and in proportion as it is elevated into the higher degrees, it is elevated into wisdom, because into the light of Heaven; and this cannot be done except by God; and, in proportion as it is elevated thither, it is man . . . It is for this reason that man stands erect . . . and can elevate his face to the zenith. The man who elevates his mind to God . . . is like one who stands on a lofty tower . . .

77³. All in Hell have the ideas of the thoughts immersed in the senses of the body, nor are they able to elevate their minds above them . . . except in a state removed from evils of life and falsities of faith . . .

79⁷. Still, every man, the evil as well as the good, as to the understanding can be elevated even into the light in which are the Angels of Heaven . . . while natural loves . . . are removed. (This was then done with them.)

574. A natural man . . . differs from beasts as to the understanding: this can be elevated above the concupiscences of the will, and not only see them, but also moderate them . . .

588. For the sake of (reformation and regeneration) there has been given to man the faculty of elevating the understanding almost into the light in which are the Angels of Heaven . . .

589. The faculty of elevating the understanding even to the intelligence in which are the Angels of Heaven, is in every man from creation, in the evil as well as the good; nay, in every devil in Hell . . .

590. The quality of the man whose understanding has been elevated, but not the love of the will by means of it, illustrated by comparisons.

—². The reason they can counterfeit Angels of light is—and it is also a proof of the fact—that they are able to elevate the understanding almost to angelic wisdom, above the love of the will.

602. How the understanding elevates the will more and more to a height with itself . . .

603. By regeneration, man is elevated from the lowest region, which is the natural one, into a higher which is the spiritual one; and, through this, into the celestial one. . . From which it is evident, that the mind of a regenerate man has been elevated into the spiritual region . . .

652. That in proportion as man follows, the Lord elevates all to Heaven. III.

—². Wherefore, when an evil man is elevated by the Lord towards Heaven, his evil drags him down . . . Good is Heaven; wherefore, when a good man is elevated by the Lord towards Heaven, he ascends as of his own accord, and is introduced. . . There is actually a sphere elevating all to Heaven, which continually proceeds from the Lord, and fills the universal Spiritual World and the universal natural world; and is like a strong current in the ocean, which secretly draws along the ship. All those who believe in the Lord and live according to His precepts, enter this sphere or current, and are elevated . . .

4905. On elevation into Heaven by means of phantasies.

5108. On the elevation of the good into Heaven.

E. 182². The interiors . . . are actually elevated by the Lord into Heaven, and are there conjoined with Himself . . .

559⁶. 'To be above' (Deut. xxviii. 13) = to be elevated by the Lord so that he looks to Heaven; and 'to be beneath' = not to be elevated by the Lord, but from self; and, from self, man looks solely to the world. For the interiors of man . . . are elevated upwards to Heaven by the Lord, when the man is in the good of life and thence in the truths of doctrine. . . The elevation into the light of Heaven by the Lord, is an actual elevation of the interiors of man to the Lord.

563. Man must be withdrawn and elevated from these sensuous things, in order that he may be able to come into spiritual affections and thence thoughts. This withdrawal and elevation are effected by the Lord alone, when man suffers himself to be led by the Lord by means of the laws of order . . .

790⁸. Thirdly, these truths are elevated by the Lord in a wonderful manner, and become spiritual. . . Fourthly, truths elevated into the spiritual mind are not in a natural form, but in a spiritual one . . .

Coro. xxv. The second of redemption was . . . the elevation of the good into Heaven.

Elevated. Editus.

A. 608^e. The interior Angels dwell more loftily, upon mountains, and the more loftily in the degree that they are more interior and perfect.

H. 188. The (celestial) Angels for the most part dwell in more elevated places, which appear like mountains of soil: the (spiritual) Angels dwell in less elevated places, which appear like hills.

218. They dwell in the middle of the Society, more loftily than the rest.

489^g. They who have loved Divine truth from interior affection . . . dwell . . . in elevated places, which appear like mountains.

583. In the more elevated places there, are the Heavens.

D. 5662a^e. As they were in an elevated place, and thus inflowed into lower things . . .

5789^h. They who are in elevated places are nevertheless in the lowest ones; (for) in a moment they were in Hell, although they had appeared in an elevated place.

Eleven. Undecim.

A. 9616. 'Eleven curtains shalt thou make them' (Ex.xxvi.7)=all the truths from which. 'Eleven'=all things. . . The reason 'eleven'=all things, is that the ten curtains constituted the Tent itself, and the eleventh folded, as what was superfluous, over the back of the Habitation.

Eli. Eli.

A. 6148^g. The Divine good and the Divine truth . . . were represented conjointly in a single person; but on account of the wars and idolatry of that people, they were at first divided; and they who reigned over the people were called leaders, and afterwards judges; and they who had to do with holy things were called priests . . . but afterwards these two things were conjoined in a single person, as in Eli and Samuel.

Eliakim. Eliakim.

E. 206^e. The like is meant by 'Eliakim' the successor of Shebna . . .

Elias. See ELIJAH.Eliezer. Eliezer.

A. 1796. 'Eliezer of Damascus' (Gen.xv.2)=the external Church.

Eliezer. Eliezer. (The second son of Moses.)

A. 8651. 'The name of the one was Eliezer' (Ex.xviii.4)=the quality of the good of truth of those who are within the Church. . . This is evident from the words uttered by Moses concerning this son at the time of his birth: 'Because the God of my father was for my help, and He hath delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh;' and also from the fact, that the quality of the good of truth which is signified by the name of the elder son, or 'Gershom,' is that of those who are outside the Church.

Eliezer (Swedberg.) D.4691. 4693. 5759.

Elijah. Elias.

A. 2135, Preface. By Moses and Elias (at the Transfiguration), there was represented the Word of the Old Testament . . . By Elias the prophet, all the Prophets. 2606^e.

2762^e. By Elijah, and Elisha is represented the Lord as to the Word.

3540^f. As . . . Elijah represented the Word itself, and also John, who is therefore called 'Elias who was to come,' in order that they might represent the Word such as it is in the external form, that is, in the letter, Elijah 'was girt with a girdle of skin at his loins' . . .

3703^g. By Elijah was represented the Lord.

4763^f. See ELISHA at this ref.

4844^h. Elias represents the Word . . . This is meant by . . . 'There were many widows in the days of Elias . . . yet to none of them was Elias sent except into Sarepta of Sidon . . .' (Luke iv.). . . The widows who were within the vastated Church, to whom Elias was not sent = those who are not in truth because not in good.

5247^g. By Elijah and by Elisha was represented the Lord as to the Word, thus by them was represented the Word; specifically, the prophetic Word. 5321^g. 5922^e. 9372^e. 9995^g.

5307^e. The Lord is represented by . . . many in the Word. . . By Elijah is represented the Lord as to the prophetic Word.

6752. There are especially two who represent the Lord as to the Word, namely, Moses and Elijah; Moses, the Lord as to the historical books; Elijah, as to the Prophets. There are besides Elisha, and lastly John the Baptist, wherefore the latter is he who is meant by 'Elias who was to come.' 7643^e.

8029^e. They were carried by horses of fire, as Elijah was.

9198^g. 'To none of them was Elias sent' = the Lord as to the Word, thus the Word of the Lord, not sent to others, because not received anywhere else.

9372^e. In the Word there are many who represent the Lord as to truth Divine, or as to the Word, but the chief among these are Moses, Elijah, Elisha, and John the Baptist.

—⁷. That Elias had come, and that they had not acknowledged him, but had done to him whatsoever they would (Matt.xvii.12)=that the Word had indeed taught them that the Lord would come, but that they did not want to comprehend it, interpreting it in favour of self-dominion, and thus extinguishing the Divine that is in it.

—¹⁰. As John the Baptist represented the Lord as to the Word, when he was speaking about the Lord, who was the Word itself, he said that he was not Elias.

W.H.2^e. The reason Elijah and Elisha were called 'the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof,' is that each represented the Lord as to the Word; and by 'a chariot' is signified doctrine from the Word; and by 'horsemen,' intelligence.

S. 48. By 'Moses and Elias' was represented the historical and prophetic Word . . . E.64^e. 594^e. 624^e. 937^e. 1070^e.

71^e. In the Word in Heaven . . . instead of 'Elijah,' there is 'the prophetic Word.'

R. 132². By Jezebel's wanting to kill Elijah, is signified their wanting to destroy the Word. E.160².

437². As Elijah and Elisha represented the Lord as to the Word, and thence signified doctrine from the Word, as all the prophets did, they are called 'the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof.'

E. 395⁴. As Elijah represented the Lord as to the Word, which is the doctrine of truth itself; and as 'a mantle' = Divine truth in general, which is the Word in ultimates, the mantle of Elijah came to Elisha.

430³. As by Elijah and Elisha was represented the Lord as to the Word, in which are all truths from good, when this representation was transferred from Elijah to Elisha, which is signified by his casting his mantle upon him, Elisha was seen ploughing with twelve yoke, and himself between the twelfth; by which is signified the formation of the Church by means of truths from good from the Word.

624². Hence the prophets of the Old Testament represented the Lord as to the doctrine of Divine truth; and the chief of them represented the Lord as to the Word itself from which is the doctrine of Divine truth; as Moses, Elijah, Elisha, and John the Baptist.

— That Elijah represented the Lord as to the Word, is evident from the miracles performed by him; by all of which are signified such things as are of Divine truth or the Word.

— Not that he was Elias, but that he had a like representation to Elias; namely, the Word.

937^e. By 'Elijah the prophet' (Mal.iv.5) is meant John the Baptist, because by him in like manner as by Elijah is represented the Word.

Elim. Elim.

A. 8250. It afterwards treats of the consolation (of those of the Spiritual Church after the second temptation), which is signified by the encamping at Elim, where there were twelve fountains and seventy palm-trees.

8367. 'They came to Elim' (Ex.xv.27) = a state of enlightenment and of affection, thus of consolation after temptation; as is evident from the signification of 'Elim,' which involves and signifies the state and quality of the matter that is treated of . . . here, the state after temptation, namely, a state of enlightenment and of affection, thus of consolation . . . 8397. E.458⁸.

8399. 'Between Elim and Sinai' (Ex.xvi.1) = what is continuous, and the quality. . . From the fountains and palm-trees there, 'Elim' = the truth and good which belong to consolation after temptation.

3301^e. (The children who mocked Elisha being torn to pieces by the bears) represented those who blaspheme the Word . . . For Elisha represented the Lord as to the Word. E.66⁵. 781¹. De Verbo 10⁵.

3316⁴. That Elisha put flour into the pottage, and then there was no evil in it (2 Kings iv.41) = that this mass was amended by spiritual truth from the Word of the Lord; for Elisha represented the Lord as to the Word. 8408⁵. 10105³.

3812⁹. That the Word, which is the Divine truth itself, vivifies the dead, was represented by the man reviving and standing upon his feet, who . . . touched the bones of Elisha. Elisha represented the Lord as to truth Divine, or the Word. E.659¹⁰.

4720². 'Elisha' = the Word of the Lord. . . 'The mountain full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha' (2 Kings vi.17) = the goods and truths of doctrine from the Word. . . That they were brought by Elisha to Samaria, where their eyes were opened (ver.20) = instruction by means of the Word; . . . and by Dothan where Elisha was, are signified doctrinal things of good and truth from the Word.

4763⁷. The reason Elisha (when Elijah went up) rent his garments into two pieces (2 Kings ii.12) was on account of mourning that the Word, that is, the Divine truth, was lost; for by Elijah was represented the Lord as to the Word, that is, the Divine truth. That the coat fell from Elijah, and was taken up by Elisha, represented that Elisha continued the representation. E.395⁴.

9325⁹. Elisha represented the Lord as to the Word. . . Hence it is evident what the miracle (of the healing of the waters) involves; namely, the amendment of the Church and of the life by means of the Word from the Lord . . . 10300⁹.

4402⁴. See EL at these refs. 6003.

—⁵. 'Elohim' is used in the plural, because by truth Divine are meant all the truths which are from the Lord: hence the Angels are sometimes called 'Elohim,' or 'gods.' Ill. 7268². 7873^e. E.220. 222.

9160. In the Original Language, 'God' . . . is more frequently called 'Elohim,' in the plural, from the fact that the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord in Heaven is divided multifariously among the Angels; for there are as many recipients of truth Divine, each in his own way, as there are Angels.

10154. Hence it is that, in the Original Language, 'God' is called 'Elohim' in the plural; for truths are many, but good is one.

Embrace. Amplexari.

A. 3807. 'He embraced him' (Gen.xxix.13)=affection. . . That embracing pertains to affection in general, is known.

4351. 'And embraced him' (Gen.xxxiii.4)=the first conjunction of love. 'To embrace'=affection. . . That to embrace is an effect, because it flows from the conjunction of love, is evident . . . Thus in the internal sense it is this conjunction.

4352. 'To fall on the neck'=a closer conjunction; for it is a closer embrace.

6260^e. 'He kissed them'=conjunction from the affection of truth . . . because it follows that 'he embraced them' (Gen.xlviii.10), by which is signified conjunction from the affection of good; for 'to embrace'=a more interior and consequently a closer affection than 'to kiss.'

6261. 'To embrace'=the conjunction of love, thus conjunction from the affection of good. That 'to embrace'=this affection, is clearly evident from the testimony of love by embracing: embracing is an act which flows therefrom; for every spiritual affection has a bodily gesture which corresponds to itself, and which gesture is its representative.

M. 216². They most tenderly embraced each other.

De Conj. 108. The acts (of love truly conjugal) as kissing, embracing, etc. . . delight the Third Heaven; for that Heaven is in the communication of good affections.

Embroider. Acupingere.

Embroidery. Acupictura.

Embroiderer. Acupictor.

A. 1156. 'Broidered work from Egypt' (Ezek.xxvii.7)=scientifics, and thus rituals representative of spiritual things. 2576³.

1232. 'Broidered work-acupictum,' etc. (ver.16)=Knowledges of good.

1462⁴. 'Fine linen of broidered work' (ver.7)=the truths of knowledges, which are of service.

2576⁷. 'The work of the embroiderer' (Ex.xxvii.16).

5319². The truths of the Ancient Church are described by 'garments of broidered work-acupicto,' etc. (Ezek.xvi.10). By 'broidered work' are signified scientific truths.

—³. 'Fine linen in broidered work from Egypt, which was its expansion'=truth from scientifics, as a sign or external significative of that Church.

5620⁴. Jerusalem's garments 'of fine linen, silk, and broidered work' (Ezek.xvi.13)=truths in the Rational and in each Natural.

5954⁵. 'Broidered work-acupictum' (id.)=the Scientific: when this is genuine, in the other life it appears as broidered work, and as lace.

—⁶. In Ezek.xxvii.7, it treats of Tyre, by which are represented the Knowledges of truth and good, which, when genuine, are 'fine linen in broidered work from Egypt.'

—⁷. 'She shall be brought to the king in things embroidered-acupictis' (Ps.xlv.14). . . 'Things embroidered'=the lowest truths.

8764⁸. 'A great eagle . . . which had broidered work' (Ezek.xxvii.3) . . . 'Broidered work'=what is scientific. 9688⁸.

9466⁸. 'Broidered work from Egypt'=the Scientific of truth.

9688. 'The work of the embroiderer' (Ex.xxvi.36)=the things which are of the Scientific. (9766) 'The work of the embroiderer,' or embroidery=the Scientific. In many places in the Word 'what is embroidered,' and 'embroidery' are mentioned, and they everywhere =what is scientific. The cause of this is from the representatives in the other life. There appear there garments embroidered in various ways, by which are signified scientific truths. Scientific truths differ from intellectual truths as external things from internal ones, or as the Natural from the Spiritual . . . for the Intellectual is the Visual of the internal man, and scientifics are its objects in the external man: the latter are signified by 'the work of the embroiderer;' the former, by 'the work of the contriver;' for to contrive=excogitare=is the work of the understanding; and to embroider is that of one who is knowing and efficient from the understanding. Hence it is, that those things in the Habitation which signified internal things, were 'of the work of the contriver' . . . but those which signified external things, were 'of the work of the embroiderer;' as the covering for the door of the Tent, and for the gate of the court; and also the belt . . .

—³. 'That 'embroidery,' and 'what is embroidered'=the Scientific which is of the external or natural man. Ill. . . 'Fine linen in broidered work'=scientific truth; for 'fine linen'=truth from a celestial origin; and 'broidered work'=what is scientific; therefore it is also said 'from Egypt,' because 'Egypt'=what is scientific . . .

—⁴. 'Garments of broidered work' (Ezek.xxvi.16) =scientific truths, which also are external ones. 9825³.

—⁵. 'Garments of broidered work-ocupicti' (Ezek. xvi.10) =scientific truths. 10540⁴. E.195⁷.

—⁶. 'What is embroidered' (Ps.xlv.14) =the Scientific of truth.

—⁷. 'What is embroidered' (Judg.v.30) =the Scientific which is of the natural man.

9915³. The Voluntary, the Intellectual, and the Scientific . . . are signified in the Word by 'the weaver,' 'the contriver,' and 'the embroiderer.'

—³. As by the garments of Aaron was represented the Spiritual Heaven adjoined to the Celestial Kingdom . . . therefore in connection with the garments there is mentioned the work of the embroiderer, of the contriver, and of the weaver; and thereby are signified the things which are from the Scientific, from the Intellectual, and from the Voluntary; or, what is the same, from the Natural, from the Spiritual, and from the Celestial.

M. 91³. From her application, which is to such things as are works of the hands, and are called knitting, embroidery . . . of service for adornment . . .

207⁶. There came maidens, with works of embroidery and knitting, the work of their own hands.

D. 5660. See EDUCATE.

E. 195⁶. 'The things embroidered' in which she shall be brought to the king =the Knowledges of truth.

242⁵. 'What is embroidered'=the Scientific which is of the natural man.

275⁵. 'Embroidery'=what is scientific. 654³.

281⁵. 'Embroidery'=what is scientific and cognitive.

324³. 'Garments of broidered work'=the Knowledges of truth from the Word. 395³.

375³. 'To clothe with broidered work, and to shoe with badger' (Ezek.xvi.10) =to instruct in the Knowledges of good and truth from the sense of the letter of the Word. 1143³.

576⁵. 'Embroidery from Egypt'=the knowledge of such things as are of the Church.

615¹. 'What is embroidered'=truth from a natural origin, which is called scientific.

863³. 'She shall be brought to the king in things embroidered'=the appearances of truth, such as are in the sense of the letter of the Word.

1143³. The knowledges of good and truth are signified by 'embroidery from Egypt.'

A. 3887³. Evilent from embryos . . . These are not able to have any bodily sensation, nor any voluntary action . . .

4931³. When man is an embryo, that is, while he is still in the womb, he is in the kingdom of the heart.

5183³. In embryos, the liver receives the blood from the mother's womb, and purifies it . . .

6491. That the Lord's Providence is infinite . . . may be evident from the formation of embryos in the womb . . .

10031. While they are embryos, they are nourished through the liver . . .

W. 390². As is evident from the state of life of an embryo in the womb. 399². 400. 410.

401. A man embryo lives in the heart but not in the lungs. For at this time the blood does not flow in from the heart to the lungs . . . but it flows through the foramen ovale into the left ventricle of the heart; wherefore the embryo cannot then move aught of the body . . . nor can it feel aught . . .

402³. The heart forms the lungs in the embryo.

407. So long as man is an embryo in the womb, the lungs are closed, wherefore he has no feeling and no action . . .

P. 324¹. In every human embryo the Lord forms two receptacles: one for the Divine love and the other for the Divine wisdom . . .

M. 401. The gestation of the embryo . . .

T. 87. It is similar with embryos in the wombs of their mothers.

371³. There is a like action and reaction, by means of which the conjunction endures, between the embryo and the mother's womb.

E. 710. By the embryo which is in the womb, is signified the truth of doctrine from the good of celestial love; for thereby is signified the like as by the male son that the woman brought forth . . . with the difference, that the embryo, being still in the womb, derives more from the good of innocence . . . Hence by 'the son' is signified the doctrine itself, but by the former, the nascent doctrine. Ex.

D. Wis. ii². Evident from . . . the first beginnings of embryos in the womb after conception.

— The formation of the embryo and of the infant man in the womb is a resemblance of creation . . .

iii. See WOMB at this ref.

3³. As there are two things, love and wisdom, which form the embryo in the womb, there are two receptacles . . .

—^e. Hence the truth is evident, that love and wisdom together and unanimously form each and all things in the embryo . . .

5. In the embryo only the heart beats and the liver leaps; the heart for the circulation of the blood, and the liver for the reception of the nourishment; the motion of the rest of the viscera is from these; and it is this motion which is felt as a pulsative one after the middle of the gestation. But this motion is not from any life proper to the fetus; proper life is that of the will and understanding, whereas the life of an infant is a life of a commencing will and a commencing understanding . . .

6. In the embryo before birth there is life; but it is not conscious thereof. . . The life from which the embryo lives in the womb does not belong to it, but to the Lord alone . . .

Emerald. Smaragdus.

See CHRYSOPRASE.

R. 232. 'A rainbow the circuit of the throne in aspect like an emerald' (Rev. iv. 3) = their appearance also around the Lord. . . The Divine sphere which surrounds the Lord . . . when represented in the Heavens, appears . . . in the Natural Kingdom to be green like an emerald.

M. 13. Leaves of silver, the edges of which were adorned with emeralds.

E. 269. 'A rainbow the circuit of the throne in aspect like an emerald' = the appearance of Divine truth in the Heavens around the Lord. 'A rainbow in aspect like an emerald' = the appearance of Divine truth in its circumference. . . The reason the appearance was as of an emerald, was that it indicated the Last Judgment; for the colour of this stone is green, and green = truth obscured. . . When Divine truth is obscured, it appears of an emerald—smaragdino-colour. It was the (former) Heaven upon which was to come the Judgment . . . that was obscured; hence it is that a rainbow is mentioned, and its circuit like an emerald.

Emerge. Emergere.

Emergence. Emersio.

A. 848^e. This is the case with everyone who emerges from spiritual temptation.

1267. Those of the Antediluvians who obstinately attempt to emerge from that Hell are cruelly treated by their companions.

1271. There was a certain deceitful Spirit who wanted to emerge . . .

2917. He would emerge and rise again from the night that prevailed with them. Sig. . . The Lord emerges and rises again with man from a state of ignorance, when He is acknowledged. 2923. 2925. 2955.

2961. Emergence from night and resuscitation thence. Sig.

4949. They want to emerge. D. 2684. 3579. 3584.

5562. They who emerge from vastations . . .

6607. Inflexions, insinuations, and emergences like those of the ciceritious substance in the brain.

7313. They are in obscurity when they emerge from a state of infestations and temptations.

8288. 'The deeps were congealed in the heart of the sea' = that mere falsities from the evil of the cupidities of self-love could not by any means emerge. . . It is said that they are not able to emerge, because by the 'deeps' and the 'heart of the sea' are signified the Hells where are falsities from cupidities, or where are falsities from evil; hence, being surrounded by their own falsities from evil, they could no longer get up, because the Divine of the Lord there stands in the way of falsities.

H. 595. There have sometimes been perceived the ebullitions of some of the Hells, which were efforts to emerge and destroy.

Emetic. Emeticus. D. 1278.

Emigrate. Emigrare.

I. 11³. When, by death, the soul emigrates from the natural world into its spiritual one . . .

D. 3516. They would have emigrated with the wealth they had acquired.

E. 1218³. He does not know . . . that he has emigrated out of the world of his body into the World of his spirit.

Emim. Emim.

A. 1654. That the Lord overcame all kinds of persuasions of what is false, which are 'the Emim,' etc.

1673. 'They smote . . . the Emim in Shaveh Kiriat-haim' (Gen. xiv. 5) = the persuasions of what is false, or the Hells of such, which the Lord conquered. . . 'The Emim,' etc., were of a similar kind to 'the Nephilim.'

1868^e. See DRIVE OUT.

2468³. Hence it is that Moab drove out the Emim . . . By 'the Emim,' etc., are signified those who are imbued with persuasions of what is evil and false.

Eminence. Eminentia.

Eminent, To be. Eminere.

A. 2930³. Affections of truth . . . from the love of self, that is, of being eminent.

6345. 'Excellent in eminence, and excellent in worth' (Gen. xlix. 3) = that thence are glory and Power. 'To excel in eminence' = glory; for he who is in eminence is in glory. E. 434⁷.

6393¹. They who do what is good without recompence, actually do not think of eminence, but only of being of service.

6481. The Divine Providence as its end . . . has not man's happy condition in the world, namely, his wealth and eminence, in which so many . . . make happiness consist; when yet it is not so; for eminence usually gives birth to the love of self, and wealth to the love of the world, thus to the things which are contrary to love to God, and charity towards the neighbour ; wherefore such things are given to the evil, and also to the good if they do not disagree and withdraw from Heaven. Moreover, the Lord provides His ends through the evil equally as through the good . . . for the evil want to be eminent . . .

7007^o. Moreover, in eminence and opulence there is worldly happiness, but not eternal . . .

7820. Thus it may be seen, that those who are in the glory of the world, that is, in eminence and opulence above others, are equally able to look above themselves to the Lord as those who are not in eminence and opulence ; for they look above themselves when they have eminence and opulence as means and not as the end.

8920⁴. If truth Divine were to appear in a higher form than is the state of perception, it would not fall into the understanding . . .

8941². Truths then have as an end dignity and eminence before all the world . . .

10535. Their grief on account of no eminence before others. Sig. . . That people insisted that the Church should be instituted with them for no other end than that they might be eminent before all the nations in the world ; for they were in the love of self more than others, and they could not be uplifted to eminence over them in any other way than by having Jehovah among them, thus the Church. 10570.

10776. He who considers rightly, may know that eminence and opulence in the world are not real Divine blessings . . . for they pass away ; and also seduce many, and turn them away from Heaven.

H. 564². See DIGNITY.

W. 100. By way of eminence are called . . .

P. 183⁴. The Lord leads man away from the desire to seek honours for the sake of eminence alone, that is, for the sake of himself ; (and) leads him . . . to regard eminence not for the sake of himself, but for the sake of use, and thus to regard it as belonging to uses, and as his from them ; and not as belonging to him, and thence to uses.

E. 543¹³. By 'the Nephilim' and 'Anakin' in the Word are signified those who are in the highest persuasion of their own eminence and wisdom above others . . . When, in the Spiritual World, they who are in the persuasion of their own eminence look at others, they see them as little and vile ; and the latter see them as (giants).

1185². A tenth law of the Divine Providence is, That from his Own prudence man has led himself to eminence and to opulence, while they seduce . . .

—^e. There are two things which principally affect the minds—animos—of men, eminence and opulence ; eminence belongs to the love of glory and of honours ; opulence belongs to the love of money and of possessions. They principally affect minds, because they are proper to the natural man. Hence they who are merely natural know no otherwise than that eminence and opulence are real blessings, which are from God, when yet they may be curses ; as may be clearly concluded from the fact, that they are the portion of men both good and evil : I have seen the eminent and opulent in the Heavens ; and I have also seen them in the Hells : wherefore . . . when they do not seduce they are from God ; and when they do seduce they are from Hell . . .

—^e. As it is of the greatest importance to know whether eminence and opulence, that is, the love of glory and honours, and the love of money and possessions, are ends, or whether they are means, we shall first speak of the end and of the means ; because if they are ends they are curses, but if they are not ends but means they are blessings. 1186^e.

1187. Hence it is evident what is the quality of the man if his principal end is the love of eminence, that is, the love of glory and honours . . .

—³. As with a priest whose principal end is the love of eminence over others. . . It is quite otherwise if instruction, reformation, and the salvation of souls are the principal end, and opulence and eminence are means . . . With a spiritual priest, opulence and eminence are blessings ; but with a natural one they are curses.

1190². Of the Divine Providence man is led to such things as do not seduce, but which are of service to them for eternal life ; these things, too, relate to eminence and to opulence. . . The Heavens are distinguished into Societies, and in each Society there are the eminent and the opulent ; the eminent there being in such glory, and the opulent in such abundance, that the glory and abundance of the world are comparatively not anything. But all the eminent there are wise, and all the opulent there are men of knowledge, wherefore the eminence there is that of wisdom, and the opulence there is that of knowledge. This eminence and this opulence may be acquired in the world, both by those who are eminent and opulent there, and by those who are not so ; for they are acquired by all there who love wisdom and knowledge. To love wisdom is to love the uses which are the true uses ; and to love knowledge is to love the Knowledges of good and truth for the sake of these uses. When uses are loved more than self and the world, and the Knowledges of good and truth for the sake of them, uses are in the first place, and eminence and opulence in the second. This is the case with all who are eminent and opulent in the Heavens ; they regard the eminence in which they are from wisdom, and the opulence in which they are from knowledge, just as a man regards his garments.

1191². The eminence and opulence of the Angels of Heaven. Fully des.

—^e. These things have been written in order that it may be known that all things in the Heavens relate to eminence and to opulence, but that the eminence there is that of wisdom, and the opulence there that of knowledge ; and that such are the things to which a man is led by the Lord through His Divine Providence.

J. (Post.) 230. A rustic may be together with those who are eminent, nor does the other know who in the world had been the more eminent . . .

241. Many from various nations were seen (who had worn garments of state, and it was found) that they were thinking of their own eminence and excellence above others, and wanted all to turn their eyes to them . . .

Emissary. Emissarius.

See SUBJECT (Spirit).

A. 4403. Subjects, so called, or emissary Spirits.

5861. When a man comes into the other life . . . if he desires it, he is shown the Society of Spirits in whose company he had been, and from which emissary Spirits had been with him.

5983. These emissary Spirits are called Subjects . . .

5984^e. Hence it may be evident that communications take place through emissary Spirits.

7111^r. These Hells send forth emissaries through whom they act; they appear not far from those who are being infested. This is done in order that the thoughts and intentions of a number may be concentrated; otherwise they would be dissipated. These emissaries appear in their own stated places in the World of Spirits; and from the very places where they appear it may be known from what Hell they are. Some appear above the head at various heights and in various directions; some near the head either to the right or the left, also behind it; some below the head in various relations to the body, in planes from that of the head down to that of the soles of the feet. They flow in with such things as are cast forth from Hell; and of the things which flow in, a Spirit or a man has no other sensation . . . than that they are in himself . . . These emissaries are called Subjects . . . and as they most nearly infest, they are signified by 'the exactors.'

8382. The Spirits of Jupiter had emissaries or Subjects with me, for the sake of communication . . .

H. 255^e. A number (of Angels and Spirits) can speak with a man all together, and the man with them; for they send some Spirit to the man . . . and the Spirit who is sent turns himself to him, and those who sent him turn to their Spirit, and thus concentrate their thoughts, which the Spirit utters. At the moment, the Spirit knows no otherwise than that he is speaking from himself, and they know no otherwise than that they [are speaking]: thus is effected the conjunction of a number with one by means of conversion. Of these emissary Spirits, who are also called Subjects, more will be said.

4611. There is a continual influx from Hell through emissary Spirits.

4676. Many of those who have been converted to the Christian religion by missionaries . . .

8924. 'I will empty out the sword' (Ex.xv.9)=the continual combat of falsity from evil; as is evident from the signification of 'to empty out' or make it bare, which is continual combat until the enemy is laid low. Continual combat is also signified by an unsheathed or emptied out sword in Lev.xxvi.33.

— The first state, which was one of exinanition, is described in many places in the Word, especially in the Psalms of David and in the Prophets, and particularly in Is. liii. 12, where it is said that 'He emptied out His soul even unto death.' This same state was His state of humiliation before the Father; for in it He prayed to the Father, and says that He does His will, and ascribes to the Father all that He had done or spoken. III. Nay, upon the cross, He cried out, 'My God, My God, why dost Thou forsake Me?' and moreover, without this state He could not have been crucified. 110⁴. Can. Redeemer vi. 2. 3.

E. 697⁶. 'To empty out and spoil the land' (Is.xxiv.3) = the desolation of the Church as to the truths of doctrine and of faith.

Can. Redeemer vi. 4. When the Lord was in the Divine truth apart, He was in a state of exinanition.

S. 84. In the Word there are double expressions, which appear to be repetitions . . . as 'vacuity' and 'emptiness' . . . These appear to be synonyms, but are not so; for . . . 'vacuity' . . . is predicated of good, and in the opposite sense of evil; but . . . 'emptiness' . . . of truth, and in the opposite of falsity.

P. 290⁶. (They suppose) that I am like some empty thing.

M. 148. He calls this an emptiness of idea.

D. 4070. They first appeared to me as if they were something completely inane; (for) when Spirits cherish the idea that they are a kind of general, atmospheric something, wandering about in the universe, they appear as a general inane something; in this instance as a most inane something, with scarcely any perception that they are Spirits. The reason was, that when (the Most Ancient) Church declined, they believed that their spirit or life after death would be of this character.

E. 280⁶. 'Void and empty' (Jer.iv.)=that in the Church there was no good and truth.

294¹³. 'He hath not created it empty' (Is.xlv.18)=that it is not devoid of the truth and good in which are those who have been reformed. The lack of them is 'emptiness.'

—¹⁵. That before there was no Church, because men were devoid of good and truth, is signified by 'the earth was void and empty' (Gen.i.).

376²⁰. That the doctrine of falsity will be destroyed, is signified by 'the city of emptiness shall be broken;' 'city'=doctrine; and 'emptiness,' falsity.

386¹⁷. That the latter will be deprived, is signified by 'God hath sent the rich empty away' (Luke i.53).

419¹⁶. 'Wind and emptiness' (Is.xli.29)=falsities of evil and evils of falsity; 'wind,' the falsities of evil; and 'emptiness,' the evils of falsity; for where there is what is empty and void, that is, what is devoid of good and truth, there is evil and falsity.

587¹². 'Wind and emptiness' are predicated in the Word of falsities from proprium.

652⁷. 'The city of emptiness'=doctrine in which there is no truth, but falsity.

654¹¹. 'Egypt which is vanity and emptiness' (Is. xxx.7)=both the Sensuous and the Natural, which, regarded in themselves, are devoid of good and devoid of truths.

[A.] 4181. 'Thou hadst sent me away now empty' (Gen. xxxi. 42) = that he would have claimed all things for himself. 'To send away empty' = to take all things away from him, thus to claim all things for himself.

4744. 'The pit was empty, there was no water in it' (Gen. xxxvii. 24) = that there was then nothing true. . . 'Empty' = where there is nothing true because nothing good. III.

— . 'Empty vessels' (Jer. xiv. 3) = truths in which there is no truth from good.

— . 'An empty vessel' (Jer. li. 34) = where there is no truth.

— . 'They shall stretch out upon it the line of vacuity, and the perpendicular of emptiness—inanitatis' (Is. xxxiv. 11).

—². 'The city of vacuity is broken . . .' (Is. xxiv. 10). 'Empty' is here expressed by another word in the Original Language, which, however, involves what is similar. That 'empty' = where there is no truth because no good, is evident from the several things here in the internal sense.

— . 'Placing the pot empty upon the coals' (Ezek. xxiv. 11). . . An empty pot is one in which there is uncleanness and scum, that is, what is evil and false.

—³. 'He findeth it empty, swept, and prepared' (Matt. xii. 44) . . . 'An empty house' = the interiors of the man again replete with uncleanness, that is, with falsities from evil.

—^e. 'The rich He hath sent empty away' (Luke i. 53) . . . They are called 'the empty rich' who know these things and do not do them; for truths with such are not truths, because devoid of good.

W. 81. Abstract space, and altogether deny a vacuum . . .

82. Something shall here be said concerning a vacuum. I once heard the Angels speaking with Newton about a vacuum, saying that they could not bear the idea of a vacuum as of nothing, because in their World which is spiritual, and within or above the spaces and times of the natural world, they equally feel, think, are affected, love, will, breathe, nay, speak and act, which are never possible in a vacuum as nothing, because nothing is nothing, and of nothing nothing is predicable. Newton said, that he knows that the Divine which is fills all things, and that he himself shudders at the idea of nothing as applied to a vacuum, because that idea is destructive of all things. He exhorts those who speak with him about a vacuum, to guard against the idea of nothing, calling it a swoon, because in nothing no actuality of mind is possible.

373^e. Do not, I pray, think of these things from the idea of a vacuum; a vacuum is nothing, and in nothing nothing takes place—fit—, and from nothing nothing comes forth.

Ath. 66. (The Papists who adore the Lord) are accepted . . . although they are empty, from their doctrine, which is empty of truths.

J. (Post.) 263. There would then be a vacuum, in which there does not exist any change of state; for a vacuum is of no affection.

265. I spoke with Newton about a vacuum. . . Concerning a vacuum he said, that in the world he had believed in the existence of a vacuum; but when the Angels perceived that he had the idea of a vacuum as the idea of nothing, they turned themselves away, saying that they could not bear the idea of nothing, because with the idea of nothing there perished the idea of the essence of things; and with the idea of the essence of things there perished the idea of thought, understanding, affection, love, will, with men and Angels. . . . They asked him whether he believed that the Divine, from which is all angelic wisdom, and all intelligence with men in both worlds, is a vacuum, and thus whether any Divine operation flows in through a vacuum into a vacuum of these things, and could present these things to perception. At this inquiry he was disturbed, and answered that it could not through an absolute vacuum, which is nothing, but through an apparent vacuum, because the Divine is the being itself of wisdom and love with the Angels of Heaven and with men in the world, and fills all things; and being itself and nothing are contrary to each other. . . . Wherefore, the Angels prayed that he and all those who cherish the idea of a vacuum as of nothing should desist from it, in order that they might be together, knowing that nothing of their life would be possible in nothing, but only in things which exist. . . . adding, that concerning a vacuum which is nothing, nothing can ever be said which has relation to acting, reacting, receiving, attracting, thus to their life of wisdom and of love. . . . On hearing these things, Newton said, that heretofore he had desisted from that idea, and that hereafter he would desist from it, knowing that now he is in the Spiritual World, in which according to his former idea there would have existed his vacuum; and that nevertheless he is now a man, and there thinks, feels, acts, nay breathes; and these things cannot exist in a vacuum which is nothing. . . . and that an interstitial nothing is not possible, because that would be destructive of everything, that is, of the essences and substances which are something; for something and nothing are completely opposite to each other; so much so, that he shudders at the idea of nothing, and that he guards himself against that idea, lest his animus should fall into a swoon.

A. 5134¹¹. 'Enchantments' (Rev.ix.21)=the falsities thence which destroy truths.

7297. 'The magicians of Egypt did in like manner with their enchantments' (Ex.vii.11)=what is similar in appearance by perverting the ends of order. . . 'Enchantments'=the arts themselves of perverting order. Where 'sorceries' and 'enchantments' are mentioned in the Word, there is signified the art of presenting falsities so that they may appear as truths, and of presenting truths so that they may appear as falsities, which is chiefly done by means of fallacies. III.

7298. When there is dulness, falsities appear as truths, which is signified by 'sorceries,' and 'enchantments.'

462. What is meant by 'enchantments.' Ex. 'Enchantments' are mentioned just above instead of the eighth precept of the Decalogue, 'Thou shalt not bear false witness'. . . by which is signified. . . in the spiritual sense, to confirm and persuade that what is false is true and that what is evil is good; from which it is evident that 'to enchant'=to persuade to falsity, and thus to destroy truth.

—². Enchantments were in use among the ancients, and were done in three ways. First: They kept the hearing and thus the mind of another continually in their words and sayings. . . and at the same time breathing upon him and breathing into him thought conjoined with affection by means of a breathing in the sound of the speech, in consequence of which the hearer was not able to think anything from himself; thus the falsifiers infused their falsities with violence. Secondly: They infused what was persuasive, which was done by keeping the mind away from every thing contrary, and keeping it intent on the sole idea of the things they said: hence the spiritual sphere of their mind dispelled the spiritual sphere of the other's mind, and suffocated it. This was the spiritual witchcraft used by the magi of old; and was called the binding and tying of the understanding. This kind of enchantment was of the spirit or thought alone; but the former was also of the mouth or speech. Thirdly: The hearer kept his mind so fixedly in his own opinion as almost to stop up his ears against hearing anything from the speaker; which was done by holding the breath of the mouth, and sometimes by a silent muttering and thus by a continual denial of the opinion of his opponent. This kind of enchantment was that of the hearer; the two former were used by those who spoke to others. These three kinds of enchantment existed among the ancients, and still exist among infernal Spirits; but with men in the world there is only the third kind left with those who have confirmed in themselves the falsities of religion from the pride of their Own intelligence; for when these hear things contrary, they admit them no nearer into their thought than to contact, and then from the interior bosom of their mind they emit as it were a fire which consumes them, of which the other knows nothing except by indications from the face and the tone in the answer, if the enchanter does not keep down that fire, that is, the anger of his pride, by simulation. At the present day this kind of enchantment causes truths not to be accepted, and, with many, not to be understood.

796². Luther . . . imbued persuasion, which in the Spiritual World is of such efficacy that no one can resist it, or speak against what is said; but as this was a kind of enchantment in use by the ancients, he was strictly forbidden to speak from that persuasive power . . . Such a persuasive power, which is a kind of enchantment, springs from the love of self . . . so that when anyone contradicts, it not only attacks the matter of the question, but also the person.

E. 590. 'Nor of their enchantments, nor of their whoredoms' (Rev.ix.21)=from perverting good and falsifying truth. 'Enchantments'=perversions of good . . .

—². In ancient times there were in use a number of infernal arts called magical, of which some are enumerated in the Word, as in Deut.xviii.9-11. Among these were enchantments, whereby they induced affections and pleasures which another could not resist, and which was done by means of tones and silent voices which they either brought out or muttered, and which by analogous correspondences had communication with the will of the other, and excited his affection, and fascinated him to will, think, and act in a certain way. The prophets also were skilled in and made use of such enchantments, and thereby excited good affections, hearkening, and obedience. These enchantments in a good sense are mentioned in Is.iii.1,2,3,20; xxvi.16; Jer.viii.17; Ps. lviii.4,5. But as by such speeches and mutterings evil affections were excited by the evil, and thus enchantments became magical, they are enumerated among magical arts, and are strictly forbidden, as in Deut. xviii.9,10,11; Is.xlvii.9,12; Rev.xviii.23; xxii.15.

1191. By 'poisoning' (Rev.xviii.23) almost the like is signified as by 'enchantment;' and 'enchantment'=such a persuasion that the man perceives no otherwise than that it is so. Such a kind of persuasion exists with certain Spirits, so that it as it were blocks up the understanding of the other, and stifles his capacity to perceive . . .

978³. These three (the internal, interior, and external man) are like end, cause, and effect. It is known that there can never exist any effect unless there is a cause, and never any cause unless there is an end. Effect, cause, and end are distinguished from each other as the exterior, the interior, and the inmost.

1066⁴. 'From the end of the earth to the end of the earth' (Jer.xxv.33) = the Church and everything belonging to it.

1158³. The last boundaries of the Church are called 'the ends of the earth' (Is.xli.5).

1285³. If they are in charity . . . they have one end . . .

1316. The people is said to be one and the lip one, when all have as an end the common good of society, the common good of the Church, and the Lord's Kingdom; for thus the Lord is in the end, from Whom all are one. But where our Own good is the end, the Lord can never be present . . .

itself; all things that he thinks and does live from the end, because they are of the end; wherefore, such as is the end, such is the man's life. The end is nothing but the love; for a man cannot have anything as an end except that which he loves. He who thinks one thing and does another, still has as an end that which he loves: in the dissimulation itself, or in the deceit, there is the end, which is the love of self, or the love of the world, and the delight of his life therefrom.

1318². The thought of doing is nothing but the intention, that is, the end. The end with a man can never be . . . changed, unless the state is; for the end is the very life of man. While the state is being changed, the end is also being changed, and with the end, the thought.

1391^e. The Angels perceive what is within an idea . . . what its end is.

1598^e. In order that ends may become uses . . .

1645. The speech of the Angels . . . is of ends, and consequently of uses, which are the principals and the essentials of things. . . The ends and consequently the uses are as it were very soft recipients, and delicious subjects of indefinite variations, and this by means of incomprehensible celestial and spiritual forms; in these they are kept by the Lord; for the Lord's Kingdom is one purely of ends and uses; wherefore, the Angels who are with man, attend to nothing else than ends and uses, and elaborate nothing else from the thought of man: all other things which are ideal and material they care nothing about, because they are far below their sphere.

1807³. The soul is in use and end; the body in their exercise. All effects whatever, are in like manner the representatives of the uses which are the causes; and the uses are the representatives of the ends which are the beginnings.

1820. He who is in temptation is in doubt concerning the end; the end is the love, against which the evil Spirits and the evil Genii fight; and thus bring the end into doubt; and the doubt is great in proportion to the love. Unless the end which is loved were brought into doubt; nay, into despair, there would be no temptation . . .

[A.] 1909. The very life of the internal man inflows into all the affections of the natural man, but is varied there according to the ends. When it flows into affections which have the world as an end, this end is vivified by that life, and becomes a worldly life; when it flows into affections which have self as an end, this end is vivified by that life, and becomes a corporeal life; so in all other cases . . . The inflowing life is not applied to any object but the end, because the end regarded by everyone is his love . . . all other objects are only derivations therefrom, and derive their life from the end. Everyone can see the quality of his life, provided he will investigate the quality of his end; not the quality of [all] the ends, because these are innumerable, being as numerous as the intentions, and almost as numerous as the judgments and conclusions of the thoughts. These, however, are intermediate ends, which are variously derived from the principal one, or which tend to it. But let him investigate the end which he prefers to all the rest, and in respect to which the rest are as nothing. And if he has self and the world as an end, let him know that he is infernal; whereas, if he has as an end the good of the neighbour, the common good, the Lord's Kingdom, and especially the Lord Himself, let him know that he is heavenly.

1931^e. Angels perceive the still more interior things of man's thought, namely, the causes and the ends, of which man knows but little.

1936^f. In the other life . . . no one is ever punished for evil acts, if he has acted from an end truly good: the ends are what are regarded; the acts from them.

Angels are indeed present, but more remotely, and this according to the ends of life, which the Angels especially rule, constantly insinuating good ones and averting evil ones; and in proportion as they can or cannot do this, they flow in more nearly or more remotely.

2335^f. They who do not acknowledge in the life (that good is of the Lord) . . . are judged according to the acts, and according to the thoughts and ends of their life; and when they are judged according to these, they must necessarily be condemned . . .

2364^e. They who have imbued the life with evil are bent to good by abstaining from evil and by intending well . . . In this case the intention or end is regarded with them; and although their acts may not be in themselves good, still, they derive something of good and consequently of life from the end . . .

2474^f. All the ends of man, which had been veiled in obscurity to him . . . are in that book of life, that is, in the interior memory; and, whenever the Lord grants, are made manifest before the Angels as in clear day.

2488. The Angels know and observe the very ends, how they bend from good into evil, and from evil into good.

—^c. Deeds have their quality from the thoughts, and the thoughts from the ends.

2531^f. All these . . . are intermediate ends, by means of which the last end, that is, the Lord, is regarded.

2572^f. From love, since love is from the Lord, the Angels are in the beginnings or springs of things, that is, in ends and causes. To see from beginnings, or from ends and causes, is to see from Heaven all things which are beneath . . .

2621^e. Every effect has its own cause, and every cause has its own end; the end is the being of the cause, and the cause is the manifesting of the end: and, in like manner, the cause is the being of the effect, and the effect is the manifesting of the cause.

2796. Thus are (all things with man) directed by the Lord to ends to eternity, which the Lord alone foresees . . .

2905^f. The fulness of the states and times of the Church means their end. Ex.

2906^f. 'To come to years'=to the end, when the Lord recedes from the Church.

2910. In these two verses (Gen.xxiii.1,2), it has treated of the end of the Church: its end comes when there is no longer any charity . . . The Lord also describes this end in the Gospels, and calls it 'the consummation of the age,' and 'the night.'

—³. This Church is now at its end . . .

2936. 'Which is at the end of the field' (ver.9)=where there is but little of the Church. . . That 'the end,' or extremity=but little. Ex.

3033^f. When his end is (that he may become great and rich) . . .

3066^e. The end or use tells what is the quality of the ground, or of the affection, thus what is the quality of the produce of what is sown in it. Or, if you like, the love itself tells; for the love is the end and the use with all; since nothing is accounted as an end, or as a use, but that which is loved.

3089^f. The first affection of truth is very impure; for there is in it an affection of use and of end for the sake of self, the world, glory in Heaven, and the like . . .

3159. In proportion as man regards celestial and spiritual good as an end, truth is initiated to and conjoined with good . . . But in proportion as man regards his Own good, thus himself and the world as an end, celestial and spiritual good recedes.

3425^f. It is the ends alone which cause the internal and external man either to be opposites, or to correspond. They are opposites, when riches, pleasures, and the delights here spoken of become ends . . . But they correspond, when these things do not become ends, but means to higher ends . . .

—³. It is the ends alone, which distinguish (these two classes of people); or, what is the same, the loves; for loves are ends.

3488^f. 'He who shall persevere to the end, the same shall be saved' (Matt.xxiv.13)=the salvation of those who are in charity. 'He who perseveres to the end'= him who does not suffer himself to be seduced, thus who does not yield in temptations.

—^e. When the Church is in this state 'then shall the end come' (ver. 14).

3489. The Angels do not attend to anything but internal things, that is, to the ends, or to the intentions and will, and to the thoughts therefrom.

3518². (The desire of knowing, and its ends.) Ex.

—⁴. The new soul which man receives when he is being regenerated, is the end of good, which begins in the Rational . . . Celestial good and spiritual truth . . . are what form man . . . and this in the way and in the degree in which he looks as a man to ends of Heaven, and not as a brute animal to ends of the world.

3573³. Such a face have the Angels, and such a face had the most ancient people who were celestial men; for they were not at all afraid that others should know their ends and intentions . . .

3619^e. When the Intellectual inwardly wills and thinks anything, it is an end from the Voluntary which makes its life, and rules what is cogitative therein. The reason the Intellectual has life from the end, is that the end with man is his life.

3645. The universal Kingdom of the Lord is a Kingdom of ends and uses. I have been permitted manifestly to perceive this Divine sphere . . . of ends and uses . . . Each and all things flow forth from this sphere, and are ruled by it. In proportion as the affections, thoughts, and actions have in them the end of doing well from the heart; the man, spirit, or angel is in the Grand Man . . . But in proportion as a man or a Spirit has the end of doing evilly from the heart, he is outside the Grand Man, that is, in Hell.

3646². It is the ends which show the quality of man's life, and the quality of that of a beast: a man is able to have spiritual and celestial ends, and to see, acknowledge, believe, and be affected by them; whereas a beast cannot have any other ends than natural ones: thus a man is able to be in the Divine sphere of ends and uses which is Heaven and which constitutes Heaven; whereas a beast is not able to be in any other sphere than that of the ends and uses which there are on earth. Ends are nothing but loves; for the things which are loved are held as an end.

3660^e. When they have such things from the internal sense of the Word . . . they are in the Divine sphere of the Lord and that of His ends and uses.

3679^e. The Rational thinks in the good of the Natural when it regards good as an end . . .

—⁷. At first, the truth of good (Esau) is not conjoined in the external form with the good of truth (Jacob) . . . nevertheless, they are conjoined inmost, that is, as to ends; for the end of the truth which is from good is that truths may be adjoined to itself according to order; and this also is the end of the good which is from truth; and as the end conjoins, they are conjoined. The inverse of order which exists at first is only a means which regards the end.

3702². Hence it is evident, that there would be a descent of the Divine through man into the ultimate of nature, and from the ultimate of nature an ascent to the Divine, if only he would acknowledge the Lord as his first and last end with the faith of the heart, that is, with the love.

3796². The only sign by which affections are known is the end: if from their end they are for the sake of self or the love, these affections are not genuine; but if from their end they are for the sake of the good of the neighbour, of societies, of our country; and still more, if their end is the good of the Church, and of the Lord's Kingdom, they are genuine, because then the affections are for the sake of the Lord . . .

—³. It is the part of a wise man to know the ends which are in him. It sometimes appears as if the ends were for the sake of self when they are not; for it is the nature of man to reflect upon himself . . . But if anyone wants to know the ends which are in him, let him only attend to the delight which he perceives in himself from praise and self-glory, and to the delight which he perceives from use separated from himself: if he perceives the latter delight, he is in genuine affection. He should also attend to the various states in which he is, because the states themselves usually vary the perception. A man can explore these things in himself, but not in others; for the ends of each person's affection are known to the Lord alone . . . A thousand persons may appear to be in a like affection as to truth and good, and yet every one may be in an unlike one as to the origin, that is, as to the end.

[A. 3796]⁴. The reason the end determines the character of the affection . . . is that the end is the very life of man; for man has as an end that which is of his life, or, what is the same, that which is of his love. When the good of the neighbour, the common good, the good of the Church and of the Lord's Kingdom, are the end, then as to his soul the man is in the Lord's Kingdom, thus with the Lord; for the Kingdom of the Lord is nothing but a Kingdom of ends and of uses for the sake of the good of mankind. The Angels themselves who are with man, are wholly and entirely in his ends; and in proportion as a man is in such an end as the Lord's Kingdom is in, are the Angels delighted with him, and conjoin themselves with him as a brother; but in proportion as a man is in an end of self, the Angels recede, and evil Spirits from Hell accede to him; for no other end reigns in Hell . . .

3816. An end for the sake of self at once adjoins itself . . .

3839⁴. The Angels are solely in ends, and in the uses of ends. Refs. Ends are nothing but loves or affections. Refs. For what a man loves he has as an end; and therefore they are in the affectionous of the things which are in the Word . . .

3913³. Loves it from its use and end . . .

— . For the sake of those uses which are his ends . . .

—⁴. The state of the natural man and that of the spiritual are opposed to each other by means of the ends; but still they can be conjoined . . . when the things of the external man . . . serve the ends of the internal. Therefore, in order that man may become spiritual, it is necessary . . . that ends for self and the world be put off, and that ends for the neighbour and the Lord's Kingdom be put on . . .

3928. Corporeal and worldly delight no longer as an end . . .

3938⁶. From the loves of self and of the world, which they have had as ends . . .

3993³². See CUNNING at this ref.

4054. The brain, like Heaven, is in the sphere of ends, which are uses; for whatever flows in from the Lord is an end regarding the salvation of mankind. This is the end which reigns in Heaven, and which consequently reigns in the brain; for the brain regards ends in the body . . .

— . But there exist Societies which have no end of use . . .

—⁶. For the end makes the man; and such as the end is, such is the man; and therefore such is his human after death.

4063². Thus the new man regards ends in Heaven; but the old man, ends in the world . . .

—^c. When . . . he no longer has worldly, earthly, and corporeal things as an end; but the things of Heaven . . .

— . To have as an end, is to love the one more than the other.

4096². Has spiritual Knowledges as an end . . .

— . They who have worldly and earthly things as an end, cannot withdraw the senses from them . . . for they would then remove themselves from the things which they have as an end, that is, which they love.

—⁴. To know . . . from the Heaven of Angels is to know from the ends of causes.

—⁵. He is able to set the one (kingdom) before the other, or to have one as an end in preference to the other, and consequently, with him that which he has as an end or prefers has the dominion. If, therefore, he has as an end the Spiritual Kingdom . . . Whereas, when he has as an end the natural kingdom . . . When these things take place, all things in his Natural are ordered according to these ends . . . To have as an end is to love; for every end is of the love; for that is held as an end which is loved.

4110. A state of use and of the end of good. Sig. . . 'To shear' = use, thus end; for the use is the end.

4119. The end of the state of conjunction. Sig. See BEGINNING, here.

4169. Still, if it has an end of good . . .

4220^c. As an end they have had the things of self and the world . . .

4227⁴. They who are in Heaven, attend solely to the ends of those who pray.

4295². These temptations (by Angels) are the inmost of all; for they act solely into ends . . .

4307. Everyone may know what kind of Spirits are with him, provided he will observe the quality of his loves, or, what is the same, the quality of his ends; for everyone has as an end that which he loves.

4368⁴. See BLESS-beare-at this ref.

4459⁶. To the end that there may be a sound mind in a sound body . . . 5159². 6936.

— . Regards intelligence and wisdom as a mediate end . . .

4464³. As spheres originate from loves . . . they originate from the intentions and ends on account of which the man thus wills and acts ; for everyone has as an end that which he loves. Therefore the ends determine the man's life, and constitute its quality ; and, from them, especially, is his sphere. This sphere is most exquisitely perceived in Heaven, because the universal Heaven is in the sphere of ends.

4493^e. Everyone is judged according to the end or intention.

4633^e. The very ends of man's thought, of his speech, and of his actions, which . . . had become hidden to himself, are in Heaven most manifestly perceived ; for Heaven is in the sphere and perception of ends.

4658. No end but to be reputed learned.

4683². Not knowing that all confidence derives its being from the end of life . . .

4727². Thus the body is as the effect, and the soul as the cause in which is the end ; and therefore the soul is everything in the body, as the end's cause is everything in the effect.

4751. Has nothing as its end but money.

4839. All that evil is against Divine order which flows forth from evil interiorly, that is, from the intention or end of evil . . . But that which does not flow forth from evil interiorly, that is, from the intention or end of evil, does sometimes appear as if it were evil, but still is not so if the end is not evil ; for the end qualifies every deed, because in the end is the man's life, since that which a man loves and thence thinks he has as an end ; the life of his soul is nothing else.

5094¹. The rational natural man comprehends that it is the part of an intelligent person to keep ends in view, and to foresee and dispose the means to some ultimate end . . . He sees that nature is a complex of means, and perceives that an intelligent Supreme Being has disposed them ; but to what ultimate end, he does not see unless he becomes spiritual. Whereas . . . what it is to keep ends in view, and to dispose the means (the sensuous man) does not apprehend . . .

5122². See BEGINNING at this ref.

5128¹. Such, therefore, as is the intention or end in the conversation or works, such is the life.

5131². It is known from philosophy, that the end is the first of the cause, and that the cause is the first of the effect. For the end, cause, and effect to follow in order, and act as one, the effect should correspond to the cause, and the cause should correspond to the end. Still, the end does not appear as the cause, nor the cause as the effect ; for in order that the end may produce the cause, it must take administering means from the region where the cause is, and by means of these the end must make the cause ; and in order that the cause may produce the effect, it, again, must take administering means from the region where the effect is, and by means of these the cause must make the effect. These administering means are the things which correspond ; and, as they correspond, the end is able to be in the cause, and to actuate—agere—the cause ; and the cause is able to be in the effect, and to actuate—agere—the effect ; consequently, the end, through the cause, is able to actuate—agere—the effect. Very different is the case when there is not correspondence ; for then the end has not a cause in which it may be, still less an effect in which it may be ; but the end is changed and varied in the cause, and, finally, in the effect, according to the form made by the administering means.

—³. Each and all things in man ; nay, each and all things in nature, succeed each other as end, cause, and effect ; and, when they thus correspond to each other they act as one ; for then the end is the all in all things of the cause, and, through the cause, is the all in all things of the effect. As, for example ; when celestial love is the end, the will the cause, and the action the effect, if there is correspondence, that love inflows into the will, and the will into the action, and they so act as one, that, by means of the correspondence, the action is as it were the love . . . But, in order that the end, which is the love . . . may produce the cause, which is the will and thought, it must take to itself administering means in the rational mind which must correspond ; for without administering means which correspond, the end, which is the love, cannot be received, however much it may flow in from the Lord through Heaven.

5159³. (The ends of one who does not suffer himself to be regenerated, and those also of one who is being regenerated.)

—^e. The ends which are in a man are the things which have the dominion ; for the ends subordinate and subject to themselves all things which are in the man ; his veriest life is from no other source than the end, because the end is always the love.

5165³. In the light of Heaven there shine forth through this face the interiors, especially the intentions or ends . . .

5189. If a common cause actuated them . . . they could be consociated, because all would thus have one end . . .

[A. 5189]^f. Thus in ultimates (the fibres act) dissimilarly as to the appearance, yet similarly as to the end.

—^c. Ends are also represented by the beginnings from which come the fibres, such as there are in the brain.

522^a. Where external things are the ends of life, internal things are as nothing.

528^o. All truths of faith spring forth from good, and flow to good ; for they regard good as the end.

536⁸. The external man obeys when as an end he has not the world, but Heaven ; not self, but the neighbour ; consequently, when he regards corporeal and worldly things as means, and not as the end ; and he regards them as means and not as the end, when he loves the neighbour more than self, and the things of Heaven more than those of the world.

5388². Flatteries differ according to the ends . . .

566^o. The heavenly proprium . . . differs from man's proprium in this . . . it is the ends of life which are changed ; the ends of regarding lower things . . . are removed ; and the ends of regarding higher things are substituted in their place. The ends of life are nothing else than the very life of man ; for the ends are the will itself of the man ; and are his very loves ; for that which a man loves, he wills, and has as an end.

—². As it is with the effect relatively to the cause, so is it with the cause relatively to the end : unless this cause also comes forth from its cause, which is the end, it is not a cause ; for a cause without an end is a cause in no order ; and where there is no order there is not anything effected. Hence, then, it is evident, that, regarded in itself, the effect is the cause ; and, regarded in itself, the cause is the end ; and that the end of good is in Heaven, and proceeds from the Lord ; consequently, that the effect is not the effect unless the cause is in it, and constantly in it ; and that the cause is not the cause, unless the end is in it, and constantly in it ; and that the end is not the end of good, unless the Divine which proceeds from the Lord is in it.

5786². The external has the dominion, when the man has as an end the pleasures of the body and of the senses, especially when he has as an end the things which are of the love of self and of the world, but not those which are of Heaven : to have them as an end is to love the one and not the other. When he has such things as an end, he no longer believes in the existence of any internal man . . .

5854. It is provided by the Lord that Spirits should inflow into the thoughts and voluntary things of man, but the Angels into his ends, and thus through the ends into those things which follow from the ends . . . Especially do they turn away evils ends and insinuate good ones. But in the proportion that they cannot do this, they remove themselves, and flow in more remotely and absently ; and then evil Spirits approach nearer ; for the Angels are not able to be in evil ends, that is, in the loves of self and of the world ; but still they are present from afar.

—². By means of the Angels, the Lord could draw a man into good ends with an omnipotent force, but this would be to take away life from him . . .

—³. It was said, that by means of the Angels the Lord could draw a man into good ends with an omnipotent force . . . but the man would then come into such torture, and into such a Hell, that he could not possibly bear it ; for he would be miserably deprived of his own life . . .

5948². By instrumental things not being a subject of care, is meant that they must not be as the end, but that essential things must be so ; for in proportion as instrumental things are as the end, essential things withdraw themselves and vanish. Examps.

—^e. It follows, that as essential things must be as the end . . . the Lord alone must be so.

—². (In taking care of the body) the soul must be the end ; not that the soul must be the end as the end, but only as the mediate end . . . for the sake of the uses it has to perform in both worlds ; and when a man has uses as an end, he has the Lord as an end ; for the Lord disposes to uses, and He disposes the uses themselves.

—³. As few know what it is to have as an end, it shall be told. To have as an end is to love more than all other things ; for what a man loves he has as an end. What a man has as an end is manifestly Known ; for it reigns universally in him, thus is continually present, even when he seems to himself to be thinking nothing about it ; for it is seated in him and makes his interior life, and thus secretly rules each and all things. Examp.

6044. Each and all things have relation to an end, and regard it ; and the things which do not regard the end cannot subsist ; for the Lord never created anything except for the sake of an end ; insomuch that it may be said, that the end is the all in all things which have been created ; and the things which have been created are in such an order, that, as from the First through the mediates, the end regards the ultimates, so the end in the ultimate regards the end in the First : hence the connection of things. In its own first origin, the end is nothing but the Divine good of the Divine love, thus it is the Lord Himself ; from which He is called 'the First and the Last' . . . This being the case, it is necessary that each and all things which are of life with man should have relation to an end, and should regard it. . . The scientifics with man should regard truths as their end ; and truths should regard goods ; and goods should regard the Lord as the ultimate and the first end ; as the ultimate end when from truths, and as the first end when from good.

6214². (The Angels perceive in man still more things than Spirits do,) namely, the intention and ends, from the first ones through the middle ones to the ultimate ones. D.4390.

6389². From the end of recompence . . . 6391². Des.

6481. The Divine Providence has as its end . . .

6489. The Divine end to good reigns universally.

6490^o. It was once given me manifestly to perceive the sphere of ends, which is that of Providence from the Lord.

6540. 'Seven days'=the end.

6559^o. If good Spirits happen to speak evilly or to do what is evil . . . they are excused ; for their end is not to speak evilly or to do what is evil ; and they know that such things are excited with them by Hell . . .

6571². The man who is estranged from good and truth intends nothing but evil ; for he is not able to intend good ; and that which he intends reigns with him, and therefore is present in all his thoughts, and in all the least things that belong to him ; for the intention or end is the veriest life of man, because it is his love . . . And, what is more, a man is entirely such as is the end with him ; and such is his likeness—effigies—in the light of Heaven ; (moreover,) such as is his likeness in general, such is the likeness of the least things of his will ; thus a man is wholly and completely his own end. Hence it may be evident, that the man who is an evil end cannot possibly be among those who are good ends ; thus he who is in Hell cannot possibly be in Heaven ; for the ends are in conflict with each other ; and the good ends conquer, because they are from the Divine. . . If one who is an evil end comes into Heaven, his life labours like one who lies in the death agony, and he is direfully tormented ; moreover, in the light of Heaven he appears like a devil.

6935. The end declares how everyone must be neighbour to himself . . . If the end is that he may become richer than others, merely for the sake of riches, or of pleasure, or of eminence, or the like, it is an evil end . . . Whereas, if the end is to acquire wealth for the sake of the necessities of life . . . he consults his eternal welfare. The end itself makes the man ; for the end is his love, because everyone has as an end that which he loves.

6936^e. Hence it is evident, how everyone ought to be neighbour to himself, namely, not in the first but in the last place ; for the end must not be for the sake of self, but for the sake of others ; and where the end is, there is what is first.

6938^o. He who turns ends to self turns himself towards Hell ; but he who turns ends from self to the neighbour turns himself towards Heaven.

7017^o. Thus do the mediate ends conjoin themselves with the ultimate end, and make as it were one end.

7122². This combat actually takes place, and evil Spirits excite the falsities and evils, and the Angels excuse if the end has been good . . .

7297. See ENCHANT at this ref.

7523. The interior good, and also the interior evil which are signified by 'man,' are those which are of the intention or end ; for the intention or end is the inmost of man.

7607. Man looks above himself, that is, to Heaven even to the Divine, when he has as an end the neighbour, his country, the Church, Heaven, especially the Lord ; and he looks below himself when he has as an end self and the world. To have as an end is to love ; for that which is loved is held as the end . . .

7819. The man who is in the good of charity and faith, also loves self and the world, but no otherwise than as means to an end are loved . . . When, therefore, the means are loved for the sake of the end, it is not the means which are loved, but it is the end.

8002². It is the end which determines actions, and gives them quality.

[A.] 8037. They who have the love of self or the love of the world as an end . . . 8908².

8104. 'In the end of the wilderness' (Ex. xiii. 20) = the first state of temptations. . . And as this state commenced in the end of the wilderness, by 'the end of the wilderness' is signified the first state.

8318^e. The end (of this evil) is good; and the end qualifies all the rest.

8426. 'Evening' = the end of the former state. Ex.

8455^e. Peace affects . . . the origins of the ideas, and therefore the ends of man's life, with happiness . . .

8521³. They who have this end (the uses of life) are continually enlightened by the Lord.

8625^e. (Genii) assault the ends themselves.

8711. As the truths are pure, without a worldly end. Sig.

8745. At last both (the external and the internal man) have as an end to love the neighbour and to love the Lord . . .

8911². To be judged according to the will is the same as to be judged according to the love, and also the same as to be judged according to the ends of life; for the will of man is his love, and it is his end of life . . .

8941². When truths are taken from proprium, they regard and have as an end dignity and eminence . . . Whereas, truths which are from the Word regard and have as an end eternal life . . .

8995³. If they have (gain and honour) as an end, the natural man is dominant . . . If, however, they are not held as an end, but only as means to an end, the spiritual man is dominant . . . For when gain or honour is regarded as a means to an end, and not as the end, gain or honour is not regarded, but the end, which is use. Examp. . . That which with man is regarded as an end makes his veriest life; for he loves it above all things . . .

—4. His head was in Hell when he had the delights of the love of self or of the world as an end; and his head is in Heaven when these delights are as means to an end; for the end, which is the love, alone lives with man; whereas the means to an end do not live from themselves, but receive life from the end. Hence, from the ultimate end, the means are called the mediate ends, which live in proportion as they have regard to the ultimate end, which is the principal one. Hence it is, that when a man is regenerated, and therefore when he has as an end to love the neighbour and to love the Lord, he then has as means to love self and the world.

9081^e. 'To the ends of the earth' (Deut. xxxiii. 17) = on every side where is the Church.

9184². The man then views as ends the things which are of the Lord and Heaven, and the Lord Himself as the end for the sake of which are all things; and . . . the delights of gain and of honours as means to that end. It is known that the means have life from no other source than the end; and no life without the end. Examp.

9297⁴. In the other life, all are reduced to the state of their own good or of their own evil, thus to the use of their own life, which had been the end, that is, which they had loved above all things . . .

9317^e. This takes place when dominion and gain are regarded as ends, and truths from the Word as means.

9365. With them the doctrine of the Church is only a means to their own ends; and in proportion as the ends are desired, the means are loved, and are also believed.

9407². In its first origin, human speech is the end which the man wants to make manifest by the speech; this end is his love; for that which a man loves he has as an end; from this flows man's thought, and at last his speech. . . That the end is the first of speech, is evident from the general rule, that in all intelligence there is an end; and that without an end there is no intelligence . . . He who is wise, attends to the end for the sake of which a person speaks . . . that is, to what he intends, and to what he loves.

9666³. See EXTREMITY at this ref.

9812³. (Divine celestial good, Divine Spiritual good, and Divine natural good) follow each other in order, as end, cause, and effect; and as the end is the soul of the cause, and the cause is all that is efficient in the effect, so celestial good is the soul of spiritual good, and spiritual good is the all in natural good.

9825. Everywhere there must be end, cause, and effect; the end must be the inmost, the cause the middle, and the effect the ultimate, in order for a thing to be perfect; hence it is that 'three' = what is complete from beginning to end.

9828. 'The belt' = a general bond, that all things may have regard to one end. . . The reason there is a general bond in order that all things may regard one end, is that in the Spiritual World the end reigns; so much so, that all things there may be called ends; for the Kingdom of the Lord, which is the Spiritual World, is a Kingdom of uses; and the uses there are ends, thus it is a Kingdom of ends. But the ends there succeed each other and are also consociated in a varied order; the ends which succeed are called mediate ends, but the ends which are consociated are called consociate ends. All these ends are so mutually conjoined and subordinated as to regard one end, which is the universal end of all. This end is the Lord; and in Heaven with the recipients is love to Him and faith in Him; love there is the end of all their wills, and faith is the end of all their thoughts . . .

—³. When each and all things regard one end, they are held in an unseparated connection, and make one; for they are then under the view, government, and Providence of the One who bends all to Himself according to the laws of subordination and consociation . . .

999^e. The manifestation of things in successive order is as end, cause, and effect; the inmost is the end, the middle is the cause, and the ultimate is the effect; the end must be in the cause in order for it to be the cause of that end; and the cause must be in the effect in order for it to be the effect of that cause; the end does not appear in the effect as it does in the cause, because the effect is further away from the end than is the cause . . .

1021⁷. The triplication of the number six involves also the end; and the end is when truth is altogether profaned.

1027². The end is the inmost of man; for it is the soul of all things which are in him.

1033⁶. Whatever is from man for the sake of himself as an end is from evil. To love the neighbour for the sake of self, is to love him for the sake of gain and honour as ends. It is the end which determines whether it is from good or from evil; for the end is the love, because that which a man loves he has as an end. The end is also the will; for that which a man wills he loves. Hence the end propter quem, that is, the intention, is the man himself . . .

1045². With them the Holy of worship is the means, and eminence and opulence are the ends; thus the things of Heaven and the Church are the means, and those of the world and self are the ends; and the end propter quem commands with a man, and the means serve.

1049⁷. The residue of the worship of that nation will have its end together with the end of the present Church in Europe. Sig.

1061⁴. Hence it is evident, that interior things are in order in the external . . . as the end is in the cause, and the cause in the effect . . .

1077⁵. That which has no end, is; but that which has an end, relatively is not.

H. 112. The Lord's Kingdom is a Kingdom of ends which are uses, or, what is the same, is a Kingdom of uses which are ends.

41⁸. The reason perfection in the Heavens increases according to the numbers, is that all there have one end, and all unanimously look to that end; this end is the common good . . .

469². There is no end to any good thing, because it is from the Infinite.

S. 7. These three degrees are entirely distinct from each other, like end, cause, and effect . . .

27, 28. In every Divine work there is a first, a middle, and an ultimate; and the first goes through the middle to the ultimate, and thus comes forth and subsists . . . These three things may be named end, cause, and effect; also being, becoming, and coming forth; and end is being, cause is becoming, and effect is coming forth. Consequently, in every complete thing there is a trine, which is called the first, the middle, and the ultimate; also the end, the cause, and the effect . . .

67^e. Yet the thoughts of Angels and men make one by correspondences, as end, cause, and effect. Ends, also, actually are in the Celestial Kingdom, causes are in the Spiritual Kingdom, and effects are in the natural kingdom.

W. 2^e. The inmost thought, which is the perception of ends, is actually the first effect of life.

154. In every created thing, both the greatest and the least, there are end, cause, and effect . . . In the Sun which is the first proceeding of the Divine love and the Divine wisdom, is the end of all things; in the Spiritual World are the causes of all things; in the natural world are the effects of all things . . . Now, as there exists no created thing in which these three are not, it follows that the universe, and all things belonging to it, have been created by the Lord through the Sun, where is the end of all things.

165^e. See EFFECT at this ref.

166. The living thing disposes the dead thing . . . and forms it for uses, which are its ends.

167. That the end of creation comes forth in ultimates, which end is, that all things may return to the Creator, and that there may be conjunction. Gen.art. . . There are three things which follow in order, which are called the first end, the middle end, and the ultimate end; and they are also called the end, the cause, and the effect. These three must be together in every thing, in order for it to be anything; for a first end without a middle end, and at the same time an ultimate end, has no existence; or, what is the same, an end alone without a cause and an effect has no existence. In like manner neither does there exist a cause alone without an end from which it is, and without an effect in which it is. In like manner neither does there exist an effect alone, that is, an effect without a cause and its end. That this is so, may be comprehended if it be considered, that an end without an effect, that is, separated from an effect, is not a thing which comes forth . . . for an end, in order actually to be an end, must be terminated; and it is terminated in the effect, in which it is for the first time called an end, because it is an end. It appears as if the agent or efficient comes forth by itself; but this is an appearance arising from the fact that it is in the effect; but if it is separated from the effect it disappears in a moment.

168. Further . . . the end is everything in the cause, and also everything in the effect: hence it is, that the end, the cause, and the effect, are called the first end, the middle end, and the ultimate end. (197.) But in order for the end to be everything in the cause, there must be something from the end in which it must be; and in order for the end to be everything in the effect, there must be something from the end through the cause in which it must be; for the end cannot be in itself alone, but it must be in something coming forth from itself, in which it may be as to all that is its own, and, by acting, produce the effect, until at last it subsists.

That in which it subsists is the ultimate end, which is called the effect.

[W.] 169. That these three (end, cause, and effect) are in the greatest and least things of the created universe, is because they are in God the Creator . . . But as He is infinite, and the infinite things in the Infinite are distinctly one . . . these three in Him, and these three in His infinite things, are distinctly one. Hence it is, that the universe . . . has obtained these three in each and all things.

170. The universal end, or that of all things of creation, is that there may be an eternal conjunction of the Creator with the created universe . . .

171. To this ultimate end creation continuously progresses through . . . end, cause, and effect, because these three are in the Lord the Creator. . . From which it is evident, that the created universe, in its general progression to its ultimate end, is relatively the middle end . . .

172. That . . . end, cause, and effect are in each and all things which have been created, may also be evident from the fact, that all effects, which are called ultimate ends, become anew first ends in a continuous series from the First, who is the Lord the Creator, down to the ultimate, which is the conjunction of man with Him. That all ultimate ends become anew first ends, is evident from this, that there is nothing so inert and dead as to be totally devoid of working power—efficientis.

184. See DEGREE at these refs. 189.

193. That these things are in their own order, as ends, causes, and effects, is evident; for the first, which is the least, enacts—agit—its cause through the middle, and its effect through the ultimate.

197^e. The cause of the cause is also the cause of the thing caused; and there is nothing essential in causes except the end.

202³. The thoughts of the Angels of the Third Heaven are thoughts of ends; and the thoughts of the Angels of the Second Heaven are thoughts of causes; and the thoughts of the Angels of the First Heaven are thoughts of effects.

—⁴. It is one thing to think from ends, and another to think of ends; also it is one thing to think from causes, and another to think of causes; and again it is one thing to think from effects, and another to think of effects. The Angels of the lower Heavens think of causes and of ends; but the Angels of the higher Heavens, from causes and from ends; and to think from these belongs to higher wisdom, whereas to think of these belongs to lower wisdom. To think from ends is of wisdom, to think from causes is of intelligence, and to think from effects is of knowledge.

208. There are such degrees in every ultimate, thus in every effect. For . . . every effect consists of a cause, and this of an end; and the end is everything of the cause, and the cause is everything of the effect . . . and the end makes the inmost, the cause the middle, and the effect the ultimate.

209. There are two reasons why the doctrine of degrees extends also to such things. First: Because in every thing of which anything can be predicated there is the trine which is called end, cause, and effect, and these three are related to each other according to degrees of height.

211. As the progressions of discrete degrees are circumstanced as are the progressions of ends to causes, and of causes to effects . . .

213. As regards love and wisdom, love is the end, wisdom the instrumental cause, and use is the effect . . .

215^e. The Angels of the Third Heaven perceive and see from his will the end propter quem; and the Angels of the Second Heaven, the cause through which the end acts.

230. Love and wisdom apart from use have no boundary or end . . .

241. A few words shall here be said about love as being the end, about wisdom as being the cause, and about use as being the effect. Everyone . . . may see that a man's love is the end of all things of him; for that which he loves he thinks, he concludes, and he does, consequently has it as an end: (also) that wisdom is the cause; for he—that is, his love which is the end—diligently seeks means in the understanding by which to arrive at his end. Thus he consults his wisdom; and these means make the cause per quam. That use is the effect is evident without explanation.

253^e. It is exactly as was said above,—the end is everything of the cause, and the effect is everything of the end through the cause; the end is charity or good, the cause is faith or truth, and the effect is good works or uses.

314^e. (Thus) uses have been the ends of the whole creation.

330. As the end of creation is an angelic Heaven from mankind, thus mankind itself, all other things which have been created are mediate ends . . . P.27².

—^e. Hence it is evident in what order, degree, and respect, uses, which are the mediate ends of creation, relate to man.

P. 27. That the Divine Providence of the Lord has as its end a Heaven from mankind. Gen.art.

108. There are everywhere three things together which make one, and which are called end, cause, and effect. In the present case, the life's love is the end, the affections with their perceptions are the cause, and the delights of the affections with their thoughts are the effects; for in like manner as the end through the cause comes into the effect, so does the love through its affections come to its delights, and through its perceptions to its thoughts: the effects themselves are in the mind's delights and their thoughts when the delights are of the will and the thoughts are of the understanding thence . . . the effects are then of his spirit, and if they do not come into bodily act, they are still in act when there is consent . . .

—². Now as the end conjoins itself with the cause, and through the cause with the effect, so does the life's love with the internal of thought, and through this with its external. Hence it is evident, that the external of man's thought in itself is such as is its internal; for the end imparts all that belongs to it to the cause, and through the cause to the effect; for there exists nothing essential in the effect than what is in the cause, and through the cause in the end; and as the end is the essential thing itself which enters into the cause and the effect, the cause and the effect are called the mediate end and the ultimate end.

178². The mind of man is continually in these three things, which are called end, cause, and effect. If one of these is absent, the human mind is not in its life. The affection of the will is the end from which, the thought of the understanding is the cause by which, and the action of the body, the speech of the mouth, or the external sensation, are the effects of the end through the thought . . .

221. Unless he can be kept in them to the end of life.

R. 29. 'The beginning and the end' (Rev.i.8) relates to His Divine wisdom.

875⁶. (Love, wisdom, and use) are exactly as are end, cause, and effect: the end is not anything unless through the cause it is in the effect: if one of the three is destroyed, the whole is destroyed, and becomes as nothing . . .

M. 146⁶. The end, purpose, or intention of the will is primarily regarded by the Lord . . .

212. Regarded in itself, every end is love . . .

400. That the sphere of the love of procreating advances in order from the end through the causes into the effects, and makes periods, whereby creation is preserved . . . Gen.art. All the operations in the universe advance from ends through causes into effects. In themselves these three are indivisible, although in the ideas they appear as if they were divided. Nevertheless, the end is not anything except together with the seen effect which is intended; nor does either of them become anything unless the cause supports, looks out for, and conjoins. Such a progression is inscribed on every man in general and in every singular; exactly as the will, the understanding and the action. Every end is of the will, every cause is of the understanding, and every effect is of the action. In like manner, every end is of love, every instrumental cause is of wisdom, and every effect thence is of use . . . That these three are one in the effect is evident. That they also make one in the ideas before the effect, is perceived from the fact, that determination alone intervenes; for in the mind the end goes forth from the will, and produces for itself a cause in the understanding, and presents to itself an intention; and an intention is as an act before determination: hence it is, that by a wise man, and also by the Lord, an intention is accepted as an act.

401. A like progression from the end through the cause into the effect belongs to the sphere of procreating and of protecting the things procreated. In this case, the end is the will or love of procreating, the mediate instrumental cause into which the end introduces itself, is marriage love; the progressive series of efficient causes is the loving, conception, gestation of the embryo . . . and the effect is the procreated offspring. But although the end, the cause, and the effect advance successively as three things, still, in the love of procreating, and inwardly in all the causes, and in the effect itself, they make one; it is only the efficient causes which advance through times, because in nature; while the end, or will and love, remains constantly the same; for the ends advance in nature through times apart from time, but they cannot come forth—prodire—and put themselves forth until the effect or use comes forth and becomes a subject . . .

402. As the angelic Heaven is the end of ends, and thence the love of loves with the Lord . . .

403. While the end, which is the love of procreating, begins its progression . . .

408. To think and conclude from what is interior and prior, is to do so from ends and causes to effects; whereas to think and conclude from what is exterior or posterior, is to do so from effects to causes and ends: the latter progression is contrary to order, but the former is according to order; for to think and conclude from ends and causes, is to do so from things good and true clearly seen in the higher region of the mind, to the effects in the lower region: human rationality itself is such from creation. Whereas to think and conclude from effects is to surmise causes and ends from the lower region of the mind, where are the sensuous things of the body with their appearances and fallacies; which in itself is nothing else than to confirm falsities and concupiscences . . .

I. 5⁶. That the Divine fills all things . . . reason sees . . . more nearly in proportion as it has a Knowledge of the nature of love as it is in itself, of its conjunction in order that ends may be perceived, of its influx into wisdom in order that causes may be presented, and of its operation by means of wisdom in order that effects may be produced.

[I.] 17. That ends are in the first degree, causes in the second, and effects in the third. Gen.art. Who does not see that the end is not the cause, but that it produces the cause? and that the cause is not the effect, but that it produces the effect? consequently, that these are three distinct things which follow each other in order. The end with man is the love of his will; for that which a man loves he proposes to himself and intends: the cause with him is the reason of his understanding; for through it the end seeks for mediate or efficient causes: and the effect is the operation of the body, from, and according to, the end and the cause. Thus there are three things in man which follow each other in order, in the same way as degrees of height follow each other. When these three are presented, the end is within the cause, and, through the cause, the end is in the effect; therefore, these three coexist in the effect. Hence it is that it is said in the Word, that everyone shall be judged according to his works; for the end, or the love of his will, and the cause, or the reason of his understanding, are simultaneously present in the effects which are the works of his body. . . .

—³. The end which is of the will, the causes which are of the understanding, and the effects which are of the body, follow from his love, as a tree from its seed, and as fruit from a tree.

T. 13. The universe is a work which coheres together from primes to ultimates, because in creating it God aimed at one end, which was an angelic Heaven from mankind, and the means to that end are all things of which the world is composed; for he who wills an end also wills the means. . . .

—³. They who look at some things in the world separately, and not at all things universally in a series in which are ends, mediate causes, and effects; and who do not deduce creation from the Divine love through the Divine wisdom, cannot see that the universe is the work of one God, and that He dwells in every use, because He dwells in the end; for everyone who is in an end is also in the means; for inmost in all the means is the end which enacts—agit—and leads the means.

47. (Thus) the universe is a work which coheres together from primes to ultimates, because it is a containant work of ends, causes, and effects in an indissoluble connection: and as in all love there is an end, and in all wisdom the promotion of the end through mediate causes, and through them to the effects which are uses, it follows that the universe is a containant work of the Divine love, the Divine wisdom, and uses. . . .

67². There are also three things which follow each other in order,—end, cause, and effect; and it is known in the learned world, that the end is not anything unless it regards the efficient cause, and that the end and this cause are not anything unless the effect takes place: the end and the cause may indeed be contemplated abstractedly in the mind, but still for the sake of some effect which the end intends and the cause procures—procurat.

371^o. In short, such is the reciprocal conjunction (that is, not alternate but mutual) of the end and the cause, and such is that of the cause and the effect.

404². The quality of every love is predicated from the end which it regards and intends.

406^e. Hence is evident what is first in time, and what is first in end, and that what is first in end is that to which all things look.

762. It is according to the Divine order, which is, that there is a beginning and its end before a new beginning has its rise.

Ad. 930. Ends are as it were the souls of uses, as uses are as it were the souls of effects. The intellectual mind has been given to man in order to view ends which are in uses; moreover, it seeks for the uses which are in causes and effects.

931. As the understanding views ends, it also views the progressions of ends. . . .

996^e. The loves themselves are called the ends, because the understanding views that as an end which is good, because it is loved or is to be loved.

D. 798. It is a universal rule concerning the life after death, that it is allotted to everyone according to the ends in the life of the body. Gen.art. The created universe is only a complex of means to the end of ends, which is the Lord, because He is Heaven. Mediate ends proceed from the lowest things by their series and degrees of order to higher things, thus to the highest ones. The disposition of these means and ends is order.

799. Such a means therefore, or such a mediate end as is man in his ends, such a nature does he put on. . . .

800. From the ends which man proposes to himself in the life of the body. . . . the man is disposed so as to be a member (of the grand body).

801. That ends dispose men may be evident from this, that a man's life consists in his ends, which for the most part are loves; and his ends taken together are as it were his soul. . . . for the soul of man regards ends alone, and it is a complex of ends. . . .

802. That ends dispose. Ex.

803. The worst of all ends is he who has self as an end. . . . Next, they who have the end of doing injury.

804. That the ends in the life of the body induce a nature and an instinct which man bears with him into the other life. Examp. 808.

885. On the determination of Souls to stated ends.

1235. The quality of the ends of life may be evident in diseases when death is imminent. Gen.art.

2381. It is a universal law that each and all things are circumstanced according to the end; and that there are genera and species of ends, thus indefinite ones.

2450^e. Thus it is from the end that each and all things are judged. It is the end which forms the disposition. It is the end according to which they are judged in the other life. The end is the all in all of the disposition. The end of all ends must be the Lord.

2451. That in the other life all things are judged according to the ends.

2459^e. Men. . . . do not know. . . . from what end

(people have acted); for the end is known to the Lord alone.

2565. Their speech . . . is in that sphere where reign the intentions of men, that is, their ends.

2620. It is turned into the opposite, thus into contrary ends.

2854. That the view of ends . . . distinguishes man from the brutes. . . The ends in man are what lead him. . . . Man ought to know ends, and to aspire to them, to view them, and to be affected by them. Since, therefore, the first and last end of man is eternal life, and he is such that he is able to view ends, unless man views the true end, that is, his eternal state, and thus the Lord, he is not a man.

2918. How man is led to good ends even by the evil.

3575. (Thus) the most universal end of all is that which disposes each and all things; and He who disposes is the end from Which and to Which all things tend in order; and the end, which is the Lord, so effects that all lower ends and uses should in order regard Himself. . . and that the end is life may be evident from the ends of each man.

3638. That there is an interior thought, man may know . . . for whatever he thinks . . . is from an end, and for the sake of an end. They who think, have an end . . . which directs the thoughts. . . Especially are the deceitful in such thought; for they more manifestly think from ends and for the sake of ends.

3642. All the evil and deceitful are held to a stated end, thus conjoined together; for evil ends also conjoin; whereas, if . . . they were not withheld to common ends, they would rush at one another. . . .

3820. It is the prerogative of man . . . to have as an end the Societies of the other life. If the ends of man have not regard to the things which are of spiritual and celestial life . . . he cannot have any life but that of a beast; for the ends show what the life is and what is its quality.

3897. They receded to the ends of the universe.

4222. The ends for the sake of self and the world are gradually removed by the Lord . . . so that there is no end for the sake of self.

4223. The Angels care for nothing else with man than the ends: when there is with man an end for the sake of self and for the sake of the world, they as far as possible oppose and remove it, and turn it into an end of good; thus, when there is an end of good they are delighted. In proportion as there is an end of good they are present; and in proportion as there is an end of evil they are removed.

4256. The speech and thought of the Angels are ineffable; they aim at nothing but ends, and thus at uses (4267, Ex.) . . . The Angels who rule man regard nothing but the ends; of these man is not aware; therefore, they abhor those who have evil ends . . .

4323. On the devil himself, from the end. . . There are only ends of destroying what is good and true. . . It is the ends which judge a man. . . .

4324. On the end, and thence the life of Spirits.

—^e. There are some who have done evils from ignorance, with a good end . . .

D. Min. 4577^e. That which universally reigns is the end.

4668. On the Divine sphere of ends and uses.

E. 174. 'To keep even unto the end' (Rev.ii.26)=perseverance (in love and faith) unto death.

182^e. As all means savour of the end, and in their essence are such as are their ends,—wherefore they are also called intermediate ends . . .

294. The coming forth of heaven and earth is not the end of creation, but it is the means to the end. The end of creation is that mankind may come forth, and that from it there may be an angelic Heaven. . . Ends are what are understood in the spiritual sense of the Word, but in the sense of the letter there are mentioned only the means which involve ends.

304¹⁰. 'From the end of the earth to the end of the earth'=all things of the Church. —²⁰.

—²¹. 'The isles,' and 'the ends of the earth'=those who are more remote from the truths and goods of the Church. 677⁶.

—³⁵. 'The end comes upon the four quarters of the earth' (Ezek.vii.2)=the last time and the last state of the Church when it is at its end. —⁵⁰. 313⁵.

401²⁵. By 'an end' (Is. liv. 12) the like is meant as by 'a foundation,' and this is the natural man, because in the things which are there, are terminated the goods and truths of the spiritual man.

514¹⁴. 'The time of the end' (Dan.xi.40)=the last time of the Church, when there is no truth because there is no good.

529. The Lord enlightening all in the Heavens concerning the state of the Church at its end. Sig.

566. The end itself, which is when the Last Judgment is at hand, is described by the sounding of the seventh Angel. 624.

612². 'An end is come, the end is come' (Ezek.vii.6). By 'the end' here also is signified the end of the Church.

644¹⁹. 'The end of the earth'=the ultimates of the Church. 650³⁰. 1133³.

659²². 'From the end of the earth to the end thereof' (Jer.xxv.33)=from the primes to the ultimates of the Church, thus falsities of every kind.

706²³. 'The ends'=the ultimates of Heaven and the Church.

867³. The Angels perceive nothing with man but his love, and thence his affections, longings, and delights, and therefore his ends for the sake of which he so thinks . . . When, therefore, they perceive with him the love of truth for the sake of the uses of life, which are the ends, they then do not see any falsities from evil . . .

1053². For the means regard the end as servants regard their lord ; and the end regards the means as a lord his servants. Examp.

—^e. The end conjoins the means with itself, in order that they may be as one.

1082⁵. The reason the Spiritual by influx presents to itself what is correspondent in the Natural, is that the end may become the cause, and the cause the effect ; and thus that the end through the cause in the effect may present itself as visible and sensible. This trine, namely, end, cause, and effect, exists from creation in every Heaven ; the end is the good of love, the cause is the truth from that good, and the effect is the use . . .

—^e. In order that the Word may consist of effects, in which are the cause and the end ; or of uses in which truth is the cause, and good the end . . .

1083^e. The thoughts (of an Angel and a man) are one by correspondences, as end, cause, and effect are one : ends also are actually in the Celestial Kingdom, causes in the Spiritual Kingdom, and effects in the natural world.

1089. The end chooses the means and applies them to itself. Examp.

1138⁶. (If man did not feel) that life is in him, no end propter quem would exist with man. It does exist with him because the end a quo appears as if it were in him. The end a quo is his love which is his life ; and the end propter quem is the delight of his love or life ; and the effect in which the end presents itself is use. The end propter quem, which is the delight of the life's love, is felt and perceived in man, because the end a quo gives him to feel and perceive it . . .

1185^e. If they are ends they are curses, whereas if they are not ends, but means, they are blessings.

1187. As the end which is the love belonging to man's will, through the understanding, provides or procures for itself means through which may come forth the ultimate end, to which the first end progresses through the means, and which is the end that comes forth—and this is use—it follows that the end loves the means when they perform this use ; and that it does not love them if they do not perform it ; and that in this case it rejects them, and through the understanding provides . . . for itself other means. Examp.

Ath. 2. A sign that . . . it is now the very end of the Church.

166. The trine of one Person . . . would be received at the end of the Church.

J.(Post.) 17. Trade is the end and love (of the Dutch), and is in the first place ; and money is the mediate end . . .

D. Love ix². (Thus) the objects or ends of affections are uses . . . and the forms themselves in which they come forth are effects, which are their likenesses, and in which they advance from the first end to the ultimate one, and from the ultimate end to the first one . . .

D. Wis. ii². Moreover, no effect comes forth from itself, but from a cause prior to it, which is called the efficient cause : neither is this from itself, but from a cause which is called the end, in which, in endeavour and in idea, there is everything which follows, in endeavour in the Divine love, and in idea in the Divine wisdom, which are the end of ends.

—⁴. As (natural things) have come forth and perpetually subsist from (spiritual things), they are correspondences ; and therefore they act as one ; as end, cause, and effect. Examp. . . It is a universal law of correspondences, that what is spiritual fits itself into the use which is its end, and actuates and modifies the use by heat and light, and clothes it by foreseen means, until it becomes a form subservient to the end, in which form what is spiritual acts as the end, use as the cause, and what is natural as the effect. In the Spiritual World there is what is substantial instead of what is natural. Such forms are all things which are in man.

xi. In each and all things there are these three, end, cause, and effect. The end is the a quo, the cause is the per quod, and the effect is the in quo ; and when the end through the cause is in the effect, it comes forth. In all love and its affection there is an end, and the end intends, or wills to do what it loves ; and the deed is its effect. The Lord is the end a quo, man is the cause per quem, and use is the effect in which (in quo) the end comes forth . . .

— That in each and all things there are end, cause, and effect, may be investigated from anything whatever : as when a man does anything, he says . . . Why do you do this ? thus, What is the end ? By what means do you do this ? thus, By what cause ? and What are you doing ? which is the effect. The end, the cause, and the effect are also called the final cause, the mediate cause, and the thing caused ; and it is from the law of causes, that the end is everything in the cause, and thence everything in the effect ; for the end is their very essence . . .

Can. God vii. On the very end of creation, which is an angelic Heaven from mankind.

1. In the created world there are perpetual progressions of ends, from the first ends, through the mediate ends, to the ultimate ends.

2. The first ends are of love, or relations to love; the mediate ends are of wisdom, or relations to wisdom; the ultimate ends are uses, or relations to uses . . .

3. The progressions of these ends go from primes to ultimates, and return from ultimates to primes; and they go and return by periods, which are called the circles of things.

4. These progressions of ends are universal more and less; and these are complexes of singular ends.

5. The most universal end, which is the end of ends, is in God; and it proceeds from God, from the primes of the Spiritual World to the ultimates of the natural world; and from these ultimates it returns to those primes, and thus to God.

6. This most universal end, or end of ends from God, is an angelic Heaven from mankind.

7. This most universal end is a complex of all ends, and of these progressions in both worlds . . .

8. This most universal end is inmost, and is as the life and soul, the force and endeavour, in each and all created things.

10. From this end, implanted in created things, in general and in part, is the preservation of the universe.

7a. Therefore all things which have been created regard man as the end.

8a. As the angelic Heaven is formed from men . . . all things which have been created regard the angelic Heaven as the end.

10a. Eternal blessednesses, happinesses, and delights are the ends of creation, because they are of love.

11a. This end is the inmost, thus is as the life and soul, and as the force and endeavour, in each and all created things.

12a. This end is God in them.

13a. This end implanted in created things in general and in part, causes the universe to be preserved in its created state, in proportion as the ends of an opposite love do not obstruct and impair.

14a. God . . . continually provides that opposite ends from opposite loves should not prevail . . .

Redemp. ii. The end of the Church is at hand when the power of evil begins to prevail over the power of good through truths, in the natural world, and at the same time the power of Hell over the power of Heaven.

v. At the end of the Church total damnation threatens men on earth and the Angels in the Heavens.

Coro. xii. It is the end of the Church when there no longer remains any truth of faith and genuine good of charity. 9.

6. The fourth (state of each Church) has been its end . . .

Endanger. See DANGER, TO BE IN.

Endeavour. Conari, Conatus.

A. 694. The endeavours (of Heaven and of Hell).

1266. They are in the continual effort-nisus-to rise up, but cannot proceed beyond the endeavour. 1267.

1399°. Thence are ruled all the endeavours of his life.

1879°. When their endeavour was defeated . . .

— I did not at all endeavour to repel these guests.

—^e. Endeavouring-conantes-to accomplish their endeavours . . .

1937°. They supposed that all endeavour would be in vain . . . and therefore they awaited an immediate influx into the endeavour of their will.

—³. They were afterwards enlightened [to see] that their endeavour had been from the Lord . . .

— Man's heavenly proprium is formed in the endeavour of his thought . . .

2373°. The endeavour to destroy (charity and the Lord) . . .

2406°. The perpetual endeavour of every man is to evil . . .

2818. To the endeavour, but not to the act.

2946. If this influx did not take place, they would endeavour nothing.

3509°. Before man is regenerate . . . the endeavour of the will is perceived as being very distinct from the endeavour of the understanding.

3610°. In every plant there lies inmostly concealed an endeavour to produce fruits or seeds . . .

—⁴. With those who are being born anew, the marriage principle of good and truth . . . is present as an endeavour in the efficient cause and thence in the effect . . . It is this endeavour which is (here signified).

3648. They are in the continual endeavour to propagate their . . . species.

3742°. As there is such a Divine endeavour continually from the Lord . . .

3748°. I spoke further about endeavour, asking him whether he knew that endeavour produces acts and motions, and that there must be endeavour in act and motion in order that it may come forth and subsist.

4049°. (The endeavour of the best lymph to return to the brain, and the correspondence of this endeavour).

4151°. Man cannot even endeavour what is good from himself . . .

4247°. If anything opposes the endeavour to act . . .

—³. If they cannot come into act, they are in endeavour: the very endeavour is an internal act . . .

4317°. Hereditary evil . . . is the very endeavour which is in the will . . .

4459°. They are in the perpetual endeavour to destroy others.

5116°. Such endeavours could never exist in each thing of the vegetable kingdom, unless the Divine continually flowed in. From the influx is the endeavour; from the endeavour is the force; and from the force the effect.

5173°. That which is in natural things from the Spiritual World, is called a force implanted from the first creation, whereas it is an endeavour, on the cessation of which action or motion ceases . . .

—³. (So it is with) the motion of the muscles . . . Unless there were in it an endeavour from the man's will and thought, it would cease in a moment; for it is according to the rules known in the learned world, that when endeavour ceases motion ceases ; also that everything of determination is in endeavour ; and also that nothing real exists in motion except endeavour. That this force or endeavour in action or motion is something spiritual in what is natural, is clear . . .

[A.] 5408. The endeavour and act . . . to procure and appropriate to themselves truths by means of sciences. Sig.

5759². At last acknowledges at heart, that all his endeavour to do what is good and to speak what is true has been and is from the Lord.

6657. Around every man, and . . . good Spirit, there is a general sphere of endeavours from Hell, and a general sphere of endeavours from Heaven ; the sphere which is from Hell is a sphere of endeavours to do evil and to destroy ; that which is from Heaven is a sphere of endeavours to do good and to save . . .

6666. They are in the continual endeavour to subjugate. —², Des.

8307². The reason man can abstain from evils of himself, is that the Lord continually inflows into man's will with this endeavour . . .

8678. The endeavour and force of having dominion over those who are of the Church, Sig. . . For this endeavour and force are present in all pride . . . That (the infernals) are such is perceived from their endeavour . . . It is this endeavour which is restrained by the Lord, and which is meant by 'the head of the serpent' . . .

8911. This is circumstanced as are endeavour and motion ; motion is nothing but continuous endeavour ; for when endeavour ceases motion ceases ; wherefore, there is nothing essential in motion except endeavour. . . . Endeavour in man is will, and motion in him is action ; so are they called in man, because in him endeavour and motion are alive. W.19².

9293. In deeds nothing lives except will, as nothing lives in motions except endeavour.

9812^e. That which is the soul, and that which is everything in something else, is in it as endeavour is in motion.

10618^o. To injure good is always in the endeavour of evil.

10738^l. The likeness between (the soul and the body) is like that which is in endeavour and that which is in the act thence ; for act is endeavour acting, and thus the two are one. Endeavour in man is called will, and endeavour acting is called action.

H. 384². A perpetual endeavour to dissolve and do violence to marriages . . .

538. The sphere of falsity from evil flowing forth from Hell is like a perpetual endeavour to destroy everything good and true . . . especially an endeavour to annihilate and destroy the Divine of the Lord.

589. Everywhere (in nature) there is as it were an endeavour acting on the one side and reacting on the other.

—². In the natural world, that which acts and that which reacts is called force and also endeavour ; but in the Spiritual World that which acts and that which reacts is called life and will ; life there is living force, and will is living endeavour.

590. From Hell there continually breathes forth and ascends the endeavour to do what is evil, and from Heaven there continually breathes forth and descends the endeavour to do what is good ; in this equilibrium is the World of Spirits.

595. The Divine sphere proceeding from the Lord is the perpetual endeavour to save all.

F. 16. In the seed is the endeavour to produce fruit . . . This endeavour is excited by heat . . . Thus the endeavour to bear fruit comes forth. From which it is evident, that the endeavour to produce fruit is perpetual in the whole progression until it comes forth . . . The application is this. The tree is man. The endeavour to produce means is with man from the will in the understanding . . .

W. 62. As there is an endeavour of the minerals of the earth to vegetate, so there is an endeavour of plants to vivify themselves . . .

65. The end of all uses is the endeavour to produce them, and the beginning is the force acting from that endeavour.

218. Here, I desire to confirm these things by the endeavours, forces, and motions in dead subjects and in living subjects. It is known that endeavour does nothing from itself, but by means of forces corresponding to itself, and by means of these presents motion ; and that it is a consequence of this, that endeavour is everything in forces, and, through the forces, in motion :

and as motion is the ultimate degree of endeavour, that through this motion it exerts its power. Endeavour, force, and motion are no otherwise conjoined than according to degrees of height . . . For endeavour is not force, nor is force motion, but force is produced by endeavour, because force is excited endeavour, and motion is produced through force; wherefore, there is no power in endeavour alone, nor in force alone, but in motion, which is their product.

219. Let there be an application of these things to living endeavour, and to living force, and to living motion. Living endeavour in man . . . is his will united to his understanding . . .

—^e. It may seem as if the endeavours and forces in man are in some power although there is no action, as in sleep . . . but still the determinations of the endeavours and forces are at such times directed into the general motor organs of the body, which are the heart and lungs; but when the action of these ceases, the forces also cease, and, with the forces, the endeavours.

269. The seed is in the form of (the father's) love, and the love of everyone is in the greatest and least things like unto itself, and there is in it an endeavour into the human form . . .

303. The substances and matters such as there are in earths, retain in themselves from the atmospheres from which they originated, an effort-nismus-and endeavour to bring forth uses.

310. That in earths there is an endeavour to produce uses in forms, or forms of uses. Gen.art.

—². This endeavour (in seeds) is afterwards continuous from the earth through the root even to the ultimates, and from the ultimates to the primes . . .

—³. There is an endeavour still more interior, which is the endeavour to produce uses for the animal kingdom by vegetable growths . . . There is also an inmost endeavour in these things, which is the endeavour to perform use to mankind . . .

—^e. There are degrees of both kinds in the greatest and least things of all things . . . in like manner in this endeavour. All uses are produced by the Lord from ultimates, therefore in ultimates there must be an endeavour towards them.

311. Still, all these endeavours are not alive; for they are endeavours of the ultimate forces of life, and in these forces, from the life from which they come, there is at length an effort-nismus-to return to their origin . . .

312. The first production from these earths . . . was the production of seeds; the first endeavour in them could not be anything else.

313^e. This image of creation lies stored up in their endeavours.

318. The image of the Infinite in these forms is manifest from their endeavour and power to fill the spaces of the whole world . . .

343^e. In every spiritual thing there is present an endeavour to clothe itself with a body.

P. 3². If you take away endeavour from motion, the motion ceases.

R. 867^e. Spiritual light and spiritual heat together disclose the intentions and endeavours.

868. The works of the mind are the intentions and the endeavours.

875³. I asked, Cannot a man have charity and faith, and still not have works? . . . The angelic Spirit said to me, He cannot, except only ideally . . . He must still be in the endeavour or will to operate, and will or endeavour in itself is act, because it is the continual effort-nismus-to act . . . Therefore, endeavour and will, as an interior act, is accepted by every wise man, because by God, just as an exterior act . . .

M. 215. This will (to become one man) is the perpetual endeavour of that love, from which flow all its effects. Endeavour is the very essence of motion, and will is the living endeavour in man . . .

T. 73². God is in the perpetual endeavour to regenerate and thus to save man.

457^e. It is like endeavour in motion.

482². Like a body in motion, which is carried along so long as there is endeavour in it.

— . The free-will and the will in man taken together may be called living endeavour . . .

510. In the endeavour to assault him . . .

539. The Lord . . . inspired . . . this endeavour to desist from them.

767². I doubt not that there is a like endeavour and effort in the twigs and boughs of every tree.

—³. Why should not man [turn to Him], unless . . . he turns elsewhere that endeavour and effort from the Creator.

Ad. 989. The will cannot be better explained than by means of endeavour; therefore in the Divine Word will is called endeavour; for as endeavour stands to motion, so exactly does will to action. It is a constant rule, that motion is a certain perpetual endeavour which is continued; for as soon as endeavour recedes, motion comes to a standstill.

D. 1628. They endeavoured so to think . . . which endeavour was at once perceived. . . They said that they so endeavoured in order to know more. . . This they then tried to do, that is, they endeavoured to do it from themselves . . . thus their endeavour or will was something artificial . . . Therefore, they wanted to be devoid of all endeavour . . . But this was not genuine, to leave themselves without any endeavour. . . Thus they want to endeavour from themselves . . . But all their endeavour ought to be of the Lord . . . Therefore, when they endeavour from themselves it is nothing but sin. . . This life . . . is life itself, although man ought to endeavour nothing from himself, nor leave himself so that he endeavours nothing.

1944. The permissions of evils from Spirits are represented by the releasing of their endeavours. . . They are continually endeavouring what is evil, although they do not perceive it while they are held in bonds . . . Therefore, when they are permitted to do evil, it takes place by the releasing of their endeavours . . .

2070. As there are acting forces, there are also like endeavours ; for endeavours result from living forces, and endeavours produce in objects acting forces.

[D.] 2071. The Lord . . . so maintains the equilibrium between the endeavours of all Angels and Spirits, in general and in the smallest particulars . . .

2770. The influx into the souls (of brutes) is also from Heaven, but only the universal endeavour, which acts according to the forms of their souls . . .

3821. That evil Spirits are continually in the endeavour of evil . . . I perceived that the Lord continually preserves man, and the endeavour is taken from them. . . . Such is the endeavour of the World of Spirits.

3891^e. I spoke further about endeavour, whether he (Dippel) knew that endeavour produces acts, and that active forces return again to endeavour.

5554. I said that this is like a spring, which, when held back, is in the effort to recoil. This is called endeavour ; the spring of the hinges is in the endeavour . . . In man, this is called will ; for will is living endeavour . . . Whatever a man wills is in his endeavour, and, when the obstacles are removed, it becomes an act . . .

5973^e. They wanted to defend faith alone, saying, that with faith there is given the endeavour to do what is good . . . To which it was replied, that as endeavour is one effect of justification . . . what is to be thought of those who have not arrived at this degree ?

E. 768. An ardent endeavour, from the life of evil, to assault the truths of doctrine of this Church. Sig.

1012³. These three things are the endeavour to murder, and all endeavour is as it were an act . . .

1043². Two opposite agents . . . when they do not act manifestly, act by endeavours.

J.(Post). 9. They insisted that faith alone produces an endeavour to good ; but on being asked whether by endeavour they mean the manifest will of man, this they were unwilling to admit, because all that proceeds from the manifest will of man is in itself not good . . . wherefore by endeavour they meant an internal operation, of which the understanding knows nothing ; consequently, that such an endeavour is within the faith . . .

220^o. I asked whether the endeavour is anything of the will from man. They said that it is ; others that it is not ; and that they are to be carefully separated.

D. Love xix. It is known that everything is moved from endeavour, and that when endeavour ceases motion ceases ; thus the will of man is living endeavour in man, and acts in ultimates by means of the fibres and nerves, which in themselves are nothing but perpetual endeavours continued from the beginnings in the brains down to the ultimates in the corporeal parts, where the endeavours become acts . . . The will is (therefore) the receptacle of the love in the perpetual endeavour to act, which is excited and determined into acts by the love which flows in and is received. D.Wis.ii.

—². For there cannot exist with man any endeavour or will, unless it is also in ultimates . . .

xx. There is no other origin of all endeavours, forces, activities, and motions in the whole world than the Divine love . . . which appears as a Sun.

D. Wis. ii². See END at these refs. Can. God vii. 8. 11a.

C. 4. The external effect or work proceeds and comes forth from the internal effect or work, as the act from the endeavour : endeavour in man is will ; therefore, if he does not do a thing with the body, if he holds it to be allowable, the endeavour or will remains, and this is the act itself in the spirit.

Conv. 5. When a man holds any evil to be allowable . . . the endeavour to do it, when possible, is seated not only in the mind, but also in the body. This endeavour is will . . .

Coro. 30^o. When by his spiritual light and heat, the spiritual man is within the natural, the two make one, as does endeavour in motion ; and will, which is living endeavour, in action.

Endow. Dotare.

Dowry, Gift. Dos.

A. 1637². All souls are endowed—donantur—with this gift . . .

1641^e. Spirits do not know that . . . they are provided with so excellent a gift . . .

2363³. See CLEVER at this ref.

2588³. Everyone according to his own gift . . . D.2993^e.

3960. 'God hath endowed me with a good dowry' (Gen.xxx.20). Ex.

4456. 'The dowry and gift—donum—' which he said that they should multiply upon him (Gen.xxxiv.12)= agreement into one ; for the dowry which was given to a virgin about to be betrothed, was a token of agreement on both sides . . . The reason the dowry was a token of agreement, and thus a confirmation of initiation, is that to weigh or give silver was a sign that it was his, thus that the virgin was his, and to accept it was what is reciprocal ; thus the bride belonged to the bridegroom and the bridegroom to the bride.

7437^e. In proportion as he excels in the gift of reasoning and perverting . . .

9128³. He who excels in the gift of thinking and perceiving . . .

9184. 'Endowing he shall endow her to himself for a woman' (Ex.xxii.16)= a token of consent on his own part to a lawful conjunction. 'A dowry' and 'to endow'=a token of consent.

9186. 'The dowry of virgins' (ver.17)=a token of consent to conjunction.

D. 2240. They who excel in the gift of cleverness . . .

2252. That Souls . . . and Spirits far excel in gifts . . .

2265. Besides the gifts with which Souls are endowed—donantur . . .

3032^e. According to each one's gift of reception . . .

3496. Had been esteemed for his endowments of cleverness . . .

4347. To despise others because they are not of any cleverness, gift . . .

4497. She is among the worst there, because she had excelled in the gift of cleverness.

4287. The Lord endured all temptations by His own power.

4299. That He endured the most grievous temptations, as if they were from the Divine. Sig. . . (For 'my soul is delivered' = to endure . . . the Divine presence.

—². (For) the evils and falsities in man, tempered with the goods and truths in him, cannot endure a closer presence . . . Evil Spirits cannot endure that Angels should look into them . . . Hell is remote from Heaven, because it endures not Heaven, that is, the Lord's presence which is in Heaven.

6365. (No infernal can endure the presence of a celestial Angel.)

6369^e. The evil do not endure the presence of those who are in celestial good.

8175. That the Lord alone endures the combats of temptations. Sig. 8219.

8644². No Angel can endure the flame from the Divine love. 8760^e.

10694. That those who are solely in the externals of the Church . . . do not endure interior things. Sig.

H. 137². A thousand foes there do not endure one ray of the light of Heaven.

41C. They were permitted to perceive heavenly joy to such a degree that they could not endure any more . . .

R. 78. 'Thou canst not bear—ferre—the evil'=that they do not endure evils to be called goods, and the reverse.

80. 'Thou hast endured, and thou hast endurance—tolerantiam' (Rev.ii.3) = patience with them. (=resistance against those who attack the truths of faith, and assiduity in instructing. E.101.)

465². No Angel . . . endures the Lord's presence itself . . .

829. That the Lord alone has endured all the evils of the Church, and all the violence done to the Word, thus to Himself. Sig.

T. 487^e. They endured not [to hear] the explanation.

67. From the beginning to the end of the Church all are tolerated who have lived an external moral life . . .

70. There are many reasons why such . . . Heavens were tolerated. Ex. and Sig. C.J.10.

R. 77. 'Thy labour and thine endurance' (Rev.ii.2) = their study and patience.

80. See ENDURE—sustinere—at this ref.

129. 'Thy faith and endurance' (Rev.ii.19) = the truth and the study to acquire and teach it.

185. 'Because thou hast kept the word of My endurance' (Rev.iii.10) = because they have fought against evils, and then rejected falsities. 'The word of endurance' = the spiritual combat which is called temptation. . . . (This) is called 'the word of the Lord's endurance' or patience, because in temptations the Lord fights for man, and fights by means of truths from His own Word. (= that they have lived according to the precepts of the Lord. E.214.)

E. 98. 'I have known thy works, and thy labour, and thine endurance' = all things which they will, think, and do, thus all things of love and faith in the spiritual and in the natural man. . . 'Works' = the things which are of the will and love; 'labour' = the things which are of thought and faith; and 'endurance' = the things which take place thence or which they do. —. —^e.

156. 'And thine endurance' (Rev.ii.19) = conjunction with the external, and combat then. Ex.

A. 249². 'Barbarians and enemies' (Ps. lxxii. 9) = those who look solely to earthly and worldly things.

1710. 'To pursue' the enemies (Gen. xiv. 14), here, = to drive out the evils and falsities which were with goods and truths . . .

1737. 'Who hath delivered thine enemies into thine hand' (Gen. xiv. 20) = victory.

2851. 'Thy seed shall inherit the gate of thine enemies' (Gen. xxii. 17) = that charity and faith will succeed in the place where before there were evil and falsity. . . 'Enemies' = evils and falsities, or, what is the same, those who are in evil and falsity. These are signified, in the internal sense of the Word, by 'enemies,' and 'enemies-inimicos.'

—³. 'Enemies,' that is, evil Genii and Spirits . . .

—⁸. 'Enemies becoming the head' (Lam. iv. 5) = that evils reign.

—¹³. 'To speak with the enemies in the gate' (Ps. cxxvii. 5) = not at all to fear evils and falsities, thus not to fear Hell.

—¹⁴. Hence it is evident what is signified by 'the gate of the enemies,' namely, Hell, that is, the infernals, who continually attack things good and true: their seat is with man in his natural mind . . .

3322². Before they have been subordinated and subjected to good, they are called 'enemies,' because they continually oppose.

4327^e. Yet they are the most bitter enemies . . . of mankind.

4843³. See DOMESTIC at these refs. 10490⁵.

5189. They were the enemies of evil Spirits . . .

6365. 'Thy hand in the neck of thine enemies' (Gen. xlix. 8) = that the infernal and diabolical crew will flee away at his presence. 'Enemies' = the infernal and diabolical crew; for these are 'enemies' in the spiritual sense. . . When an enemy flees, the hand of the victor is in his neck. . . A celestial Angel never fights, still less is his hand in the neck of his enemies, nor for his part does he consider anyone as an enemy; but . . . it is signified, that the infernals, who on their part are enemies, flee at his presence.

8282. 'With Thy right hand Jehovah thou breakest in pieces the enemy' (Ex. xv. 6) = the effect of omnipotence upon evils and the falsities thence, whose power is annihilated. . . 'An enemy' = evils and falsities; for nothing else is meant in the spiritual sense by 'enemies,' 'enemies-inimicos,' and 'haters.' They are called 'enemies,' 'enemies-inimici,' and 'haters,' not because the Lord is their enemy, or hates them, but because they are haters and 'enemies' against the Divine.

8289. 'The enemy said' (ver. 9) = the thought of those who were in evils and thence falsities before the Advent of the Lord.

9081^e. 'To strike the enemies with the horn' (Ps. xlv. 5) = to destroy falsities there by the power of the truth and good of faith.

9314. 'I will act as an enemy to thine enemies' (Ex. xxiii. 22) = that He averts all evils from which are falsities. 'To act as an enemy,' when said of the Lord, = to avert. 'Enemies' = the evils from which are falsities; for, in the spiritual sense, these are enemies to the goods from which are truths. The reason 'enemies' = evils from which are falsities, is that by 'enemies-inimicos' are signified the falsities from evil. (Compare ENEMY-inimicus, at A. 9313.)

9809⁴. 'Until I set thine enemies a footstool to thy feet' (Ps. cx. 1) = when the evils which are in the Hells and from the Hells are subjugated, and have been subjected to His Divine power. . . 'To have dominion in the midst of thine enemies' (ver. 2) = which good has dominion over evils. Evils are 'enemies,' because they are against the Divine, in special, against the Lord.

9930⁴. Victories over the Hells, which are 'the enemies who shall be clothed with shame' (Ps. cxxxii. 18).

9942¹⁰. 'To account as an enemy for the sake of a garment' (Micah ii. 8) = to do evil to them on account of the truth which they think . . .

9954³. 'Enemies' = the Hells; in general, evils and falsities. Refs.

10019⁴. The Hells are meant by 'the enemy over whom they should have power' (Luke x. 19).

10219⁵. By 'flight before enemies' (2 Sam. xxiv. 13) is meant persecution by evils and falsities; for they who attribute things good and true to themselves cannot fight against the evils and falsities which are from Hell, and which, in the spiritual sense, are the enemies before whom there is flight, and from whom there is persecution.

10481. 'They who rise up against' or 'enemies' = evils and the falsities thence; for, in the spiritual sense, these are the enemies who rise up against us. Ill.

—². This was represented by that nation conquering their enemies so long as they remained in the worship which was commanded them . . .

H. 137². A thousand enemies do not endure there one ray of the light of Heaven . . .

558a. They who are against them and their evils are accounted as . . . enemies . . .

L. 14⁴. 'Their mighty ones' and 'the enemies' (Jer. xlvi. 5, 10) = the Hells; for all there hate the Lord.

S. 84. 'Enemy' . . . is predicated of good, and, in the opposite sense, of evil; whereas 'enemy-inimicus' . . . is predicated of truth, and, in the opposite sense, of falsity.

P. 252^e. (Thus) it is allowable for anyone to defend his country and associates against invading enemies, even by means of wicked commanders; but it is not allowable to become an enemy without a cause.

M. 292. Infernal marriages between those who are interiorly the most bitter enemies, but exteriorly the closest friends. Ex.

E. 242¹¹. 'The enemy' (Hos.viii.3)=falsity from evil, and evil from falsity.

272². Evils and falsities are 'the enemies who shall be clothed with shame' (Ps.cxxxii.18).

278⁵. 'Enemies' (Micah v.9)=evils; and 'enemies-inimici,' falsities.

316¹⁸. 'The enemy' (Lam.ii.17)=evil; and 'enemies-inimici,' the falsities of evil. 357²⁴. 642.

357¹⁰. 'Enemies' (Ps.cxxvii.5)=evils.
—²⁴. 'Enemy' (Lam.ii.4)=evil; and 'enemy-inimicus'=falsity.

376¹². 'Enemies' (Is.lxii.8)=evils.

391¹⁵. 'The enemy' (Lam.ii.7)=evil and falsity.

401¹⁹. 'Enemies' (Jer.xv.9)=evils.

406¹⁶. 'Enemies' (Ps.lxxi.9)=evils.

411⁷. 'Our enemies' (Deut.xxxii.31)=evils.

413⁵. 'The enemy who has consumed them' (Lam.ii.22)=evil and falsity.

433⁴. 'Enemies' (Gen.xlix.8)=those who are from Hell.

502¹¹. By 'enemies' in the Word, are signified evils. 526¹⁰.

539⁹. 'Enemies' (Ps.cxxvii.20)=those who are in evils.

556⁷. Those who are against the truths and goods of the Church, and their falsities of evil, are meant in the Word by 'enemies.'

573¹⁴. 'The enemy' (Ps.xliv.10)=the evil which is from Hell.

601¹⁷. 'The enemy' (Ps.lxxiv.3,4)=evil from Hell.

632⁸. By 'enemies' (Is.lxiii.18) are signified evils of life.

—⁹. 'The enemy' (Ps.vii.5)=evil, in general the devil, that is, Hell from which is evil.

650⁶³. 'The enemy who has reproached Jehovah' (Ps.lxxiv.18)=Hell and the evil thence.

671³. In many places in the Word there are mentioned 'enemies,' and 'enemies-inimici,' and by them are meant evils and falsities; by 'enemies,' evils; and by 'enemies-inimici,' falsities; (that is) spiritual enemies, and enemies-inimici. III.

684¹⁵. 'The king's enemies' (Ps.xlv.5)=those who are against truths, thus the Hells.

684²⁹. 'His enemies will I clothe with shame' (Ps.cxxxii.18)=the subjugation of the Hells, and the dissipation of the evils thence.

695¹³. 'The enemy' (Zech.viii.10)=Hell whence are evils and falsities.

—¹⁶. 'To return from the land of the enemy' (Jer.xxxi.16)=to be led forth from Hell.

706²¹. 'The enemy hath destroyed all things in the sanctuary' (Ps.lxxiv.3)=that evil has destroyed the holy things of the Church. 'The enemies have roared in the midst of thy feast' (ver.4)=that falsities have destroyed all things of worship.

—²⁴. That they were to be destroyed by means of evils and falsities, is meant by 'I will give the king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies' (Jer.xliv.30). Here, 'enemies'=those who are in evils . . .

721²⁰. 'The enemy' (Jer.vi.25)=Hell.

724¹⁰. 'The enemies in the gate' (Ps.cxxvii.5)=the falsities of evil which are from Hell.

—¹⁸. 'The enemy' (Lam.i.16)=the falsity of evil, and the Hell which is the source of it.

734¹³. These statutes signify that the men of the Church . . . shall fight against their enemies, which are the Hells; and not they who are not as yet become men of the Church. . . (These words mean) that they should not prevail over their enemies, but their enemies over them; for they alone prevail over their spiritual enemies who are in truths from good, that is, those with whom truth is conjoined with good.

741⁷. 'The enemy-inimicus'=the falsities which have destroyed the truths of the Church; and 'the enemy' (Lam.iv.12)=the evils which have destroyed the goods of the Church.

750¹². 'The enemy who hath prevailed' (Lam.i.16)=evil from Hell, thus the evil of life.

811⁴. 'Though they go into captivity before their enemies' (Amos.ix.4)=if they suffer evils to take possession of them.

—¹⁴. 'From the gall of the revenges of the enemy' (Deut.xxxii.42)=from the wickedness and ferocity of the Hells. . . 'The enemy'=Hell.

Coro. 21². (Redemption) is deliverance from evils and falsities; which, being from Hell, are spiritual enemies: for they kill souls as natural enemies do bodies.

6893⁶. In the other life, when anyone is thought of intensely, he is presented to view. Hence it is that friends meet there, and also enemies, and from the latter they suffer hard things.

7370. The man who regards the neighbour as an enemy if he does not favour him, is in the love of self.

8223³. Hence it may be evident what is meant by the Lord's words concerning the loving of an enemy.

9174¹. 'To love our enemies' (Luke vi.35) is the affection of charity: but enemies are loved . . . when they are instructed; and also when by suitable means they are amended.

9256. That good is to be done to those who are outside the Church, is meant by . . . 'Love your enemies' (Matt. v.44). Here, also, by 'enemies' . . . are meant those who disagree as to the goods and truths of faith; in general, those who are outside the Church . . .

9313. 'I will act as an enemy to thine enemies' (Ex.xxiii.22)=that the Lord averts all falsities from evil. 'To act as an enemy,' when said of the Lord, =to avert. 'Thine enemies'=the falsities from evil; for, in the spiritual sense, these are enemies, because they continually infest, assault, and endeavour to destroy the truths from good; for they are the opposites. The reason 'to act as an enemy,' when said of the Lord, =to avert, namely, the falsities from evil, is that the Lord never acts as an enemy; for . . . into merey itself and good itself enmity cannot fall, not even against what is false and evil. But falsity and evil act enmity against good and truth, that is, they who are in falsity and evil are against those who are in truth and good; and as when they endeavour to destroy the latter they destroy themselves, it appears as if the Lord acts as an enemy, when yet He only places His own in safety.

9330. 'I will give all thine enemies to thee the neck' (ver.27)=the flight and damnation of falsities. 'Enemies'=falsity from evil.

10019⁵. The Hells and the evils and falsities thence, are 'the enemies which shall be set for his footstool,' and also 'the enemies—hostes—in the midst of whom He shall have dominion' (Ps.cx.1,2). L.14³. E.298⁸. 687⁸. 850¹³.

H. 570. As these evils continually breathe the destruction . . . of those whom they account as enemies . . .

R. 514. 'Their enemies saw them' (Rev.xi.12)=that those who are in faith separated from charity heard them, yet remained in their own falsities. . . By 'their enemies,' are meant those who were in the great city which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt . . .

407. To love the neighbour, is to do good . . . also to a stranger, an enemy, and an evil man. Ex. . . If anyone repels an enemy who is making an attack upon him, and in self-defence strikes him, or delivers him to the judge, in order thereby to avert injury from himself, yet with a mind to become his friend, he acts from the vein of charity.

409. That good is to be done from charity to an adversary and an enemy, the Lord taught in Matt.v.43-45; xviii.21,22.

D. 2922b. That no one exists except for the sake of use, even evil Spirits, and in fact in order to perform a use to the enemies whom they hate. Ex.

3231. That the Lord does good to enemies. Ex.

4384. All states of evil against enemies return in the other life, and are exhibited as present to the enemies, even those of the upright and the good; for there is nothing which does not return, but not in a like manner. The hatreds of him who has had hatred return with a mind to destroy them, which belongs to hatred. . . If they are upright, they have also had many such states—they have contemned others, they have accounted them enemies, and whatever there is in the contempt and enmity [returns]. If there is no hatred present, nor revenge, nor deceit, the upright are easily restored when they perceive what the quality of the other is. If the other is actuated by hatred, they are separated, as they do not agree. If the contempt and enmity are devoid of hatred and revenge, they are so led by the Lord, as not to become enemies, that is, he is not an enemy to the other, however the other may be an enemy to him; he still wishes and wills his good.

4587. Accounting those as enemies who have set themselves in opposition, and who have not worshipped them.

4815. If one (of the Moravians) confers a benefit on another, he at once becomes his enemy.

E. 316¹¹. 'The enemies from whom he will save' (Luke i.71) are the falsities of evil; for these are the enemies from whom the Lord saves those who receive Him . . .

581⁶. 'The enemy' (Luke x.19)=that infernal crew.

671. 'Their enemies saw them'=Knowledge and acknowledgment with those who are interiorly against the goods and truths of the Word and of the Church. . . 'Enemies'=those who are against the goods of love and the truths of doctrine, thus those who are in evils and in falsities: these are meant by 'enemies,' and enemies—hostes,' in the spiritual sense of the Word.

—². The arcanum here involved is this. By 'enemies' are here meant those who are interiorly against the goods of love and the truths of doctrine, yet not exteriorly: with the mouth they act as friends, but with the heart as enemies . . .

695⁷. 'To love enemies, and do good to them' (Luke vi.35), in the proximate sense, means to love the gentiles and do good to them, which is done by teaching them truth, and by thereby leading them to good; for the Jewish nation . . . called the gentiles enemies.

700^s. 'Enemies,' and 'haters' (Num.x.35)=the falsities and evils which are from Hell; 'enemies,' the falsities; and 'haters,' the evils; thus there are also signified the Hells as to these things.

911^s. 'The enemy' (who sowed the tares)=evils from Hell, which affect that life which is separated from spiritual life.

—⁶. 'The enemy who sows them is the devil'=that the falsities in them are from the evil which is from Hell.

39. On Englishmen in the Spiritual World. Gen.art. T.806.

—^e. Something shall be said here about the noble English nation.

40. The better of the English nation are in the centre of all Christians, because they have interior intellectual light . . . they derive this light from their freedom of thinking, and thence of speaking and writing. This light, however, is not active of itself, but becomes so from others, especially from men of reputation and authority among them. When these men say anything, or when anything they approve of is read, that light shines forth, and rarely before. On this account they have governors—Moderatores—set over them in the Spiritual World; and priests, renowned for their learning and of great ability, are given them, whose commands and admonitions from this their peculiar nature they obey kindly. C.J.48. T.807.

41. They rarely go out of their own Society, because they love it, as in the world they do their country. There is also a likeness of disposition among them, in consequence of which they contract intimacy with friends of their own country and rarely with others; they mutually assist each other, and love sincerity. T.808. J.(Post.)270.

42. Very many Englishmen come after death into two great cities like London.Des. 43. T.809. 811.

45. From those who are from England in the Spiritual World it has been perceived that they have, as it were, a double theology, one from the doctrine of faith, and the other from the doctrine of life; the former with those who are initiated into the priesthood, and the latter with those who are commonly called laymen. Ex. T.812. J.(Post.)360.

7. I was allowed to interrogate some clergymen—Presbyteros—of England. . . They said that when they were reading the Exhortation before the Holy Supper they thought that those things were religion itself, but when they were composing their sermons they thought differently. . . But still they were convinced that he who lives well is saved, and that he who lives evilly is condemned. D.5970. J.(Post.)214.

P. 136⁴. Many of the English nation do not allow themselves to be forced to religion; hence it is that there is what is internal in their worship.

294⁹. (English clergy seen who could not say Divine Human.) T.111⁹.

—². The rest of the clergy of England . . . were gathered together at the foot of the mountain, and when the others returned . . . they all retired into a grove and talked together about unanimity and concord, and then about supremacy and dominion. . . The King saw them from Heaven, first all as one, and then as many unanimous, but most of them in a secular dress.

[R.] 675. A certain paper seen to be let down by the Lord through Heaven into a Society composed of Englishmen; but it was one of the smallest of their Societies, and there were two bishops there. In the paper there was an exhortation that they should acknowledge the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth, and that they should abandon the doctrine of justification by faith without the deeds of the law. Many of them read and copied the paper, and they thought and spoke about the contents of it in a sensible way, and indeed were enlightened by the Lord, and received enlightenment in the light which is pre-eminently implanted in Englishmen. But after they had received these things, they said, Let us hear the bishops. But these contradicted and reviled them . . . and sent the paper back to Heaven. And then, after some grumbling, very many of the laity retracted their consent, and their light in spiritual things was at once extinguished. They were warned a second time, but in vain, and the Society sank down out of sight. T.389.

—². A few days afterwards I saw as many as a hundred of them coming up from the Lower Earth, to which place that little Society had sunk down. (A long account is then given by a wise Englishman of their experience there, and of his argument with the bishops.)

716. I have spoken in the Spiritual World with some of the bishops of England about the little works concerning Heaven and Hell, concerning the New Jerusalem and its Heavenly Doctrine, concerning the Last Judgment, concerning the White Horse, and concerning the Earths in the Universe; which little works have been presented to all the bishops, and to many of the grandees or lords. They said they had received them, they had seen them, but had not thought much of them, although they were skilfully written. Also that they had persuaded everybody they could, not to read them.

—². The King, who is the grandfather of the King presently reigning, heard in Heaven what the bishops had said . . .

M. 107. (Opinions of Englishmen concerning the origin of marriage love and its potency.)

T. 808. Englishmen are lovers of their country and zealous for its glory, and regard foreigners like one looking through a telescope from the roof of his palace at those who are outside the city. Politics engage their minds and possess their hearts, sometimes to such an extent as to draw away their spirits from studies of more lofty judgment, by which the higher intelligence is procured. These they do indeed imbibe in their youth when in the schools, but they pass away like aerial phenomena; but still by their politics their rationality is rendered lively, and sparkles with light, from which they form beautiful images.

D. 2862. The horses in England are furnished with bells . . .

3030. The Lord's Church is for the most part promoted by the evil . . . as by those who introduced the doctrines of faith for the sake of self and other things, as in Sweden, England, and elsewhere.

4827. A certain Englishman (Maul) . . .

5012. On the city of London in England. . . I asked who were there, and it was said Englishmen from London. On arrival there, inquiry was made who we were, and when it was found that those who were with me were not of a like native character and genius to themselves, they said there was no housing there. Their custom is to give foreigners keys, as a token that they are received.

5357. (Quality of Englishmen as to religion. . . The quality of Englishmen was examined as to the truths of the church. They do not care to learn them, except the priests. Still, they have a perception sufficiently exquisite that a thing is so when it is said from reason. So that they have an interior sight as to religion, not an active, but a receptive sight. The reason is that they act sincerely among themselves, without guile. This is general; if otherwise, the rest shun them.

5358¹. Some Englishmen have received well.

5369. The Englishmen appear a little in front towards the right, higher up, in a plane above the head, since they are of a quite different genius. The light with them, in which what is spiritual is received, appears more interior (than with others in the Christian world; and in this light is received the Spiritual which flows in from above). They at once perceive what flows in, and also at once receive it. Those of them who have thought about God and religion, and have consequently acted sincerely, see the truths of faith clearly enough. Nor do they let them down into their Natural, because this is not so much engaged and crowded with worldly things, and is therefore not so dim, as with others. The reason is that they love sincerity, and act from sincerity, and that this is general among them. 5825. J.(Post).1.

5577. Few Englishmen become Genii, because they depend upon the authority of others without further thought of their own, and upon the reasonings and reasons of others according to apprehension and consequent reception. The consequence of this also is that they are of a yielding disposition. Let them only believe that a man is learned and sincere, and of their own nation, and then their thought appears lucid and interior. J.(Post).3.

— . Many Englishmen in the other life have also received the heavenly doctrine, and consequently have come into the New Jerusalem, because they are of such a character that they receive the truths of faith when they see them, and they see them in a certain interior light, and thus remain in them. This Englishmen do quickly, but Dutchmen slowly. J.(Post.)4.

5629. I have talked with Englishmen,—how it is that they are of such a character that when they hear truths they see them, and follow them, and are then yielding and ready to conform themselves. For in the other life there is with them a snowy appearance above their Natural, which is of heavenly light, and hence it is that they are intelligent. . . It was then granted to institute a comparison between the government as at present existing with them and that with the Italians. Their governments are quite opposite, and hence they differ in genius. In England, there is freedom of speaking and writing about both civil and ecclesiastical affairs; and no freedom at all of cheating others, of using deceit and cunning, nor of lying in wait to murder, etc. . . The English nation . . . are kept in what is sincere and just by the circumstance that it is not allowable for them to cheat, rob, and murder; for if they do, there is no impunity. J.(Post.)5.

5705. Some Englishmen were present, who, as they have interior light, were elevated (into heavenly light).

5791½. Those who care for nothing but domineering over others, and who are rascals, lazy . . . doing evil to others, because they love nobody but themselves, exist for the most part in Germany, Sweden, Denmark and elsewhere; but few in England, because there they care for their own domestic affairs and business.

5825. On Englishmen. They are of a different genius from the other nations of Europe.

5946°. Some (Africans) were brought to certain Englishmen, and they perceived that they do not receive: a few from some intelligence, and scarcely anyone from perception.

5958. I have talked sometimes [with him] who in England wrote the Duty of Man. Des.

5970. There was a certain Spirit from England, before whom I read the prayers customary in England before the Holy Supper, in order that he might see that faith separate [from] charity is not acknowledged in England, but charity. (His reply given.)

6000. I spoke with a certain Spirit who had been King of England, about a month after his decease. [George II. died 25th Oct. 1760]. (The subject of conversation was) that a Spirit is his own affection, and that a man's faith is such as is his affection.

6002. [Conversation] about faith with Englishmen. Most of the Anglican bishops and priests are not willing to hear anything except that faith alone saves, and that faith alone produces good works; nor are they willing to go back at all from this error, because in various ways they have confirmed themselves in it, and because they study the world more than Heaven. . . They were told that it is only the leading men who are in that monstrous faith, and not the people. (A long conversation with them on this subject reported.)

6033⁴. The King of England was deluded by his own [subjects] for about two years. They adored him as a deity, higher than any man, and he has often confessed that he was insane, but still as yet, after 1½ years, his nature remains.

6050. [A conversation] with Englishmen about their preachers. See also T.SIO. J.(Post.) II. 227. 360.

6098. On a bishop of England. A bishop wanted to see me, his intention being to refute what has been written about faith. He saw me, and said that they would indeed receive in England the first work concerning the Lord, and also that by the New Jerusalem is meant a New Church, also the second work concerning the holiness of the Word, and also the third concerning the doctrine of Life, but that they will altogether reject the fourth concerning Faith.

—². That bishop, who has been dead three years, disclosed what arts he had made use of in order to annihilate what had been before written concerning Heaven and Hell, both with My lords and through priests at Oxford, and that he had effected his purpose; so that now nothing was said about it. (His further conversation and final lot.)

6101. On certain bishops of England.

—². The former bishop afterwards told how [he had treated] the five works concerning Heaven and Hell and the others, which had been presented to them all, and to all the protestant lords in Parliament . . . so that at last he had destroyed all reading of them. Ex.

—⁴. How the other priests were made to subserve the destruction of that work has also been disclosed.

6103. Some things about Englishmen. There was a city from the English nation . . . that was warned to abandon faith alone . . . but the preachers prevailed, so that they would not abandon it, wherefore . . . the city with its inhabitants sank down very deep.

—². There was afterwards effected a great purification among Englishmen in their Societies, and all who had committed adultery as an allowable thing were cast down into the Hells. I saw many cast into Hell of those who are called lords, who had taken away wives from their husbands to their possessions called estates. It was said that such villainy was common among the more wealthy of them. . . More than a hundred of such lords were seen there at that time. See also M.483. D.6110⁷¹. ———⁷³.

E. 885³. (On the Anglican Church and its doctrine of faith alone and of life).

1070². Within Babylon are those who are in the kingdom of France, and many in Holland, England, Scotland, and Ireland who have not taken away from the Lord the power of saving men, nor Divine holiness from the Word.

J.(Post.)1. On Englishmen. Gen.art.

8. As Englishmen are of such a genius, priests and magistrates are set over them concerning whom they have faith that they are intelligent and wise, and when this is the case they are favourably inclined towards them to agreement from everything which they say and teach; and thereby they are kept in obedience and also in doctrine. Those, however, who are uncompliant, and who are impious, are banished from their Society, because they loose the bond and the unanimity.

213. There was a certain Englishman who had written learnedly and skillfully about faith and charity . . . but had come to the conclusion that faith produces charity . . . He was told by the Angels that this does appear so to man, but that still it is not so. Ex.

214. The Englishmen were praised on account of that Exhortation (before the Holy Supper), and many believed that it was also their doctrine; but a number of them said that it is for the common people, and that faith alone is for the learned. They were asked whether they therefore wanted the exorcism, that unless they did this Satan would enter into them as he did into Judas. They then went away, and conversed together about that matter.

216. The Englishmen said, that faith operates charity as a tree does its fruit. (The reply given them.)

227. How the Englishmen who want to get a reputation for learning frame their discourses with much elegance and the show of stores of wisdom, especially concerning the influx of faith and the endeavour to do what is good . . . Some of the Englishmen complained, saying that they delight and please all while they are listening to them, but when they want to apply anything of it to themselves, they do not know what they said, and whether it is allowable . . . manifestly to will and to do. When they ask them, they say . . . that they may do so, and that they may not do so, and finally that it is a surpassing mystery; and as they can gather both (conclusions) from them, they praise them; but on account of the double meaning conveyed by their words, in which there is something lying concealed, like a snake in the grass, they do not love them. They tell them that they will remain in the doctrine which is taught in the Exhortation before the Holy Supper . . . Their discourses are also full of a perception of trust and confidence in themselves.

327. The garments of Englishmen are not like those they wear in this world, nor are those of the maidens and women. They are altogether adapted to their general affection. Looked at in a spiritual state, they appear becoming and pretty, because they exactly agree with that genius; but the same garments when seen in a natural state, do not appear so beautiful. The reason is, that garments signify truths, and therefore all are clad according to their reception of truth.

A. 1101. 'God shall enlarge Japheth' (Gen.ix.27) = the enlightenment thereof. In the literal sense, 'to enlarge' = to enlarge-amplificare-the borders, but in the internal sense, to enlighten; for enlightenment is the enlargement-amplificatio-as it were of the boundaries of wisdom and intelligence, as in Isaiah: 'Enlarge the place of thy tent . . .' (liv.2) = enlightenment in spiritual things. The man of the external Church is enlarged when he is instructed in the truths and goods of faith.

2220². 'To enlarge over the people' (Zeph.ii.10) = falsity.

3434. 'For now Jehovah maketh us to be enlarged' (Gen.xxvi.22) = the increments of truth thence. . . 'To be enlarged' = to receive increments of truth.

10675. 'I will make thy border to be enlarged' (Ex. xxxiv.24) = the multiplication and extension of truth from good. Ex.

3058. 'To draw waters' = instruction, and also enlightenment thence. Ex. 6776.

3071. 'I will give thy camels to drink' = the enlightenment of all the scientifics in the natural man thence. . . . 'To give to drink' = to enlighten; for enlightenment comes from instruction.

3094. What is reciprocal as to the enlightenment of all the scientifics in the natural man. Sig.

— The enlightenment which is here treated of is on the part of truth, although it is from good through truth. As to the enlightenment of the scientifics in the natural man, the case is this. All enlightenment is from good; for the good which is of love is like the flame of the sun . . . whereas truth is like the object by means of which the flame appears; thus from light comes the enlightenment; but such as is the light thence, such is the enlightenment. There is nothing which receives good except truth, but such as is the truth such is the reception, and such thence is the enlightenment. When, therefore, there is enlightenment through truth, the enlightenment appears as though it were from the truth, although it is of the good which thus shines through the truth. Moreover, the enlightenment of good through truth penetrates further, and affects more deeply, and produces a lower affection of truth. . . The light of Heaven is from the Lord's Divine good through His Divine truth, and as it is through the Divine truth in His Human, it penetrates not only to the celestial, but also to the spiritual, and enlightens with wisdom and intelligence all who are in Heaven. . . This passage treats of the first enlightenment of truth by good, and of good through truth.

3096°. Natural truth is lower truth, and the affection of natural truth is a lower affection of truth; by this general scientifics are proximately enlightened, and that this enlightenment penetrates further and affects more deeply, see 3094. 3097, Sig.

3098. Through truths and according to truths is enlightenment.

— Good itself flows into the Natural through the Rational, thus through an internal way, and enlightens the things which are there . . .

3102. Acknowledgment (of truth Divine) from enlightenment in general scientifics. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. (In order to the acknowledgment of truths) there must be enlightenment in the natural man . . . This enlightenment in the natural man is from good, but still it is by means of truth. It is this enlightenment which is signified by Rebekah drawing for the camels, and giving them to drink.

3108. One who is enlightened only by such things as are of the light of the world (cannot see this) unless he is at the same time enlightened by such things as are of the light of Heaven, by means of which the things which are of the light of the world may be enlightened.

3128. To whatsoever natural good enlightenment could reach. Sig.

—². All good flows in through an internal way . . . into the Rational, and through that into . . . the sensuous Scientific; and, by means of enlightenment there, causes truths to be seen . . .

—³. Concerning the enlightenment by good through truth in the natural man . . . the case is this. The Divine good with man inflows into his Rational, and through the Rational into his . . . scientifics . . . and there by an infitting it forms for itself truths, by means of which it then enlightens all things in the natural man. But if the life of the natural man is such as not to receive the Divine good . . . the Divine good cannot be infitted, thus neither can it form for itself truths; and therefore the Natural can no longer be enlightened; for the enlightenment in the natural man is effected by good through truths; and when there is no longer any enlightenment, there cannot exist any reformation.

3131°. That which first enters is what is general . . . in which scarcely anything appears, until it is enlightened by means of particulars, and these by means of singulars; and when it is enlightened, interior things are made manifest . . .

3137. 'At the fountain' = the enlightenment of those things (which are in the natural man) by truth Divine. . . . For where there is Truth Divine, there is enlightenment.

3138. In these three verses (Gen.xxiv.28-30) it treats of the preparation and enlightenment of the natural man, in order that truth may be called forth thence which is to be conjoined with the good in the Rational.

But with this preparation and enlightenment the case is this. There are two lights which form the intellectual things of man, the light of Heaven, and the light of the world . . . The influx of the light of Heaven into those things which are of the light of the world causes enlightenment, and at the same time apperception . . . But enlightenment and apperception cannot exist unless there is affection or love, which is spiritual heat, and gives life to those things which are enlightened by light.

[A.] 3141². It was this Divine good through the Divine truth in the Rational which inflowed into the natural man, and enlightened all things there. The process itself is here described.

3166^o. The good in the natural man is enlightened when truth is initiated in the good in the Rational ; for all the enlightenment of the good and truth in the natural man is thence.

3167². The light of Heaven then flows in and enlightens those things which are in the natural man . . .

3175⁴. This truth must be confirmed and illustrated by many things before it can be elevated out of the natural man into the rational . . .

3185. Good wishes from Divine enlightenment. Sig. . . (For) enlightenment inflows into the natural man by means of the affection of truth . . . when it is being initiated to good.

3436. He who reads the Word with the end to . . . do what is good and understand what is true, is instructed . . . for unknown to him the Lord flows in, and enlightens his mind . . .

3458. 'In the morning they arose early' = a state of enlightenment.

3492. Old age . . . is when corporeal things begin to be put off . . . and thus when the interiors begin to be enlightened ; for when the former are removed the latter are enlightened.

3493. When the Rational wanted to enlighten the Natural with what is Divine. Sig.

—². When there is correspondence, the things in the Natural appear to the Rational in light, because then the things of the light of the world are enlightened by those which are of the light of Heaven . . .

3508². Without the Knowledges of good and truth the Natural cannot be enlightened by the Rational, that is, through the Rational, thus cannot be regenerated. Knowledges are the vessels which receive the good and truth that flows in from the Rational ; and the vessels are enlightened in proportion to the quality and quantity of what they receive.

3596. It is therefore better to illustrate these things no further, because the illustration of things which are unknown and [which transcend the apprehension does not set them in light, but more in shade.

3665³. The Knowledges which are learned from infancy to youth, are as it were most general vessels which are to be filled with goods ; and as they are filled, so is the man enlightened. If the vessels are such that genuine goods can be admitted into them, the man is enlightened from the Divine which is within them, and this successively more and more ; whereas, if they are such that genuine goods are not able to be in them, he is not illuminated. He indeed appears to be enlightened, but it is from delusive lumen . . .

3688⁴. Afterwards, when he is more enlightened . . .

—^e. This interior good could not manifest itself, until by means of Knowledges the man had been successively enlightened concerning the quality of goods and truths.

3715. 'Jacob awoke out of his sleep' = enlightenment.

3901³. The first-named 'eagle' = the Rational enlightened by the Divine.

3957². When the body is put off, man enjoys a much more enlightened understanding . . . The state after death is much more enlightened . . .

3974². Jacob was of a more illustrious family than Laban.

—^o. They who are in the spiritual affection of good and truth are enlightened about such things.

3993^o. Goods with truths are then in the midst, and such evils and falsities are . . . at the circumference ; hence it is, that the latter are enlightened by the former . . .

4073^o. Man is in effects . . . and does not see anything as to good and truth, unless he is enlightened by the Lord through Angels.

4156^o. With him who clearly sees that good is good, that truth is truth, and that evil is evil, and falsity falsity, light flows in from Heaven, and enlightens his Intellectual, and causes the reasons which he sees in the understanding to be so many rays of that light. The same light also illuminates scientifics . . .

4214. 'In the morning Laban arose early' = the enlightenment of this (gentile) good by the Lord's Divine Natural.

—^e. As to enlightenment, it is all from the Lord, and through the good which is with man : the enlightenment is also according to the quality of the good.

—². Most believe that those are enlightened who can reason about what is good and true, and about what is evil and false ; and that their state of enlightenment is great in proportion to the subtlety and acuteness with which they can speak about these things, and at the same time confirm them by many scientifics . . . nevertheless, it may be that they are in no enlightenment, although in an imaginative and perceptive faculty . . . They are in some capacity of knowing these things, but in no affection of doing them ; and that this is not to be in enlightenment may be apprehended by everyone.

—^e. Hence it may be evident what true enlightenment is, namely, that it is from the good which is from the Lord ; and what false enlightenment is, namely, that it is from the evil which is from Hell.

4235. 'The Angels of God met him' = enlightenment by good . . . In the proximate sense (these words) = the influx of the Divine into the Natural. Hence comes enlightenment ; for all enlightenment is from the influx of the Divine.

—^o. The implantation of truth in good could not be effected without enlightenment by the Divine; therefore it here treats first concerning enlightenment by good, in which truth might be implanted.

4245^e. The good of charity is like a flame, which affords light, and thus enlightens each and all things which he had before believed to be truths.

4249. When good acts as chief, the Natural begins to be enlightened by good . . .

4386. 'Let me find grace in the eyes of my lord' = enlightenment by presence more interior.

4402². Interior truths are no otherwise conjoined with good than by means of enlightenment flowing in through the internal man into the external; from this enlightenment truths Divine become evident in only a general way . . . This enlightenment sig.

—³. The opening of these things cannot be omitted; a time is about to come when there will be enlightenment.

4592². No one can have an idea of (these things) but he who is enlightened by the light of Heaven.

5008⁸. All truths Divine can be confirmed . . . by means of rational or intellectual things with those who are enlightened.

5081. What is Divine flows in through an internal way, and what is worldly through an external way; these meet within man; and then in proportion as the man suffers himself to be enlightened by the Divine, he comes into wisdom.

5127^e. The Lord's Divine continually flows in with man, and enlightens; but where there are falsities and evils . . . the Divine light is either reflected, suffocated, or perverted . . .

5208. 'Pharaoh awoke' = a state of enlightenment . . . in the Natural. By enlightenment is here meant a general enlightenment by the Celestial of the Spiritual, thus from within. The enlightenment which . . . flows in from within is general in that which is lower, but successively becomes less general, and at last particular, as truths from good are insinuated there; for every truth shines from good, and also enlightens. Hence it is that it was said that truths were banished from the Natural, which takes places in order that the Natural may be generally enlightened from within, and that afterwards, in this general enlightenment, that is, in this general light, the truths may be replaced there in their own order, and thus that the Natural may be enlightened particularly. . . The truths, however, are not banished but stored up, and in that case that which is lower is generally enlightened by that which is higher . . .

5221². Unless man is in a spiritual sphere . . . he cannot know even what it is to be generally enlightened, and to be particularly enlightened, nor indeed what it is to be enlightened, still less that there is disturbance at the beginning of a general state of enlightenment . . .

5432^e. That the Word is to be searched, with a devout prayer to the Lord that there may be enlightenment . . .

5672. In the other life, the times of the day . . . correspond to enlightenments; and the enlightenments there, are those of intelligence and wisdom; for in the light of Heaven there are intelligence and wisdom. The changes of the enlightenment there, are like morning, noon, and evening on earth . . .

5740. 'The morning dawned' = a state of enlightenment at that time. . . For all enlightenment is from the Lord.

5822^e. These are enlightened as to the intellectual part by the light of Heaven.

6047². When (the Word is searched) from the affection of truth, the man is enlightened by the Lord, so as, without knowing whence, to apperceive what is true. . . Unless he does this, he can never be enlightened.

6222³. There is the Intellectual of the Church, when a man reads the Word, and carefully compares one thing with another, and then perceives thence what is to be believed, and what is to be done: this does not fall to the lot of anyone except those who are enlightened by the Lord, and who also in the Christian world are called the enlightened: and this enlightenment falls to the lot of no others than such as long to know truths, not for the sake of reputation and glory, but for the sake of life and use. The enlightenment itself is received by the Intellectual with man; for it is the Intellectual which is enlightened, (as) is evident from the fact, that they who have little of what is intellectual cannot possibly see such things from the Word, but have faith in those whom they believe to be enlightened. Moreover, they who are regenerate receive from the Lord an Intellectual which is able to be enlightened. It is the light of Heaven from the Lord which inflows into the Intellectual, and enlightens it; for the Intellectual has its light, its sight, and therefore its perception, from no other source. Ex.

—⁴. That these are truths can be clearly perceived by those who have the Intellectual enlightened . . .

—⁶. For the truths of faith together with the good of charity are what inflow into the Intellectual, and enlighten it . . . Every affection of good and truth, by means of which there is enlightenment, flows in . . . from no other source, than . . . through the internal from the Lord.

6269². Thus the Church would be in enlightenment concerning such things as are of the Lord's Kingdom; for charity enlightens, and never faith without charity.

6384^e. The Intellectual of those (who have been in the affirmative and have strengthened the truths of faith by scientifics; yet so, that they can be elevated from scientifics,) is enlightened, and thus is in some perception of spiritual truth . . .

6405. They who do works from good have the understanding enlightened; for good enlightens; for the light of truth inflows from the Lord into the Intellectual through good, and thus into truth, but not into truth immediately.

6564. As to the influx through the internal . . . good gives life and its heat, which is love, whereas truth gives enlightenment and its light, which is faith.

6588². 'To be visited' = the raising up of a new Church, and the enlightenment then of those who were in ignorance of the truth and good of faith . . .

6766. 'A prince' = one who is in primary truths, thus who is enlightened more than others in the doctrine of truth.

[A. 6766]². Man is enlightened successively.

—^e. The man to whom can be given the power to settle disagreements between matters of faith within the Church must be a man of more advanced age, the interiors of whose understanding are enlightened.

6865^e. They who are in the light of Heaven are in enlightenment from the Lord, and before confirmation perceive, by looking into the scientifics which are below and are there arranged in order, whether the truth is confirmable, or not.

7012. 'With which thou shalt do signs' = enlightenment thence, and the confirmation of truths. . . The reason it also = enlightenment, is that the confirmation of truths is effected through enlightenment by the Lord when man studies the Word with the end of knowing truths.

— . They who are in externals without an internal . . . cannot be enlightened, thus not confirmed in truths. But they who are in externals and at the same time in internals, when they read the Word, are enlightened, and in the enlightenment see truths, in which they are afterwards more and more confirmed. And, what is remarkable, everyone has enlightenment according to the quality of his affection of truth, and the quality of the affection of truth is such as is the good of life. Hence also it is, that those who are in no affection of truth for the sake of truth, but for the sake of gain, are not at all enlightened when they read the Word . . .

—³. The internal sense . . . is also that which results from a number of passages of the letter rightly compared with each other, and is perceived by those who as to the Intellectual are enlightened by the Lord; for an enlightened Intellectual discerns between apparent truths and real truths, especially between falsities and truths, although it does not judge concerning real truths in themselves. But the Intellectual cannot be enlightened, unless it is believed that love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour are the principal and essential things of the Church. He who sets out from an acknowledgment of these, provided he is in them, sees innumerable truths . . . according to the degree of the enlightenment from the Lord.

7290². The ground which receives is an enlightened Rational.

7306. 'Morning' = a state of enlightenment and of revelation; here, of elevation, because it is predicated of those who are in falsities, who cannot be enlightened . . . The reason those who are in falsities cannot be enlightened, is that falsities reject and extinguish all the light which enlightens: it is only truths which receive that light.

7313^e. The obscurity (which succeeds a state of temptations) is enlightened by degrees.

7435. As enlightenment, which is effected by the Divine by means of the influx of good and truth, does not exist with the evil . . .

7503². The understanding is the internal sight, which is enlightened by the light of Heaven; and in proportion as it is enlightened, it apperceives, sees, and acknowledges the truths of faith when it reads the Word. Hence it is that those who are in the perception of the truth of faith are called intelligent and wise, and also enlightened.

7680. Perceptions are mentioned, and not enlightenments, because with the evil who infest there is not enlightenment, but still there is perception . . .

7719. See DWELL at this ref.

7860. See DURATION at this ref.

7912. See ELDER at this ref.

7950². Good is of love, and love is spiritual fire, from which comes enlightenment. He who believes that those who are in evil of life are also able to be in enlightenment as to the truths of faith, is very much mistaken . . .

7989. By the presence of the Lord, those who are in good and thence in truth are enlightened, and those who are in evil and thence in falsity are darkened.

8013². They (who are in the state after regeneration) see truths and confirm them from enlightenment; but (they who are in the state before regeneration) do not see truths and confirm them from enlightenment, but from persuasion . . .

8078⁴. The insinuation of faith by the internal way is effected by means of the reading of the Word, and at the same time by means of enlightenment by the Lord, which exists according to the quality of the affection, that is, according to the end in the knowing of truth.

8106. 'By day in a pillar of cloud' = that when there was a state of enlightenment, it was tempered by what is obscure of truth. . . For the times of the day, as morning, noon, evening, and night, correspond to the enlightenments which are of intelligence and wisdom in the other life; hence 'day' = a state of enlightenment or of clear perception; and 'night,' a state of no enlightenment or of obscure perception.

—³. The internal sense . . . cannot be comprehended by man, unless he is regenerate, and at the same time enlightened.

8108. 'By night in a pillar of fire to illuminate them' = that when there was a state of obscurity, it was tempered by means of enlightenment by good. . . 'To illuminate' = enlightenment.

8197. 'It illuminated the night' = the enlightenment of truth from good.

8211. 'The morning watch' = a state of thick darkness and of the destruction of those who are in falsity from evil, and a state of enlightenment and of the salvation of those who are in truth from good. . . In the state to which morning corresponds, the good begin to be enlightened as to the things which are of faith, and to grow warm as to those which are of charity.

8367. 'They came to Elim' = a state of enlightenment and affection, thus of consolation after temptation . . . For after every spiritual temptation there comes enlightenment and affection, thus what is pleasant and delightful; what is pleasant from enlightenment by means of truth, and what is delightful from the affection of good. . . When the temptation is ended, the communication with Heaven, which before had been partly closed, is opened; hence comes enlightenment and affection . . . Enlightenment by means of truth and the pleasantness thence, is signified by the 'twelve fountains of waters.' 8368.

8368°. For he who has truths in all abundance, also has enlightenment; and he who has enlightenment, if he longs for truth from affection, has pleasantness.

8443°. Truth Divine in the fifth degree, is such as there is in the First Heaven; this can be perceived by man for a while, that is to say, by one who is enlightened . . .

8521°. (Of the spiritual) none are able to see whether what is doctrinal of their own Church is true, except those who are in the affection of truth for the sake of the uses of life: they who have this end are continually enlightened by the Lord, not only while they live in the world, but also afterwards; it is only these who can receive it; for the Lord leads them by means of good, and thereby gives them to see truth, and thus to believe.

8685°. These things are arcana, which scarcely anyone can understand, except one who is in enlightenment from the Lord, and through enlightenment in perception.

8694°. By revelation is meant enlightenment while the Word is being read, and at the same time perception; for those who are in good, and long for truth, are so taught from the Word . . . The Angels who are with man perceive the Word according to the internal sense: this is communicated to the man who is in good and reads the Word, and longs for truth from affection: hence he has enlightenment and perception . . .

—e. Through Heaven from the Lord there is light, which encompasses and enlightens the understanding . . .

8780°. This (inward) revelation is effected by means of the enlightenment of the internal sight . . . when a man who is in the affection of truth from good is reading the Word: this enlightenment is then effected by the light of Heaven . . . By this light the understanding is enlightened just as the external sight is enlightened by the light which comes from the sun of the world. When the understanding is enlightened by this Divine light, it perceives that to be true which is true; it inwardly acknowledges it, and as it were sees it . . .

—3. The light which enlightens (those who are in the affection of truth from what is evil) is not Divine light from Heaven, but is sensuous light, like that of the infernals . . .

8792. The coming of the Lord and at the same time enlightenment. Sig.

8813. 'The lightnings enlightened the world' (Ps. lxxvii.18) = the enlightenment of the Church by truth Divine. Ill.

8941°. Some do not acknowledge the Word . . . for as their lumen is of nature, it falls into nature, nor can it be enlightened by the light of Heaven, because they reject the Word, whence comes all enlightenment.

8967. When (the good which is of charity and faith acquires dominion over the evil which is of the love of self and of the world) there takes place with the man enlightenment and the perception as to what is true and what is good, also as to what is evil and false . . .

8993°. When they are old enough to think for themselves, they search the Scriptures, and supplicate the Lord concerning enlightenment; and when they are enlightened they rejoice from the heart.

9039. Such truth (from proprium) exists with those who, not being enlightened by the light of Heaven, explain the Word; that is, those who read it not from the affection of truth for the sake of the good of life; for these are not enlightened.

9051. Man has an exterior understanding and an interior understanding . . . It is the latter understanding which is enlightened by the Lord when a man receives faith; for this is in the light of Heaven . . .

9086°. They who live this life (of charity) are enlightened by the Lord, and see the holy things of the Word; and not at all others.

9114. See CONSCIENCE at this ref.

9186°. They who are enlightened concerning truths, are those few who are in the doctrine and at the same time in the life of truth.

9188°. They are taught by the Lord when they read the Word, not for the sake of self and of the world, but for the sake of what is good and true itself; for in this case they are enlightened . . .

—5. Hence it is evident, that the Intellectual is enlightened with those who are in the affection of truth from good, but not with those who are in the affection of truth from evil. With those who are in the affection of truth from good, the Intellectual of the internal man is enlightened, and the Voluntary of the internal man is kindled; whereas with those who are in the affection of truth from evil, the Intellectual of the internal man is not enlightened, nor is the Voluntary of the internal man kindled. (From experience.)

[A.] 9367. They who are in persuasive faith do not know from any internal enlightenment whether the things they teach are true or false.

9382. 'Moses came and related to the people'=enlightenment and information by the Lord through the Divine truth which is from Him . . . For when the Lord comes, or is present in the Word, there is enlightenment.

—². How the case is with enlightenment and information from the Word. Everyone is enlightened and informed from the Word according to the degree of the affection of truth and the longing for it, and according to the capacity of receiving. They who are in enlightenment are as to their internal man in the light of Heaven; for the light of Heaven is what enlightens man in the truths and goods of faith. They who are thus illuminated apprehend the Word as to its interiors . . . Whereas they who are not in the affection of truth from good and thence in the longing to be wise are more darkened than enlightened when they are reading the Word; for they are not in the light of Heaven . . . Hence it is evident . . . that those are enlightened from the Word who are in heavenly loves, because heavenly loves receive . . .

—³. The reason it is the Word from which come enlightenment and information, is that in its first origin the Word is the truth Divine itself proceeding from the Lord, and in its descent into the world it is accommodated to all the Heavens: hence it is, that when a man who has heavenly love reads the Word he is conjoined with Heaven by it, and through Heaven with the Lord; and hence come enlightenment and information. It is otherwise when a man who has worldly love reads the Word: with him there is no conjunction of Heaven, and therefore he has not enlightenment and information.

9405. They who read the Word, and at the same time look to the Lord, acknowledging that everything good and true is from Him, and nothing from themselves, are enlightened. This enlightenment is from the light of Heaven, which light is the Divine truth itself proceeding from the Lord.

9407¹⁵. When man is in good, and from good in truths, he is elevated into this Divine light . . . Hence he has general enlightenment, in which from the Lord he sees innumerable truths, which he perceives from good . . .

9411. Therefore, when they who are in enlightenment are reading the Word, they see the Lord . . .

9424². Doctrine is to be collected from the Word; and, while it is being collected, the man must be in enlightenment from the Lord; and he is in enlightenment when he is in the love of truth for the sake of truth, and not for the sake of self and the world: these are enlightened in the Word while reading it, and see truth, and make doctrine therefrom. The reason it is so, is that such persons communicate with Heaven, thus with the Lord; and so, being enlightened by the Lord, they are led to see the truths of the Word such as they are in Heaven; for the Lord flows in through Heaven into their understanding; for it is the interior understanding of man that is enlightened.

—³. They who are in the genuine doctrine of truth from the Word, and in enlightenment while they are reading the Word, see concordant truths everywhere . . .

— As the latter and the former cannot be enlightened . . .

—⁴. 'The idols of the house of Israel' = doctrines solely from the external sense of the Word, not by means of enlightenment from the Lord . . .

9905⁴. That there is such a shining forth, by means of which the Divine truth from Heaven is revealed in the natural man with those who are enlightened from the Word, is not perceived in the world, because it is not known that any light from Heaven enlightens the Intellectual of man.

9930. 'Thou shalt make a plate of pure gold' = enlightenment from the Lord's Divine good. . . The reason 'a plate' = enlightenment, is from the resplendence . . . and all resplendence = enlightenment such as there is in the Heavens from the Lord as a Sun. The enlightenment there, is wisdom and intelligence from the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord thence; for this enlightens their interiors. Their interiors correspond to the Intellectual with man, which is enlightened by the Lord when the truth and good of the Church and of Heaven is perceived . . .

10105. The preparation of good for the uses of life by means of truths of doctrine in enlightenment from the Lord. Sig. . . 'In the holy place' = from Divine enlightenment; for 'the holy place' = where the Divine of the Lord is present, thus . . . where there is Divine enlightenment; for where the Divine of the Lord is present there is enlightenment.

—². It is said truths of doctrine in enlightenment from the Lord, because the truths from the Word are fitted together into doctrine in order that they may serve for use, which is done by those who are in enlightenment from the Lord; and those are in enlightenment when they read the Word who are in the affection of truth for the sake of truth, and for the sake of the good of life; and not those who are in the affection of truth for the sake of self-glory, reputation, or gain, as ends.

and the world, which enlightenment is mere thick darkness in spiritual things . . .

10215. 'Jehovah spake to Moses, saying'=enlightenment through the Word from the Lord. . . For 'to speak' =influx, perception, and instruction, and therefore also enlightenment; for enlightenment is influx, perception, and instruction from the Lord while the Word is being read. 10250². 10290. 10354.

10290². The Lord speaks with the man of the Church no otherwise than by means of the Word; for He then enlightens so that man may see the truth, and also gives perception so that he may perceive that it is so; but this is done according to the longing for truth with the man, and (this) is according to his love: they who love truth for the sake of truth are in enlightenment; and they who love good for the sake of good are in perception.

10330. 'I have filled him with the spirit of God' =influx and enlightenment from the Divine truth which is from the Lord's Divine good. . . 'To fill,' when predicated of Jehovah, =influx; and, with man, enlightenment; (for) influx is predicated of all good and of all truth which come out of Heaven from the Lord; and as this influx enlightens man, enlightenment is predicated of man.

—². The influx and enlightenment are effected in this way. As to the interiors . . . man is able to look either downwards or upwards. . . Man looks (upwards) not from himself, but from the Lord. . . The interiors are then actually elevated by the Lord (to Heaven), and are at the same time actually withdrawn from the body and the world; and when this takes place the interiors of the man come actually into Heaven, and into its light and heat. Hence he has influx and enlightenment. The light of Heaven illuminates the understanding, because that light is the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord as a Sun; and the heat of Heaven kindles the will. . . And as the man is then among the Angels, there is communicated to him from them. . . the intelligence of truth and the affection of good; and it is this communication which is called influx and enlightenment.

—³. But . . . the influx and enlightenment take place according to the capacity of reception with the man; and the capacity of reception is according to the love of truth and good; wherefore they who are in the love of truth and good for their own sake, are elevated; whereas they who are in the love of truth and good for the sake of self and the world. . . cannot be elevated, thus cannot receive the influx of the Divine from Heaven, and be enlightened.

10355². In the most ancient times . . . Heaven flowed in through their internal man into their external man; hence they had not only enlightenment and perception, but also speech with the Angels.

—³. Afterwards. . . into these (correspondences and representations) Heaven flowed in with them, and enlightened; for correspondences and representations are the external forms of heavenly things; and in proportion as men were then in the good of love and of charity, they were enlightened.

—⁴. As (with the Israelites) information about heavenly things. . . could not be effected by means of influx into their interiors, and thus by means of enlightenment, Angels spoke with some of them. . .

—⁵. (Then) the Lord came into the world, and reduced into order all things in the Heavens and the Hells, to the end that man might be able to receive influx from Him out of Heaven, and be enlightened. . . In this Christian Church information about heavenly things. . . is effected solely by the Word; through it is effected influx and enlightenment with man. . . But as the man of this Church has extinguished the good of love and of charity, neither can he be informed through any influx and through enlightenment thence, except concerning some truths, which, however, do not cohere with good.

—⁶. The Lord is the Word itself. . . therefore they who love Divine truth for its own sake love the Lord; and with those who love the Lord Heaven flows in and enlightens; whereas, they who love Divine truth for the sake of honours and gain as ends, turn themselves from the Lord to self and the world, and therefore with them influx and enlightenment cannot exist.

10400⁶. Hence it is evident, that the man whose internal is open, is in the internal sense of the Word. . . Hence he has enlightenment when he is reading the Word; but according to the light which he is able to have by means of the Knowledges that are with him. 10402⁶.

10406. When the loves of self and of the world reign, man is not in any enlightenment from Heaven, but takes all things from his own intelligence, and confirms them from the sense of the letter of the Word. . .

10551². When they who are in enlightenment are reading the Word, they see it from within; for their internal is open; and when the internal is open it is in the light of Heaven: this light flows in and enlightens, although the man is not aware of it. The reason he is not aware of it, is that this light inflows into the Knowledges which are in the man's memory, and these Knowledges are in natural light; and as the man thinks from these Knowledges as from himself, he cannot apperceive the influx; nevertheless, he may know from various indications that he has been in enlightenment. But still everyone is deceived who believes himself to be in enlightenment, if he does not love truth for its own sake, and for the sake of the good of life. . . for to live according to Divine truths from the Word is to love the Lord; and from the Lord, when He is loved, is all enlightenment. But they who have. . . as an end honour, gain, and reputation, and the Divine truths of the Word as means, cannot possibly be in any enlightenment; for this end is worldly and corporeal. . . and therefore closes the internal man, and then no light from Heaven can flow in and enlighten. If these persons believe that they are in enlightenment when they are reading the Word, they are completely deceived. Ex.

—⁵. How the influx is effected by means of which there is enlightenment. . . The man whose internal is open perceives the Word spiritually, but this he is unaware of while he lives in the world, because his spiritual thought inflows into the natural thought in the external man, and there presents itself to view ; but still it is that interior thought which enlightens, and through which the influx from the Lord is effected.

[A.] 1063². With those who believe (that there is no other God than the Lord, that all good and truth are from Him, and also that salvation and eternal life are from Him), and who love it to be so, all evil and falsity are removed while they are reading the Word, because the Lord then enlightens and leads them . . . But they who do not acknowledge these chief precepts . . . are not enlightened when they are reading the Word ; thus do not see from the Lord the truths therein . . .

1064⁰. As this is among the primary things by means of which the man of the Church is enlightened when he is reading the Word, and as this is the subject treated of in what now follows, a statement shall be made of how the case stands. The man who wants to be enlightened by the Lord, must take especial care that he does not appropriate to himself anything doctrinal that supports evil . . . When he does this, evil remains inscribed on his soul and on his heart ; and when this has been done, it is utterly impossible that he can afterwards be enlightened through the Word by the Lord . . .

1065⁹. They who are in some enlightenment from Heaven are able to see . . .

— Hence it follows, that all enlightenment from the Word, that the case is otherwise, is rejected . . .

—³. But to those who are in enlightenment, the Lord gives to understand the things which they believe ; and they who acknowledge the Lord and love to live according to His precepts are enlightened when they are reading the Word, and they understand it ; but not those who say that they believe, and do not live . . . Examp.

1070². They who turn themselves to the Lord or to Heaven, receive influx thence, and are in enlightenment, and are thus in the perception of truth within themselves . . .

—³. But they who turn themselves to themselves and the world, are not able to receive any influx from the Lord or from Heaven, thus are not able to be in any enlightenment and perception of truth . . .

1070³. 'He removed the veil . . .'=a state of enlightenment at that time.

According to the love and longing desire of use (those who are in ecclesiastical things in Heaven) are in enlightenment and in the light of wisdom ; and they come into this from the Word in the Heavens. . . 473^e. The will is what is enkindled by love, and the thought is what is enlightened in the things of faith : therefore, only those who can think wisely are enlightened, and, according to the enlightenment, think truths and will truths . . .

50. From the sense of the letter (alone) the Lord teaches and enlightens man. 53.

57. That the genuine truth which must be of doctrine, does not appear in the sense of the letter of the Word to any but those who are in enlightenment from the Lord. Gen.art. Enlightenment is from the Lord alone, and exists with those who love truths because they are truths, and make them uses of life; with others there exists no enlightenment in the Word. The reason enlightenment is from the Lord alone, is that the Lord is in all things of the Word. The reason enlightenment exists with those who love truths because they are truths, and make them uses of life, is that they are in the Lord and the Lord in them . . . This the Lord teaches in John: 'In that day ye shall know, that ye are in Me and I in you. He that hath My commandments, and doeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him. I will come unto him, and make My abode with him' (xiv.20, 21,23). And in Matthew: 'Blessed are the clean in heart; for they shall see God' (v.8). These are they who are in enlightenment when they are reading the Word . . . 59°.

91°. The latter are enlightened by the Lord, and from their light see truths; whereas the former are enlightened by self, and from their light see falsities.

106. Hence there is enlightenment of the nations and peoples outside the Church also by means of the Word.

F. 5. There is a spiritual idea . . . which flows in with those who are in the affection of truth, and inwardly dictates whether this or that which is heard or read is true or not: in this idea are they who in enlightenment from the Lord read the Word. To be in enlightenment is nothing else than to be in the perception, and thence in the internal acknowledgment, that this and that is true. Sig.

149. That the Holy Spirit . . . is the Truth itself from which man has enlightenment. Ill.

150. The enlightenment which is attributed to the Holy Spirit is indeed in man from the Lord, yet is effected by means of Spirits and Angels. . . The Angels and Spirits cannot possibly enlighten man from themselves, because they, in like manner as man, are enlightened by the Lord: and as they are in like manner enlightened, it follows that all enlightenment is from the Lord alone. The reason it is effected by means of Angels and Spirits, is that the man who is in enlightenment is then placed in the midst of such Angels and Spirits as receive from the Lord alone more enlightenment than others.

212. This may be comprehended by enlightened reason. T.32.

233°. The mediate enlightenment of men through the Angelic Heaven which existed before the Advent of the Lord, may be compared to the light of the moon . . . P. 135. The Lord alone teaches man; but mediately through the Word, in enlightenment.

165. That man is led by the Lord by means of influx, and is taught by means of enlightenment. Gen.art.

166. The reason man is taught by enlightenment, is that to be taught and also to be enlightened are said of the understanding; for the understanding . . . is enlightened by spiritual light, as the eye . . . is by natural light.

168. As few know anything about the enlightenment in which is the understanding of a man who is taught by the Lord, something shall be said about it. There is enlightenment from the Lord interior and exterior; and there is enlightenment from man also interior and exterior. Interior enlightenment from the Lord consists in a man's perceiving at the first hearing whether what is said is true or not true: exterior enlightenment is thence in the thought. Interior enlightenment from man is from mere confirmation; and exterior enlightenment from man is from mere knowledge.

—². (Examples given of the truths which are perceived at the first hearing by a rational man by interior enlightenment from the Lord.)

—³. Exterior enlightenment is the enlightenment of the thought from that interior enlightenment; and the thought is in this enlightenment in proportion as it remains in the perception which it has from the interior enlightenment, and in proportion as at the same time it has thoughts of truth and good; for from these it takes the reasons by means of which it confirms. The thought from this interior enlightenment sees a thing on both sides . . .

[P. 168]⁴. But interior enlightenment from man is entirely different. By this a man sees a thing on one side and not on the other; and when he has confirmed it, he sees it in a light which is apparently like the light spoken of above, but it is a wintry light. Examp.

—e. Exterior enlightenment from man exists with those who think and speak from mere knowledge impressed on the memory . . .

169. These are the differences of enlightenment, and thence of perception and thought. There is an actual enlightenment by spiritual light, but the enlightenment itself by that light does not appear to anyone in the natural world . . . But this enlightenment has sometimes appeared to me in the Spiritual World, being seen with those who were in enlightenment from the Lord as a luminous appearance around the head . . . But with those who were in enlightenment from themselves, this luminous appearance was not round the head, but round the mouth and above the chin.

170. Besides these enlightenments, there exists another enlightenment, by means of which it is revealed to a man in what faith he is, and in what intelligence and wisdom he is, which revelation is such that he perceives it in himself. Ex.

321³. All influx from the Lord is effected by means of the enlightenment of the understanding, and by means of the affection of truth, and through the latter into the former.

329. From His own table (of the Decalogue) the Lord enlightens everyone, and gives power, but man receives the power and enlightenment in proportion as he does the things which are in his own table.

R. 7. 'Whatsoever things he saw'=their enlightenment in all the things which are in this Revelation. E.11.

29. The only Creator, Saviour, and Enlightener from Himself. Sig. 38.

34. 'I was in the isle called Patmos'=the state and place in which he could be enlightened. Ex.

43. 'Being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks'=the New Church which will be in enlightenment by the Lord from the Word. 75.

—³. The golden candlestick in the Tabernacle represented the Church as to enlightenment by the Lord.

50⁴. 'The earth was enlightened by His glory' (Ezek. xliii.2).

85. (That if they do not regard the goods of life in the first place) it is certain that enlightenment will not be given them to see truths any longer. Sig.

—². The spiritual mind is opened by means of charity, and when it is opened there flows in, out of Heaven from the Lord, light and the affection of understanding truths. Thence is enlightenment. The man who is in this enlightenment acknowledges truths as soon as he reads or hears them . . .

224⁴. The Lord withdraws the understanding from the world while He enlightens it.

236. 'Out of the throne proceeded lightnings . . . '=from the Lord enlightenment. . . E.273.

414. Everyone is enlightened according to the spiritual affection of truth and good, and at the same time according to the genuine truths by means of which he has opened his Rational.

608. 'He that hath intelligence'=to be in enlightenment by the Lord.

645³. As this parable teaches and illustrates . . .

666. 'For Thou alone art holy'=that He is the Word, the Truth, and the enlightenment. Ex.

675³. There has been given us enlightenment from Heaven, and in the enlightenment a perception that at this day there is no longer a Church in the Christian world . . .

753. In order that those who are in enlightenment from the Lord might see . . .

754. 'The earth was enlightened by his glory' (Rev. xviii.1)=the Church in heavenly light from the Lord by means of Divine truth. Ex. E.1094.

796. 'The light of a candle shall shine in thee no longer'=that those who are in that religiosity from doctrine and from a life according to it have no enlightenment from the Lord and thence perception of spiritual truth.

— . As this light is from the Lord, and the Lord is omnipresent through and in it, all enlightenment is effected by means of it . . .

852. That those who come into Heaven have . . . enlightenment by means of conjunction with the Lord. Sig. . . He is said to be 'holy' who has enlightenment in Divine truths by means of conjunction with the Lord.

911². Therefore, when spiritual light inflows into natural light with the man who is reading the Word, he is enlightened, and sees the truths therein; for truths are the objects of spiritual light. The Word in the sense of the letter is of such a character, that the more a man is enlightened by means of the influx of the light of Heaven, the more he sees truths from their connection and thus from their form.

919. 'Because the glory of God enlightened it' (Rev. xxi.19)=that the men of that Church . . . will be in spiritual light from the Divine truth of the Word from the Lord alone.

920. 'To walk in the light of the New Jerusalem'=to perceive and see Divine truths from interior enlightenment, and to live according to them.

962². (The members of the Council) were not in enlightenment, wherefore they made supplication, and then light descended from Heaven, which first illuminated the backs of their heads, afterwards their temples, and at last their faces. Then they began.

M. 24. In the enlightenment in which (the priest of Heaven) was . . .

44⁹. (The enlightenment of the Angels after their conjugal delights.)

231³. There was then given me enlightenment from Heaven . . .

261². If we look towards the east to the Lord, we shall be enlightened and we shall know.

461³. From these Angels those three companies have enlightenment.

T. 59. He is the Sun . . . which enlightens the understanding of all . . .

76². Once, when I was in enlightenment, it was given to perceive . . . —³.

—^e. Sparks of light from the Sun . . . descended into their eyes . . . and, when thus enlightened . . .

79⁶. They illustrated the state of the question . . .

109². From the Divine Natural, He enlightens not only the internal spiritual man, but also the external natural man. Unless these two are enlightened at the same time, the man is as it were in the shade; whereas, when they are both enlightened together, he is as it were in the day; for when the internal man only is enlightened . . . or when the external man only . . . he is like one who sleeps and dreams . . .

142². Confirmed from the Word, and illustrated by reason.

146. That this Divine virtue and operation, which is meant by the sending of the Holy Spirit, with the clergy in special, is enlightenment and instruction. 155.

— . The reasons why enlightenment and instruction are [theirs] in special, is that these belong to their office, and the inauguration into the ministry carries them with it . . .

155. Therefore there are four things which follow in order with the clergy: enlightenment, perception, disposition, and instruction. Enlightenment is from the Lord.

—^e. Thus, the enlightenment which is from the Lord, is turned into various lights and into various heats with everyone, according to the state of his mind.

165. There is no other way than for man to approach the Lord God the Saviour, and to read the Word under His auspices . . . and he will be enlightened, and will see truths which reason also will acknowledge. 177^e. 634^e. E. 200⁵.

176. (If the Lord is not immediately approached) does not the enlightenment . . . become more and more natural . . .

353. The beauty of faith from this enlightenment . . . —². This may be compared with the enlightenment of temples by candelabra . . .

396^e. Unless the understanding is enlightened while the Word is being read . . .

508². The windows of crystal signified the Truths which enlighten the New Church.

618². All the truths which make the body of faith, emit light, and enlighten . . .

666². There can be a more perfect conscience with those who are in the truths of faith more than others . . . than with those who are less enlightened . . .

704. Anyone enlightened from Heaven may perceive . . .

774². The mere presence of the Lord, and the enlightenment of the understanding thence, may be compared to . . .

D. 4664^e. Unless this is the principle, there is no enlightenment.

4772. Where there is enlightenment, there, also, there must be a view of contraries.

5518. The African nation are able to be in enlightenment more than the other nations of this Earth, because it is their nature to think interiorly, and thence to receive truths and acknowledge that they are truths . . .

5670. On enlightenment by means of the Word.

5671. The Intellectual can be enlightened only from Heaven; and no one can be enlightened from Heaven but he who is in heavenly love, thus who is in the life of good . . . They who are in worldly things cannot be enlightened, because they are in the light of the world and not in that of Heaven . . .

5672. Neither can man be enlightened by means of a living voice from Heaven; in this way it does not enter his Rational . . .

— . Nor can those be enlightened who have confirmed themselves in false doctrinal things . . .

—^e. In a word, enlightenment takes place according to the quality of the man as to good and as to understanding; also as to the longing from love, and as to the quality of the Intellectual; thence according to the quality of the reception.

5908. On enlightenment.

— . That Divine truths are of such a character that they are not perceived except by one who is enlightened, and are rejected by one who is not enlightened. Shown by experience.

5951. See ENGLAND.

5972. The preacher is then as it were in his enlightenment . . .

6074^e. Zinzendorf believed that he was enlightened; but he was shown that enlightenment has no existence when these three (falsities) are accepted.

D. Min. 4752^e. They who are in good are enlightened by the Lord. (To know and confirm many things) is not to be learned, that is, enlightened.

E. 11. This is the reason why the Word . . . cannot be understood except by one who is enlightened; and those alone are enlightened who are in the affection of truth from good; thus they who are in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour. The good of these is spiritual good, with and from which is the light of Heaven, which enlightens.

61. 'I turned to see the voice that spake with me' = the understanding enlightened.

—^e. That which enters through the will into the understanding . . . comes into enlightenment . . .

110². See ASSYRIA.

140. See BALAAM.

—⁶. Man can be in enlightenment as to the understanding, although he is in evil as to the will . . .

[E. 140]. That the understanding can be in enlightenment, has been given to man for the sake of reformation . . .

176⁴. Truths in the natural man are scientifics and Knowledges, from which man can think, reason, and conclude naturally concerning the truths and goods of the Church, and concerning the falsities and evils which are opposite to them, and thence be in some natural enlightenment when he is reading the Word; for the Word in the letter is not understood without enlightenment; and enlightenment is either spiritual or natural. Spiritual enlightenment exists only with those who are spiritual; and the spiritual are they who are in the good of love and of charity and thence in truths; whereas mere natural enlightenment exists with those who are natural. With those also who are spiritual while they live in the world, there is enlightenment in the Natural, but this comes forth from the enlightenment in the Spiritual; for with them the Lord flows in through the spiritual man into the natural man, and thus illumines the latter; from which illumination the man sees what is true and good and what is false and evil . . .

233³. After (death) they are enlightened in truths; for they are able to receive enlightenment . . .

235⁴. These cannot be enlightened by the Lord; for the Lord inflows into the good of man, and from that good enlightens him in truths . . .

242². This also is what is called enlightenment. Hence it is that no one can be enlightened from the Word, unless he is in the spiritual affection of truth. There does indeed exist what is like enlightenment with those who have confirmed themselves in such things as belong to the doctrine of faith alone . . . But this enlightenment is a fatuous enlightenment; for they can confirm falsities equally as well as truths . . .

307^e. The Angels of the Third Heaven have perception; the Angels of the Second and of the Ultimate Heaven have enlightenment of the understanding. They are thus distinguished. Perception is full confirmation from influx from the Lord; but the enlightenment of the understanding is spiritual sight . . .

355⁹. That those receive and understand, who, from the good of life, are in the affection of knowing the truths of the Church; and that no others are enlightened . . . Sig.

386²⁷. 'To lead,' when predicated of the Lord, = to enlighten.

430¹⁶. That he who lives in some kind of truth from good, is in enlightenment . . . Sig.

529. The Lord enlightening all in the Heavens concerning the state of the Church at its end. Sig.

—'. 'To fly' = to enlighten and give understanding.

—², Ex. and Ill.

—^c. 'To fly' = to enlighten the middle Heaven. Ex.

—'. 'To be borne upon the wings of the wind' = to enlighten the ultimate Heaven. Ex.

594⁶. Here is described the enlightenment of the Word and thus of the Church. Enlightenment by means of Divine truth from the Heavens, is signified by 'God rode upon a cherub, and did fly.' The Divine truth in ultimates which is enlightened, is signified by 'the wings of the wind, etc.' The various degrees of the understanding which receives enlightenment are here signified.

—⁷. 'He that rideth upon the clouds' = the Lord as to enlightenment; 'clouds' = the truths in the ultimates which are enlightened; and these are enlightened by means of the influx of the light which is the Divine truth from . . . Heaven.

—⁸. As Divine truth in ultimates is but little understood, unless it is enlightened from Heaven . . .

665. 'The spirit of life from God entered into them' = enlightenment and the reception of Divine truth from the Lord with some, to commence the New Church.

682. 'There took place great voices in the heavens' = enlightenment and joy in the higher heavens.

—'. For, when the Angels are in enlightenment, they are also in wisdom . . .

—². So long as the evil were conjoined with the lower Heavens, the latter could not have enlightenment and joy . . .

684. Then both the higher and the lower Heavens can be in enlightenment, and thence in the perception of good and truth.

701. With all men the Lord continually inflows with light which enlightens . . .

714¹⁰. They who love truth for its own sake . . . are elevated from their proprium while they are reading the Word, and this even into the light of Heaven, and are enlightened . . .

759². Hence is their enlightenment.

—³. How enlightenment is effected. . . The man who is made spiritual . . . as to his spirit, is in a heavenly Society . . . With him goods continually flow in from Heaven . . . and as the goods inflow into his affection, and through his affection into his thought, hence he has enlightenment. It is this enlightenment which is meant by the spiritual intelligence and circumspection, which are signified by the eagle's wings that were given to the woman . . .

—⁴. All who belong to the New Church have the understanding enlightened, by virtue of which they can see truth from the light of truth, that is, whether it is true or not . . . Whereas, those who do not belong to this Church . . . cannot have the understanding (thus) enlightened . . .

763². No one thinks and reasons spiritually but he who is in enlightenment from the Lord . . .

768⁸. Enlightenment that it is genuine truth which they receive. Sig.

803². How a man can be in enlightenment, so as to learn the truths which must be of his faith. (Very important Gen.art.)

824. Believed to be enlightened or inspired . . .

825². Every day he is taught by the Lord what to do and say, also what to preach or write ; for when evils are removed, he is continually under the Lord's auspices, and in enlightenment . . .

826. The genuine truths (in the Word) can only be seen from one who is enlightened . . .

845. See BEAST.

846². These three degrees of understanding ; natural, rational, and spiritual, (signified by 'Egypt,' 'Asshur,' and 'Israel') must be one, in order for man from enlightenment to see and perceive the genuine truths of the Word.

862. Good opens the spiritual mind, which receives light from Heaven, and enlightens the natural mind . . .

—^c. They who are in truths from good are continually enlightened by the Lord . . .

923². Everyone who is in the spiritual affection of truth is enlightened by the Lord while he is reading the Word ; and it is the understanding which is enlightened. But he who is not in the spiritual affection of truth cannot be enlightened as to the understanding . . . And as the Church at its end is of such a character, the understanding of truth perishes so completely, that it cannot be enlightened . . .

—². Without the opening of the spiritual mind, enlightenment can have no existence . . .

941². When the spiritual internal is opened, and communication is thereby given with Heaven, and conjunction with the Lord, enlightenment takes place with man. He is enlightened chiefly when he is reading the Word . . . Man is enlightened in the Rational . . .

942². The first budding forth of man is from enlightenment.

950. Divine truth enlightens the understanding of the Angels, and that which enlightens their understanding shines before their eyes.

957². The idea of God is the primary one of all ; for according to the quality of it, man has communication with Heaven and conjunction with the Lord, and, from this, such is the enlightenment . . . he has.

1067³. That the Word is the Divine truth itself, which gives wisdom to the Angels, and enlightens men, can only be . . . seen by a man who is enlightened . . .

—^c. This spiritual perception . . . inflows into his natural perception . . . and enlightens the latter. Hence the man who reads the Word from the affection of truth, has enlightenment through Heaven from the Lord.

1097². God . . . the Enlightener . . .

1103². Enlightenment is attributed to the Holy Spirit.

1147³. I see and perceive the enlightenment.

1173². Man is then enlightened according to the affection of truth from use.

1177. The nature of enlightenment. Gen.art.

— . In this way is effected enlightenment through the Word by the Lord.

— . To be enlightened through Heaven by the Lord, is to be enlightened through the Holy Spirit . . .

—⁴. But enlightenment by means of these religions is not like enlightenment by means of the Word . . .

1183. Men are enlightened variously, each according to the quality of his affection and consequent intelligence. They who are in the spiritual affection of truth are elevated into the light of Heaven so completely that they perceive the enlightenment.

De Verbo 9^e. All these, because they love truth, receive influx from the Lord, and see and find genuine truths in the Word ; for they are enlightened as to the understanding, and in the enlightenment they perceive them as from themselves . . .

12. On enlightenment by means of the Word. Gen. art.

13. Enlightenment by means of the Word is effected through an interior way ; whereas enlightenment by immediate revelation is effected through an exterior way. The interior way is through the will into the understanding ; the exterior way is through the hearing into the understanding. A man is enlightened through the Word by the Lord, when his will is in good ; whereas a man can be instructed and as it were enlightened through the hearing, although the will is in evil . . .

21. The true spiritual sense of the Word is from the Lord alone : this is the reason why no one in either the natural or the Spiritual World is allowed to investigate the spiritual sense of the Word from the sense of its letter, unless he is entirely in the doctrine of Divine truth, and in enlightenment from the Lord. —^c.

D. Wis. xi. 2a. The defenders of faith separated . . . do not deny enlightenment : the enlightenment which they do not deny, is here meant by perception . . . The reason this enlightenment is perception, is that all Truth is in light . . . They who are in the love of truth, are actually in the light of Heaven, and therefore they are in the enlightenment and perception of truth when they are reading the Word ; whereas all others are not in the enlightenment and perception of truth, but only in the confirmation of their own principles . . .

5 M. 10. As they were in enlightenment from the little flames over their heads, they willingly listened to the discourse of the Angels, and comprehended Truths.

Coro. Miracles iv. At this day, in place of miracles . . . there has taken place intromission into the Spiritual World, and enlightenment there by means of an immediate light from the Lord in the interior things of the Church.

En-Mishpat. En Mischpath.

A. 1678⁴. Hence it is evident, that 'En-Mishpat,' that is, 'the Fountain of Judgment,' or 'the Fountain of Mishpat which is Kadesh' (Gen. xiv. 7) = contention about truths, and thus continuation.

Enmity. Inimicitia.

See also ENEMY-inimicus.

A. 3488⁴. 'Then shall many be offended, and shall deliver up one another, and shall hate one another' = enmities on account of these things. 'Many shall be offended' = the enmity in themselves ; the Lord's Human itself is that which excites the enmity . . . 'They shall deliver up one another' = the enmity among themselves from falsity against truth ; and 'they shall hate one another' = the enmity among themselves from evil against good.

[A.] 3489. Still less, enmity against the goods and truths of faith . . .

—². A sphere of enmity against the Lord . . .

4997^o. From the love of the world there also arise enmities and hatreds, but in a less degree.

5718². They made human prudence to consist in exciting enmities . . . for the sake of exercising command. D.1793.

7272². From these principles he lives . . . in enmity and hatred against everyone who does not worship him . . .

7926². (The effort of the Hells to infest the good) is enmity, which continually breathes hostility and violence . . .

8734^o. See DISJOIN.

9013. See DECEIT.

9348⁷. From the love of self there springs forth . . . enmity if they do not favour . . .

H. 570. The evils derived from these two loves, are . . . enmity and hostility against those who do not favour them . . .

587². In these (western) Hells are those who in the world had been in the love of self, and thence in . . . enmity against those who did not favour them . . .

Life 67. By murders of every kind are also meant every kind of enmity . . . T.309. E.1012³.

T. 381⁵. With the consummate hypocrite there is an intestine enmity against truly spiritual men . . .

405³. The evils with those who are in the love of dominion from the love of self, are in general . . . enmity against those who do not favour them; hostility thence . . .

D. 3329. There is a natural enmity . . . A like enmity have all men here against reason . . .

E. 693. 'The nations were angry' = the . . . enmity and hatred of the evil against the Lord . . .

1016². Hatred exists especially with those who are in the love of exercising command over all: with the rest there is enmity.

A. 331. This heresy (Cain), when amplified, was called 'Enoch.'

399. 'Cain Knew his wife, and she conceived, and bare Enoch' (Gen.iv.17) = that this schism or heresy produced from itself another, which was called 'Enoch' . . . As the schism or heresy was called 'Enoch,' it is said that the name of the city was called according to the name of his son, 'Enoch.' 403.

401. That it was a heresy, and everything doctrinal or heretical thereof, which was called 'Enoch,' is to some extent evident from the name, which means instruction begun or initiated thence.

404. 'There was born to Enoch, Irad, and Irad begat Mehujael, and Mehujael begat Methusael, and Methusael begat Lamech' (ver.18). All these names = heresies derived from the first one, which was called 'Cain' . . .

463. The seventh Church was called 'Enoch.'

464. The Church called 'Enoch' is described, that it made doctrine from the things revealed to and perceived by the most Ancient Church; and that although this doctrine was of no use at that time, it was preserved for the use of posterity; which is signified by 'Enoch was no longer, because God took him' (Gen.v.24).

485. Churches of diverse doctrine were called by a like name, as is evident from those which in the preceding chapter were called 'Enoch,' and 'Lamech,' being different from those which are here called 'Enoch,' and 'Lamech.'

513. 'Jared . . . begat Enoch' (Gen.v.18). 'Jared' = the sixth Church; and 'Enoch,' the seventh. 516.

519. At that time, there were some who, from the perceptive things of the Most Ancient and the succeeding Churches, made doctrine, in order that it might serve as a rule, and that thence might be known what is good and true. Those who were of this character were called 'Enoch.' This is what is signified by these words, 'and Enoch walked with God.' So, also, they called that doctrine; which is also signified by the name 'Enoch,' which is, to instruct.

520. 'All the days of Enoch were 365 years' (ver.23) = that [the people signified by Enoch] were few. 'He walked with God' = as before, the doctrine concerning faith.

521. 'He was no longer, because God took him' = that that doctrine was preserved for the use of posterity: for thus stands the case with Enoch, that, as has been said, he reduced into doctrine what was perceptive of the Most Ancient Church; which at that time was not permissible. Ex.

522. The quality of the Perceptive of those who were called 'Enoch,' it has also been given me to know,—that it was a general obscure something devoid of distinctness; for in such a case the mind determines its view outside of itself into doctrinal things.

609. These doctrinal things were first collected by 'Cain' . . . They were afterwards reduced into doctrine by 'Enoch' . . . 736. 920.

1241². See DOCTRINE.

2896^e. Hence came representatives and significatives, which, when communication with the Angels began to cease, were collected by those who are meant by 'Enoch' . . . 5136². E.670². 728².

S. 21. 'Enoch' (Gen.v.21–24), together with his associates, collected correspondences from the mouth of the men of the Most Ancient Church, and propagated the knowledge of them to posterity; from which it came to pass that the knowledge of correspondences was not only known but also cultivated in many kingdoms of Asia . . . and was thence conveyed into Greece . . .

E. 728². Therefore the Lord provided that some of those who lived with the most ancients should collect the correspondences into one, and should connect them together into a writing. These were they who are meant by 'Enoch;' and this writing is what is there signified. As this writing was to be of service to future Churches . . . for the knowledge of spiritual things in natural ones, it was preserved by the Lord for their use, and also guarded, lest the last posterity of the Most Ancient Church . . . should injure that writing. This is what is signified in the spiritual sense by 'Enoch was no longer, because God took him.'

Enormous. Enormis.

Enormity. Enormitas.

A. 337^e. See DOCTRINE.

2371³. In which merit is regarded as something enormous.

4493⁶. The enormous crime (of Simeon and Levi).

5780. To claim for themselves what is not their own, is an enormous evil. Sig.

Life 31. By this truth to destroy all the good of charity . . . is an enormous thing.

R. 795. How they might confirm this enormous falsity . . .

B. 64. From the faith of the present Church . . . enormous births . . .

T. 94. From this . . . many enormities have flowed into the Church . . . These enormities enun.

D. Min. 4717. He was shown what a devil he was, and he was enormous.

Enos. Enosch.

A. 324. A new Church, called 'Enos' which was afterwards raised up. Tr. (in Gen. iv. 26).

336. Charity implanted through faith is called 'Enos,' that is, another man, which is the name of that Church. 436.

439. 'Seth' = the faith through which is charity : and his son, whose name was 'Enos' = a Church which held charity as the chief thing of faith ; as is evident from . . . the fact that it is called 'Enos,' which name means 'Man,' not the celestial man, but the human spiritual man, who, here, is 'Enos.'

463. The third Church was called 'Enos' (Gen. v. 6). 498. 500.

477^e. (These words) stand for man, which, in the Hebrew Language, is 'Enos.'

— (In this passage) the 'man' first mentioned is 'Enos,' and the 'man' afterwards mentioned is 'Adam.'

502. These three Churches, 'Man,' 'Seth,' and 'Enos,' constitute the Most Ancient Church, yet with a difference of perfection as to perceptions. Ex. 505.

505. 'Enos' = the third Church, one of the most ancient ones, but less celestial, and therefore less perceptive than the Church 'Seth' . . .

640^e. Besides this (new Church called 'Noah'), there were others existing at that time, as the one which was called 'Enos.'

1125. I have been permitted to speak with those who were of the Church called 'Enos.' Their influx was soft, their speech modest ; they said that they live together in charity ; and that they perform offices of friendship to others who come among them. But it was evident, that their charity was the charity of [personal] friendship. They live peaceably . . . D. 4139b.

9907. 'To enter before Jehovah' (Ex.xxviii.30)=worship. 9927. 9963. 10103. 10242.

9927. 'To enter,' and 'to go out' (ver.35)=all things of the state . . . that is treated of . . . here, everything of the state of the good and truth in worship. (This signification of) 'entering' and 'going out' comes from the representatives in the other life; for they there . . . enter and go out as in the world, but all these things take place according to the state of the life of their thoughts and affections. . . Hence it is evident, that all things belonging to motion signify the things which belong to states of life . . . Hence it is, that it was a customary formula with the ancients to say that they knew the entering and going out . . . when they meant that they knew every state of his life. III.

—⁴. 'To enter' into Heaven (John x.1,2,9)=into the good of love and of faith . . . Wherefore 'to enter in' and 'to go out'=to be led by the Lord as to every state of life; consequently, from freedom to think and will what is good . . .

—⁵. 'To enter into a house,' 'to abide there,' and 'to go forth thence' (Luke ix.4)=to enjoy heavenly consociation with those who receive the Lord in faith and love; for, in Heaven, they who are together in one Society are also in one house, and enter and go out there; for they are in a like good; whereas, they who are in unlike good cannot do so; and if they enter, they do not enter through the doors . . .

Entreat. Deprecari.

A. 5471. 'In his entreating to us and we would not hear'=his continual solicitation without reception. 'To entreat'=solicitation; for entreaty that it should not be alienated, when the subject treated of is influx of good from the Divine, is solicitation to be received. For the good that flows in from the Lord continually urges and as it were solicits . . . Hence it is that entreaty not to be alienated signifies continual solicitation.

A. 1974². There arose envy among them . . . I was permitted sensibly to feel this envy . . . Their envy was such, that it caused in them . . . anguish and interior pain . . . They were led thence through varieties of envy until they were pained at heart. While they were in that state, I spoke to them about the envy . . . Hence, further, indignation imbittered their envy, which still increased to such a degree that they could not afterwards endure the slightest recollection of what had occurred . . . The states and progressions of the envy, with its degrees and increments, and with the varied and mingled bitternesses of mind and heart, cannot be described. Thus it was shown how the wicked are tortured by mere envy, when they see from afar the bliss of the good, nay, when they merely think of it. D. 166.

3410. 'The Philistines envied him' (Gen. xxvi. 14)=that those who are in the mere knowledge of Knowledges did not apprehend. 'To envy'=not to apprehend.

4702. 'His brethren envied him' (Gen. xxxvii. 11)=their aversion. . . In the Original Language, the expression 'to envy' also=to emulate and to quarrel; and as emulation and quarrelling are effects of hatred, by the same expression aversion is also signified.

A. 576. 'The seed of a homer shall yield an ephah' (1s.v.10)=that there are so few remains of celestial things.

8468². A homer is predicated of good, because it is a measure of wheat and barley; in like manner an ephah.

8540. 'An ephah'=good . . . because by it and the homer dry things were measured which served as food; as wheat, barley, fine flour . . . III.

—³. That 'an ephah'=good is evident from the places where the meat-offering is treated of, for which the meal of fine flour was measured by the ephah. III. And the meat-offering=good.

—^e. 'A woman in the midst of the ephah' (Zech.v. 7)=evil in good.

10136². The ephah and the hin were measures, and by measures is signified the quantity of the thing treated of. By the ephah, which was a measure of fine flour, of wheat, and of barley, is signified the quantity of good; and by a hin, which was a measure of wine and of oil, the quantity of truth. 'The tenth part' of an ephah is what is meant here (Ex.xxix.40). Ex. 10262².

10262². The ephah was divided into ten parts . . . in order that it might signify what is receptive . . . for 'ten'=much, all, and full.

Ephod. Ephod.

A. 4111². 'An ephod and teraphim' (Hos.iii.4)=the truths Divine which they received by means of the answers; for when they interrogated God, they put on an ephod (1 Sam.xxiii.9).

7601⁵. As flax=the truth of the exterior Natural . . . that truth is what was represented by linen garments . . . therefore the priests bore linen ephods (1 Sam.xx. 18); and the child Samuel ministered before Jehovah girded with a linen ephod (1 Sam.ii.18); and David, too, when the ark was being carried along into his city was girded with a linen ephod (2 Sam.vi.14).

9476. The shoulders of the ephod=the truths of faith, that is, spiritual truths.

9477. 'In the ephod and the breastplate' (Ex.xxv.7)=the things which are for a covering for external and internal celestial things. 'The ephod'=that which covers celestial good; for Aaron as the chief priest represented the Lord as to the good of love; and his garments, especially the ephod, represented the truth of faith which is from the good of love: the good of love is the Celestial, and the truth of faith is its covering.

—^e. But it is to be known that by the ephod was signified the covering for external celestial things.

9823. For the ephod, upon which was the breastplate, represented the ultimates of the Spiritual Kingdom, and therefore the ultimates of Heaven.

9824. 'And the ephod' (Ex.xxviii.4)=Divine truth there in the external form in which interior things cease. . . The reason this is signified by 'the ephod,' is that by Aaron's garments of holiness were represented Divine truths in the Spiritual Kingdom in their order: and the ephod was the outermost of the three garments . . .

—². As the ephod represented that which is most external of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom, it was more holy than all the other garments, and in it was the breastplate . . .

—⁵. This, therefore, is the reason why the ephod, being a representative of what is ultimate in the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom, was accounted more holy than the other garments of the priesthood; therefore, the ephod was the principal priestly clothing, and was made of threads of gold in the midst of hyacinthine, crimson, scarlet double-dyed, and of fine linen woven together (Ex.xxxix.2); whereas the rest of the priests had ephods of linen . . . and therefore the ephod was taken for all the clothing of a priest, and he was said 'to bear the ephod,' by which was meant that he was a priest (1 Sam. ii.28; xiv.3). On this account, also, the breastplate was tied to the ephod, and answers were given by means of the urim and thummim there, because this clothing was a representative of what is ultimate in the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom, and Divine answers are presented in ultimates, because they pass through all interior things in succession, and are there dictated, because there they cease. III.

[A.9S24]^e. In the Original Language, 'ephod' comes from enclosing all the interior things, as is evident from the meaning of this word in Ex.xxix.5; Lev.viii.7.

9834. 'Thou shalt make the ephod with gold, hyacinthine and crimson, with scarlet double-dyed and fine linen woven together' (Ex.xxviii.6)=the external of the Spiritual Kingdom from (the good of charity and of faith). (For) 'the ephod'=the external of the Spiritual Kingdom.

9836. As the ephod represented the external of the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom, its shoulderpieces on which were placed the two onyx stones with the names of the sons of Israel, represented the perpetual preservation of good and truth; and the conjunction of the ephod upon the shoulders, and also before the breast and behind the back, union in every way.

9837. See GIRDLE at this ref.

9873³. The like to that which is signified by the stones in the breastplate, is also signified by the interweavings of the ephod. Enum. and Ex. The reason was, that the ephod signified Heaven in ultimates. . . But the goods and truths are there enumerated in a different order, because the ephod signified the spiritual Heaven, whereas the breastplate signified the whole Heaven from first to last.

9891. 'The edge of the breastplate which was on this side of the ephod inwards' (ver.26)=conjunction with the middle part of Heaven, and thus preservation; for by the ephod is signified Divine truth in the spiritual Heaven in an external form, thus Heaven in externals.

9893. 'Thou shalt put upon the two shoulders of the ephod beneath' (ver.27)=the preservation of good and truth in the lowest part of Heaven.

9896. 'They shall tie the breastplate by the rings thereof to the rings of the ephod' (ver.28)=the conjunction and preservation of all things of Heaven by means of the sphere of Divine good in the externals of the Spiritual Kingdom.

9899. 'That the breastplate be not withdrawn from the ephod' (id.)=all things of Heaven inseparable from the external things of the Spiritual Kingdom. . . (For)

'the ephod'=the whole external of the Spiritual Kingdom.

10006. 'With the ephod' (Ex.xxix.5)=the ultimate of the Spiritual Kingdom.

S. 44. By the garments of the priesthood . . . was represented Divine truth from Divine good: by the ephod was represented Divine truth in its ultimate, thus the Word in the sense of the letter. —³.

Ephraim. Ephraim.

A. 264. 'Ephraim' (Hos.ix.11)=those who are intelligent, that is, the intelligence of truth.

382³. 'Ephraim' (Hos.ix.16)=the intelligence of truth, that is, in faith, because he was the first-born of Joseph.

870³. 'Ephraim' (Hos.vii.11; xi.9)=one who is intelligent. 1861⁷.

1071^e. 'Ephraim' (Hos.ix.3)=him who reasons.

1186^e. 'Ephraim' (in Hosea)=the Intellectual, here, perverted. 2588¹.

1232². 'Ephraim' (Hos.xii.14)=perverted intelligence.

1296². 'Ephraim' (Is.ix.9)=one who is intelligent, who has fallen into perverted things, who calls falsities . . . truths.

1574. 'Mount Ephraim' (Jos. xvii.15)=intelligence.

1949⁴. 'Ephraim' (Hos.viii.9)=the Intellectual of the Spiritual Church. —. 5113⁷.

2468⁹. 'Ephraim' (Is.xi.13)=those who are in spiritual truth.

2607². The names (in the Word)=things; as . . . 'Ephraim,' what is intellectual.

2686⁶. 'Ephraim' (Zech.ix.10)=the understanding of the truth of the Church.

3325¹⁰. 'Ephraim' (Jer.xxxi.9)=spiritual truth, which is called 'the first-born' because it is treating of the Church to be planted . . . For Ephraim succeeded in the place of Reuben, and became the first-born (Gen.xlviii.5,20; 1 Chron.v.1), and this, because by Joseph, whose sons were Ephraim and Manasseh, was represented the Lord as to Divine spiritual love. But that Israel is essentially the first-born, that is, spiritual good, is evident from Ex.iv.22. 5354¹². E.434¹⁸.

3574². 'Ephraim' (Hos.xiii.1)=intelligence; here, man's own, that is, he=those who believe themselves and will to be wise not from the Lord.

3654². 'Ephraim shall not envy with Judah, and Judah shall not straiten Ephraim' (Is.xi.13). . . 'Ephraim'=the Intellectual of those (of the New Church), which shall no longer make resistance. E.433⁷.

3923³. 'From mount Ephraim' (Jer.lv.15)=from the affection (of truth).

3969⁸. There are two things which constitute the Spiritual Church,—the Intellectual and the Voluntary; the Intellectual is represented by Ephraim, and the Voluntary by Manasseh. Hence it is evident why the two sons of Joseph were adopted by . . . Israel and acknowledged as his own sons. Ephraim is frequently mentioned in the Word . . . and therein by him is signified the Intellectual of truth and good which is of the Spiritual Church. III.

4592⁴. There are six names which frequently occur in the propheticals where the Church is treated of, namely, 'Judah,' 'Joseph,' 'Benjamin,' 'Ephraim,' 'Israel,' and 'Jacob' . . . The Intellectual of the Church is 'Ephraim.' —¹⁰.

5348. 'To Joseph were born two sons' (Gen.xli.50)=good and truth from the influx of the Celestial of the Spiritual into the Natural. . . 'Sons,' here, Manasseh and Ephraim=good and truth; for Manasseh=the Voluntary of the new Natural; and Ephraim its Intellectual; or, what is the same, Manasseh=the good of the new Natural . . . and Ephraim, its truth.

5351⁶. Ephraim=the new Intellectual in the Natural, or spiritual truth there.

5354. 'And the name of the second he called Ephraim' (ver.52)=the new Intellectual in the Natural, and its quality. . . What is the new Intellectual and what is the new Voluntary which are signified by Ephraim and Manasseh. Ex. and III.

—⁶. In all these places, by 'Ephraim' is meant the Intellectual of the Church; by 'Israel,' its Spiritual; and by 'Judah,' the Celestial of the same. And as the Intellectual of the Church is signified by 'Ephraim,' it is often said of Ephraim that he goes into Egypt and Assyria . . . —⁸.

—¹⁰. In these places, by 'Ephraim' is signified the Intellectual of the Church. The Intellectual of the Church is the understanding with the men of the Church concerning truths and goods, that is, concerning the doctrinal things of faith and charity; thus the notion, concept, or idea concerning them . . .

—¹¹. 'They shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm; Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh' (Is.ix.20,21)=that the will of the man of the Church will be against his understanding, and his understanding against his will. E.617²⁹.

—¹³. The reason why . . . Israel in blessing Ephraim gave him the preference to Manasseh . . . was, that the truth of faith . . . is apparently in the first place while a man is being regenerated . . . When yet good is actually in the first place, and is manifestly so when the man is regenerated.

5355. Hence 'Ephraim,' in the Original Language, was named from fructification, the quality of which is contained in these words.

6024⁵. 'Manasseh and Ephraim' (Gen.xlvi.20)=the new Voluntary and its Intellectual.

6025^e. Manasseh=the Voluntary; and Ephraim, the Intellectual which are of the Church, in the Natural.

6216. In this chapter, (Gen.xlviii.) it treats of the Intellectual of the Church, which is from truth; and of its Voluntary, which is from good. The Intellectual of the Church is 'Ephraim;' and the Voluntary of the Church is 'Manasseh.'

6217. That in the Church the truth of faith, which is of the Intellectual, is apparently in the first place; and the good of charity, which is of the Voluntary, is apparently in the second, is signified by Israel putting his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, and his left upon the head of Manasseh.

6222. 'He took his two sons with him, Manasseh and Ephraim' (ver.1)=the Voluntary of the Church and the Intellectual of the Church born from the internal. (6275.) (For) 'Manasseh'=the new Voluntary in the Natural, and its quality; and 'Ephraim,' the new Intellectual in the Natural, and its quality. . . What the Intellectual of the Church is, and what the Voluntary. Ex. The Intellectual of the Church is to perceive from the Word what the truth of faith is, and what the good of charity . . .

—³. See ENLIGHTEN.

6265. 'Joseph brought them from his thighs' (ver.12)=the good of the Voluntary and the truth of the Intellectual [taken away] from the affection of love on the part of spiritual good. . . (For) Manasseh and Ephraim, who, here, are those whom Joseph took away, =the good of the Voluntary and the truth of the Intellectual.

6269. 'Israel put forth his right hand, and placed it upon the head of Ephraim' (ver.14)=that he considered truth to be in the first place. . . For the spiritual man, who is represented by Israel, considers no otherwise before he has been regenerated . . .

6275. That good and truth in the Natural, which are represented by Manasseh and Ephraim, are the very internal there . . .

6287. 'And Joseph saw that his father placed his right hand upon the head of Ephraim' (ver.17)=the apprehension that he considered truth to be in the first place. . . (For) 'Ephraim'=the truth which is of the Intellectual in the Natural.

6290. 'To remove it from upon the head of Ephraim upon the head of Manasseh' (id.)=to turn him away from the error.

6296. 'His younger brother shall be greater than he' (ver.19)=that good from truth, thus the spiritual man, will acquire more increase. (For) Ephraim, who, here, is 'the younger brother'=the truth of the Intellectual in the Natural, which (truth) is born from the internal. Here, however, Ephraim=good from truth . . . The reason Ephraim, here,=good from truth, is that he represents the man of the Spiritual Church, that is to say, the man of the external Spiritual Church; as Manasseh represents the man of the external Celestial Church. Good from truth constitutes this man, namely, the man of the Spiritual Church. The internal of this Church is that which is represented by Israel; and the external of it by Ephraim. The man of the Spiritual Church differs in this from the man of the Celestial Church, that the good of the former is implanted in the Intellectual, but the good of the latter in the Voluntary . . . Therefore Ephraim represents the spiritual man; and Manasseh, the celestial man.

[A.] 6299. 'In thee shall Israel bless, saying, God set thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh' (ver.20)=that their Spiritual may be in the truth of the Intellectual and in the good of the Voluntary. . . (For) the spiritual good which is represented by Israel, is the Spiritual of the internal Church; whereas the truth and good which are represented by Ephraim and Manasseh are of the external Church . . .

6377⁴. 'Ephraim shall return into Egypt'=that the Intellectual will consult scientifics concerning the arcana of faith.

6583. 'Joseph saw for Ephraim sons of the thirds' (Gen.1.23)=the establishment of the Church as to the Intellectual and its derivatives.

10283⁶. 'Manasseh' (Is.ix.21)=evil of the will; 'Ephraim,' falsity of the understanding.

S. 79². The understanding of the Word, both true and false, is described by 'Ephraim' in the Prophets, especially in Hosea; for by 'Ephraim' in the Word is signified the understanding of the Word in the Church; and as the understanding of the Word makes the Church, Ephraim is called 'My precious son,' and 'a child of delights' (Jer.xxxi.20); 'My first-born' (ver.9); 'the strength of the head of Jehovah' (Ps.lx.7; cviii.8); 'a mighty one' (Zech.x.7); 'filled with the bow' (Zech.ix.13); and the sons 'of Ephraim' are called 'armed,' and 'shooters of the bow' (Ps.lxxiii.9). . . Therefore, also, Ephraim was transferred to the right hand of Israel, and was blessed; and was also accepted in place of Reuben. And therefore Ephraim together with his brother Manasseh—under the name of Joseph their father—was exalted above all by Moses in the blessing of the Sons of Israel (Deut.xxxiii.13-17).

—³. But the quality of the Church when the understanding of the Word has been destroyed, is also described by 'Ephraim' in the Prophets, especially in Hosea. III.

—⁶. 'Israel' (Hos.v.3; vi.10)=the Church itself; and 'Ephraim,' the understanding of the Word from and according to which is the Church. R.134⁵. 298³.

360². (In the sealing of the twelve tribes, Joseph takes the place of Ephraim.)

E. 236⁶. 'Ephraim' (Hos.xii.8,10)=the Intellectual of those who are of the Church which is enlightened while the Word is being read.

275¹⁹. 'Ephraim' (Hos.xi.9)=the Church as to the understanding of truth.

282⁷. 'Ephraim' (Hos.ix.11)=the enlightened understanding of those who are of the Church.

283¹⁶. 'Ephraim' (Hos.iv.17)=the intellectual such as there is with those within the Church who are enlightened while they are reading the Word. . . 'Ephraim being joined together with idols'=the Intellectual perverted seizing upon falsities. 376³⁸.

316²⁹. 'The ten thousands of Ephraim, and the thousands of Manasseh' (Deut.xxxiii.17)=the abundance of truth and thence of wisdom; and the abundance of good and thence of love.

336⁴. Joseph=the Lord . . . as to His Spiritual Kingdom; and his two sons Ephraim and Manasseh,=the two things of that Kingdom, namely intellectual truth and voluntary good . . .

355⁵. 'Ephraim' (Zech.ix.10)=the Church as to the understanding of truth. 357¹¹. 373³⁸. 376²². 601⁷. 962³.

376³¹. See DRUNK.

386². That all the will of good and understanding of truth will perish, is meant by 'Manasseh shall devour Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasseh.'

391²⁷. 'Ephraim'=the Intellectual of the Church; here, the Intellectual perverted. 419¹⁸. —¹⁹.

433⁵. 'Joseph' and 'Ephraim' (Ezek.xxxvii.16). . . =those who are below the Celestial and Spiritual Kingdoms, because they are neither celestial nor spiritual, but natural, and still are in the good of life according to their religiosity.

—⁸. 'I will fill My bow Ephraim'=that the Church is to be established with those who . . . are in truths of doctrine thence.

—⁹. 'They shall be as the mighty Ephraim,' 'Ephraim'=those who are in the truths of doctrine (from love to the Lord).

434⁹. 'Ephraim' has a like signification to Reuben, namely, the understanding of truth, and truth in light. (Hence it is) said that Ephraim and Manasseh shall be sons of Israel as are Reuben and Simeon (Gen. xlviii.5) . . .

—⁵. As Divine power exists in truth from good in the Natural, it is said, 'Ephraim is the strength of Mine head.'

—⁶. 'Before Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh stir up Thy strength' (Ps.lxxx.2). By 'Ephraim' are meant those who are in natural truth: natural truth is such as is the truth of the Word in the sense of the letter. By 'Manasseh' are meant those who are in natural good, which is the delight of doing what is good and of learning what is true . . . 449⁸.

—^e. 'Ephraim'=the truth of the Church, that is, the truth of doctrine, which is the same as the truth of the understanding.

448⁸. As the truths of that Church have power from good, it is said that they shall be 'like the mighty Ephraim;' for 'Ephraim'=truth from good in the natural man, which truth has power.

—⁹. 'Joseph' and 'Ephraim' (Ezek. xxxvii. 16) = the Spiritual Church, which is in the good of charity and the truths of faith.

—¹⁰. See JOSEPH.

—¹². See BENJAMIN.

540¹. 'Ephraim is a cake not turned' (Hos. vii. 8). Ex. 'Ephraim' = the understanding of truth.

559⁸. By the son of Remaliah, the king of Israel, who is also called 'Ephraim' (Is. vii. 4), is signified the perverted Intellectual. The Intellectual which is signified by Ephraim the king of Israel, is the Intellectual as to the Word. 706¹⁵.

624¹¹. 'Ephraim' = the understanding of the Word. —¹². SII²⁸. 846².

654⁵⁵. 'Ephraim' = the Intellectual of the Church and its truth of doctrine in the Natural. . . Therefore, 'Ephraim is like a silly dove, without heart' (Hos. vii. 11) = that now there is no Intellectual, because no truth, nor affection of truth and good.

—⁵⁶. 'Ephraim' (in Hos. ix.) = the understanding of the Word destroyed.

—⁵⁸. 'Ephraim' (feedeth on wind . . .) = the Church in which the understanding of truth is destroyed.

710¹. 'Ephraim' = the Church as to the understanding of truth and good. That there will no longer be any understanding of Divine truth in the Church, is signified by 'Ephraim, as a bird shall fly away his glory' (Is. ix. 11).

—⁵. 'Ephraim' = the understanding of the truth of the Church. —¹⁸. 799¹⁶. 866⁶. 1100²⁰. 1145⁴.

Ephrath. Ephrata.

See BETHLEHEM.

A. 4585. 'There was yet a tract of land to come to Ephrath' (Gen. xxxv. 16) = that now there was the Spiritual of the Celestial . . . 'Ephrath' = the Spiritual of the Celestial in the former state.

4593. 'Rachel died, and was buried in the way of Ephrath' (ver. 19) = the end of the former affection of interior truth. . . 'Ephrath' = the Spiritual of the Celestial in the former state. Hence it is evident that (these words) = the end of the state of the former affection of interior truth, and the resuscitation of a new state, which is 'Bethlehem.' In the genuine sense, by (these words) is signified the Hereditary, that by means of temptations it has been expelled for ever . . .

4594³. For from the most ancient time 'Ephrath' signified the Spiritual of the Celestial; hence, afterwards, so did 'Bethlehem.' (Hence it is said) 'Lo, we heard of Him at Ephrata' (Ps. cxxxii. 6).

6245. 'To come to Ephrath' (Gen. xlviii. 7) = the Spiritual of the Celestial in the former state.

6246. 'And I buried her in the way of Ephrath' (id.) = the rejection of that state.

9406⁴. 'To find Him in Ephrata' = to find Him in the spiritual sense of the Word.

9485. 'Ephrata' is Bethlehem where the Lord was born. 9594⁴.

E. 434¹⁶. 'Ephrath Bethlehem' (Gen. xxxv. 19) = the Spiritual Church, which is in truths from good, that is, in faith from charity.

684²⁷. 'We have heard of Him in Ephrata' = in the spiritual sense of the Word, and also in the natural sense; for 'Ephrata' and 'Bethlehem' = the Spiritual Natural.

Ephron. Ephron.

A. 2901. 'Ephron and the Sons of Heth' (Gen. xxiii.) = those with whom the good and truth of the Church is received.

2933. 'Ephron' = those with whom the good and truth of faith could be received. 2940. 2951. 2963. 6454. 6550. 6551.

2941. Ephron is here called 'the Hittite' to represent the Spiritual Church as head and prince.

3257. 'The field of Ephron the son of Zohar the Hittite which is upon the faces of Mamre' (Gen. xxv. 9) = resurrection as to good; and it also = the spiritual who receive truth and good from the Lord's Divine Human, and are saved.

T. 701⁴. There was read an Epistle which was written by Paul . . . and which had not been published . . .

D. 1166. To-day I wrote a letter about money matters . . . The consequence was, that I fell into a state as it were corporeal, so that the Spirits could not speak to me . . .

2704. (I dreamed) that some one read a letter . . .

4412². In his Epistles, Paul has not mentioned a syllable of what the Lord taught . . .

E. 815². I shall here quote passages in which faith and believing are mentioned, but only from the Evangelists, and not from the Epistles of the Apostles . . . (for) the writings of the Apostles do not contain a spiritual sense, still, they are useful books for the Church.

Docu. 224. In respect to the Writings of the Apostles and of Paul, I have not quoted them in the Arcana Cœlestia, because they are doctrinal writings, and consequently are not written in the style of the Word . . . They were written thus by the Apostles that the new Christian Church might be commenced through them; wherefore matters of doctrine could not be written in the style of the Word, but they had to be expressed in such a manner as to be understood more clearly and intimately. The Writings of the Apostles, nevertheless, are good books of the Church, insisting upon the doctrine of charity and its faith as strongly as the Lord Himself has done in the Gospels and the Book of Revelation; as may be seen and found evident by everyone who in reading them directs his attention to these points.

Equilibrium. Aequilibrium.

Equilibration. Aequilibratio.

A. 592². Such is the equilibrium of all things in the other life, that evil returns to him who does it . . . 696. 967. 1857².

689. Hence there is an equilibrium of each and all as to things celestial, spiritual, and natural, so that no one can think, feel, and act except from many, yet each one supposes that he does so in the most perfect freedom from himself. In like manner there is nothing in existence which is not equilibrated by its opposite; and the opposites by the intermediates; so that everyone by himself, and a number together, live in the most perfect equilibrium. Therefore no evil can happen to anyone which is not at once equilibrated; and when there is a preponderance of evil, the evil, or he who is evil, is chastised by the law of equilibrium, as of himself . . . In such a form, and therefore in equilibrium, consists heavenly order . . .

2122^e. When evil thus begins to prevail, and the equilibrium to hang to the side of evil, it is manifestly perceived from that fact that the last time is at hand, and that the equilibrium will soon be restored by the rejection of those who are within the Church, and the reception of others who are outside.

2128. When the Spirits around me . . . did not so far suffer themselves to be ruled by the law of equilibrium, as not insolently to harass other Societies (they were dispersed). Des.

3628². Unless to these forces there corresponded internal forces, which reacted against these external ones, and thus held together and equilibrated the intermediate forms, they would not subsist for a single moment . . .

3643. Between (those in the Heavens and those in the Hells) there is in general an equilibrium . . .

4225^e. Everyone (in Heaven) is a centre of all the influxes, and therefore is in the most perfect equilibrium, and this according to the stupendous form of Heaven . . .

5278². The things which are opposite (in the memory) . . . hang downwards, and present themselves below, and equilibrate those things which are above . . .

5798⁷. All the Societies of Heaven have Societies opposite to them in Hell; thence is equilibrium.

5982. In order that man may be in freedom, the Lord places him in equilibrium between evils and goods, and between falsities and truths, by means of evil Spirits on the one side, and Angels on the other . . . This freedom is from the equilibrium in which he is kept.

6308. Man does not perceive that the influx is of such a nature, because his thought is kept in freedom by means of an equilibration between these two influxes . . . The evil could not know even if they did attend to it, because with them there is not an equilibrium between evil and good.

6477. By means of these endeavours opposite to each other, I have been constantly kept in equilibrium. Such endeavours, and consequent equilibrium exist with everyone, whence they have freedom to turn themselves whither they please; but the equilibrium is varied according to the evil or good which reigns with the man.

6657. There are particular spheres around every man; for there are with him Spirits from Hell and Angels from Heaven; hence man is in equilibrium, and has the freedom of thinking and willing evil, and that of thinking and willing good.

6864^e. In order that spiritual equilibrium may come forth, and everything be in a free state, evils are in the opposite against goods, and falsities against truths.

7007³. The Divine Providence . . . especially (provides) that all things may be in order in Heaven, and also in Hell, thus that Heaven may constantly relate to one man, and that Hell may be in the opposite, whence comes equilibrium . . .

8209². Between these endeavours diametrically opposite to each other, an equilibrium is kept, in order that man may be in freedom, and thus in choice . . . While a man is being reformed, he is kept in equilibrium, that is, in freedom, between willing good and willing evil . . .

H. 293. Wherefore, man is kept in his own life by means of evil Spirits, and is withheld from it by means of good Spirits; by means of them both he is also in equilibrium, and as he is in equilibrium, he is in his freedom . . .

536. As the relation of Heaven to Hell and of Hell to Heaven is like that between two opposites which act against each other, and from the action and reaction of which there results an equilibrium in which all things subsist, therefore in order that each and all things may be kept in equilibrium, it is necessary that He who rules the one should also rule the other; for unless the same Lord restrained the assaults of the Hells, and repressed the insanities there, the equilibrium would perish, and with the equilibrium the whole.

537. Concerning equilibrium . . . it is known that when two things act against each other, and when the one reacts and resists as much as the other acts and impels, neither of them has any force . . . and then both may be acted upon at pleasure by a third . . . Such is the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell. But it is not an equilibrium such as exists between two who fight in the body, of whom the force of the one is equivalent to that of the other, but it is spiritual equilibrium, namely, of falsity against truth and of evil against good. From Hell there continually breathes forth falsity from evil, and from Heaven truth from good. It is this spiritual equilibrium which causes man to be in freedom to think and to will . . . and therefore when he is in this equilibrium, he is in freedom either to admit . . . evil and the falsity thence from Hell, or to admit . . . good and the truth thence from Heaven. Every man is kept in this equilibrium by the Lord, because He rules both Heaven and Hell.

538. From Heaven has been perceived a sphere of truth from good, by means of which the fury of the endeavour ascending from Hell was bridled; whence the equilibrium.

540. This, therefore, is the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell. They who are in the World of Spirits are in this equilibrium; for the World of Spirits is midway between Heaven and Hell; and thence also all men in the world are kept in a like equilibrium; for men in the world are ruled by the Lord by means of Spirits who are in the World of Spirits . . . Such an equilibrium could not exist, unless the Lord ruled both Heaven and Hell, and moderated on both sides; otherwise falsities from evil would superabound, and would affect the simple good who are in the ultimates of Heaven . . . and thus the equilibrium would perish, and with the equilibrium freedom with men.

541. Every Society in Heaven has a Society opposite to it in Hell, and this on account of the equilibrium . . . Therefore, the Lord constantly provides that every Society of Heaven may have its opposite in a Society of Hell, and that between them there is equilibrium.

546². Unless man were between both, he would not have any thought, nor any will, still less any freedom and any choice; for man has all these things by virtue of the equilibrium between good and evil.

589. On the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell. Gen.art.

— . In order that anything may come forth, there must be an equilibrium of all things. Without equilibrium there is not action and reaction; for equilibrium exists between two forces, of which the one acts and the other reacts; and the state of rest which is the result of a like action and reaction is called equilibrium. In the natural world, there is an equilibrium in each and all things; in general, in the atmospheres themselves, in which the lower things react and resist in proportion as the higher things act and press down. In the natural world there is also an equilibrium between heat and cold, between light and shade, and between what is dry and what is moist; the middle temperature being their equilibrium. There is also an equilibrium in all the subjects of the three kingdoms of nature . . . for without an equilibrium in them nothing comes forth and subsists; everywhere there is as it were an endeavour acting on the one side and reacting on the other. All manifestation—existentia—, that is, every effect, takes place in equilibrium, but takes place by this, that the one force acts and the other suffers itself to be acted upon . . . In the Spiritual World, that which acts and that which reacts is called life and will; life, there, is living force, and will is living endeavour, and the equilibrium itself is called freedom. Spiritual equilibrium, therefore, or freedom, comes forth and subsists between good acting on the one side and evil reacting on the other; or between evil acting on the one side and good reacting on the other. The equilibrium between good acting and evil reacting exists with the good; and the equilibrium between evil acting and good reacting exists with the evil. The reason spiritual equilibrium exists between good and evil, is that everything of man's life has relation to good and to evil; and the will is the receptacle. There is also an equilibrium between truth and falsity, but this depends upon the equilibrium between good and evil. The equilibrium between truth and falsity is like that between light and shade, which operate upon the subjects of the vegetable kingdom in proportion as there are heat and cold in the light and shade.

590. There is a perpetual equilibrium between Heaven and Hell; from Hell there continually breathes forth and ascends the endeavour to do evil, and from Heaven there continually breathes forth and descends the endeavour to do good. In this equilibrium is the World of Spirits . . . The reason the World of Spirits is in this equilibrium, is that after death every man first enters the World of Spirits, and is there kept in a like state to that in which he was in the world, which could not be done unless there were the most perfect equilibrium there . . . Spiritual equilibrium is the freedom that exists with man and Spirit.

[H.] 591². Hence it may be evident that the equilibrium in which are kept the Angels in the Heavens and the Spirits in the Hells, is not like the equilibrium in the World of Spirits. The equilibrium of the Angels in the Heavens is in proportion to the degree in which they have willed to be in good, or in which they have lived in good, in the world, thus, also, to the degree in which they have been averse to evil; and the equilibrium of the Spirits in Hell is in proportion to the degree in which they have willed to be in evil, or in which they have lived in evil, in the world, thus, also, to the degree in which they have been against good.

592. Unless the Lord ruled both the Heavens and the Hells, there would not be any equilibrium; and if there were no equilibrium, there would not be Heaven and Hell; for each and all things in the universe endure by virtue of equilibrium. . . Grant a preponderance on the one side, and no resistance on the other, and would not both perish?

593. The equilibrium between the Heavens and the Hells is diminished and increased according to the number of those who enter Heaven and who enter Hell. . .

594. How all things are ordered in the Heavens and in the Hells, so that all and each there may be in their own equilibrium. . . Beneath every Society of Heaven there is a Society of Hell which corresponds to it by opposition, from which opposite correspondence the equilibrium results. It is therefore continually provided by the Lord that no infernal Society which is beneath a heavenly Society shall prevail; and in the proportion that it does begin to prevail, it is repressed by various means, and is reduced to a just ratio of equilibrium. (These means enum.) . . . (Thus) the Lord alone provides that everywhere there is an equilibrium between good and evil, thus between Heaven and Hell; for upon such an equilibrium there is founded the salvation of all in the Heavens, and of all on earth.

597. That man is in freedom by means of the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell. Gen.art.

599. By means of the Spirits from Hell, man is in his own evil, and by means of the Angels from Heaven, he is in good from the Lord; thus he is in spiritual equilibrium, that is, in freedom.

600. As this is the case, the World of Spirits is intermediate between Heaven and Hell, and there is the equilibrium itself.

J. 33. The primary reason why the Last Judgment takes place at the end of the Church, is that there then begins to perish the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell, and with the equilibrium the very freedom of man. . . For without freedom no man can be reformed, and all the freedom of man is from the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell.

34. That the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell begins to perish at the end of the Church, may be evident from the fact, that Heaven and Hell are from the human race. . . and that when few men come into Heaven, and many into Hell, the evil on the one side increases over the good on the other. . . Therefore, all are then judged by the Lord; the evil are separated from the good; all things are reduced into order; and a new Heaven is established, with a new Church on earth, and thus the equilibrium is restored.

W. 68^e. The equilibrium of all things is from simultaneous action and reaction; and everything must be in equilibrium.

263². In the greatest and least things of the universe, both living and dead, there is action and reaction; hence is the equilibrium of all things: this is lost when action overcomes reaction, and vice versa. It is the same with the natural mind and the spiritual mind. . .

P. 21. The Lord's Divine Providence causes evil together with falsity to be of service for equilibrium, etc. Gen.art.

23. With others, the conjunction of good and truth is provided by the Lord by means of the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell; for from Hell there continually exhales evil together with falsity, and from Heaven there continually exhales good together with truth: every man is kept in this equilibrium so long as he lives in the world; and by means of it, he is kept in the freedom of thinking, willing, speaking, and acting, in which he can be reformed.

215⁸. From this opposition there comes forth what is intermediate, in which is man, and is in it as it were in equilibrium, so that he can turn either to Hell or to Heaven.

M. 437. That between the two spheres (of scortatory love and of marriage love) there is an equilibrium, and that man is in it. Gen.art.

444². As good and evil are opposites, there exists an intermediate, and therein an equilibrium, in which evil acts against good; but as it does not prevail, it comes to a stand in an endeavour. Every man is educated in this equilibrium; and as it is an equilibrium between good and evil, or, what is the same, between Heaven and Hell, it is a spiritual equilibrium, which, with those who are in it, produces freedom. By virtue of this equilibrium, the Lord draws all to himself. . .

455. That the sphere of the lust of fornicating, such as it is in the beginning, is a mediate sphere between the sphere of scortatory love and the sphere of marriage love, and makes an equilibrium. Gen.art.

T. 69^e. So long as he lives in the world, every man walks in the midst between Heaven and Hell, and thence is in equilibrium. . . 383, Ex. 455².

475. So long as man lives in the world, he is kept in the middle between Heaven and Hell, and there he is kept in spiritual equilibrium, which is free-will. Gen. art. 497².

478. This spiritual equilibrium, which is free-will, may be illustrated by natural equilibriums. Examps.

496⁴. In such an equilibrium and consequent freedom are all things which are within man. . . If its equilibrium were to suffer, the member would sicken. . . Equilibrium and freedom, here, are one. There is no substance in the created universe which does not tend to an equilibrium, in order that it may be in freedom. D.3037^e. 3168.

497^o. So long as man lives in the world, as to his spirit he is in equilibrium between Heaven and the world . . .

D. 193. (How the spiritual equilibrium—libratio—of man is preserved.)

1175. On the reduction into equilibrium of external things by internal ones.

1176. See ATMOSPHERE. 2089.

1741. Until such phantasies are moderated so as to constitute an equilibrium . . .

1749. When there is an equilibrium of them between them and others, they are of use . . .

2071. See ENDEAVOUR.

2323^e. The sphere of their activity does not extend itself far . . . for such is the equilibrium, so to speak, that it is at once presented even if a very great disturbance appears. This may be sufficiently evident from the human race, in that a very great disturbance among some does not extend itself widely ; yet all are ruled by means of the Spirits of the World of Spirits.

2336^e. See DISEASE.

2361^o. They who are in a Society may be restrained from extending themselves more widely, and may thus be kept in a kind of equilibrium, that is, in an equality of thinking, speaking, and acting . . .

2443. On the equilibrium of each and all things in the Heavens. . . Such is the equilibrium of each and all things as to celestial, spiritual, and natural things in the Heavens, that no one can think, feel, or act, except from a number, and each one of the number from a number [of others], and so on ; and there never exists anything to which something from its own opposite does not answer ; and the opposites by intermediates, in like manner from a number . . . So that no one can think, will, feel, act, except in equilibrium. Wherefore, when I was in this idea, the Spirits said that according to this they are nothing. Wherefore, no evil can happen to anyone without being at once equilibrated by the Lord, thus by the good ; and when there is a preponderance of evil, the evil is punished.

2444. As there is such an equilibrium, that is, such a disposition, according to order, the order which is formed by the Lord and preserved to eternity consists in such a disposition to equilibrium in general and in particular.

2466. Such is the equilibrium of all things in the universal Heaven, that the one is moved by the other, thinks from the other, as it were in a chain . . . In this way is the universe ruled by the Lord, and, in fact, without trouble. 3168^e.

2891. Such is the equilibrium, that when a man who is a servant of the Lord seems to himself to resist [injuries] from anger, there are such Spirits who operate it into him . . .

3168. That there comes forth an equilibrium in all things of the World of Spirits and of Heaven. It was shown by my steps . . . in equilibrium, a very small moving force is efficient, so that those things are moved which appear to be in the highest degree strong and resistant . . . Wherefore, the equilibriums are preserved. This is the reason why, by means of sufferings, Souls must put off the things which are not in the equilibriums.

3528. (The equilibrium in the World of Spirits is now on the point of perishing, and therefore the last times approach.)

3641^e. To these Societies there are also opposites ; for the equilibrium of all things exists by means of opposites.

3726^e. Wherefore, also, such an equilibrium is maintained in the World of Spirits by the Lord, and such an order ; and to every evil there is as it were its own response, that is, hindrance ; and if evil should preponderate . . . the World of Spirits is at once so disposed, that there is equilibration and response.

3873. Such is the equilibrium, that evil returns upon him who intends and does evil . . .

3932. When wickedness comes to its height, they precipitate themselves into punishments. It is tolerated up to that point ; but then the equilibrium perishes, and thus they precipitate themselves, and are reduced to equilibrium. If, however, they do not suffer themselves to be reduced to equilibrium by means of punishments, they are cast towards Hell, and are there devastated.

4285. Some of the very worst Spirits were with me, with pride . . . of whom the Angels said, through Spirits, that they could not resist, that is, actuate me to do otherwise : and as such is the equilibrium, and everyone is kept in equilibrium . . . The World of Spirits . . . becomes worse and worse, so that the equilibrium is as it were on their side . . .

4484^e. In the other life . . . all the consociations are in opposites ; hence the equilibrium.

4891^o. They were elevated in order that they might make an equilibrium against those who are in the Hells . . .

5003^e. Where forces are wanting, they are equilibrated ; Spirits are led thither by the Lord's Providence . . .

5554^e. Hence is the equilibrium (in all things of nature and of man) ; the efficient causes from the ends, and the effects from the causes.

5895. Beyond the most wicked of the Babylonish nation in the west, there are Hells not so atrocious, and the wickedness is gradually diminished up to the Mohammedans and gentiles ; and this for the reason that there may be equilibrium.

6006. Without freedom there is no reformation . . . (for then) . . . a man has not extension of thought and intelligence ; for he then believes that to be true in which he is, and does not see the opposite things : in a word, he is not in spiritual equilibrium. He who is in it can be led by the Lord to see clearly from both sides, and thus to see all things rationally, and thus spiritually.

4682. On the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell.

E. 413^o. When evils on earth and at the same time in the Spiritual World are so augmented that the dominion hangs on their side, and thereby the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell is perishing, in which case, the Heavens . . . begin to labour, the Lord directs His power from the Sun, that is, His love, to protect the Angels, and restore the state which labours . . .

[E.] 573^s. Everywhere in the Spiritual World there is an equilibrium between Heaven and Hell; and, where there is an equilibrium, two forces continually act against each other . . .

754². Between the hatreds of the Hells, and the loves of the Heavens, there is an equilibrium, in which are kept men in the world . . .

806³. Before the Lord's Advent, the Hells were not in order, wherefore neither was there equilibrium between Heaven and Hell, but Hell on its side prevailed over Heaven . . . In order, therefore, that the destroyed equilibrium might be restored, it pleased the Lord to come into the world . . .

1043². The reason there are two dominions in the Hells . . . is that opposite must correspond exactly to opposite, in order that there may be equilibrium; for the coming forth and subsistence of all things in both the natural and the Spiritual world depends upon the just equilibrium between two agents which are opposites . . .

—³. Equilibriums derive their cause from the fact, that the same Divine goods and Divine truths which the Angels in the Heavens receive from the Lord, are turned into evils and falsities by the Spirits in the Hells . . .

1133⁶. By virtue of this opposition (between the three Heavens and the three Hells), the affections are kept in an equilibrium like that of the scales of a balance.

1146⁵. As these two forces, when quiescent, make an equilibrium, it follows that nothing can act and be moved unless it is in equilibrium . . . and that when it is acted upon it is out of equilibrium; also that everything acted upon and moved seeks to return to equilibrium.

Can. Redemp. ii. 7. In the middle of the interstice there is equilibrium between good and evil.

10. This equilibrium is elevated towards Heaven as evil prevails against good; and is depressed towards Hell as good prevails against evil . . .

11. This equilibrium is like a footstool for the Angels of Heaven, in which their good ceases, and upon which it subsists.

12. According to the degree in which this equilibrium is elevated, the happiness of the Angels . . . is diminished.

v. 1. Every man is in the equilibrium which exists between Heaven and Hell . . .

2. After death, every man first comes into this equilibrium . . .

4. At the end of the Church . . . this equilibrium is strained, and is filled with the evil who gather from the world.

5. Thence this equilibrium is elevated more and more towards Heaven, and the Angels are infested according to its approach.

6. All those who are in this elevated equilibrium are interiorly infernal and exteriorly moral.

Erect. *Erigere.Erection. *Erectio.Erectly. Erecte.

A. 153. In the Word, 'to build' is predicated of evils; 'to erect,' of falsities; and 'to renovate,' of both. II.

248. Therefore, when man looks to heavenly things, it is said that he goes erect . . . as in Leviticus: 'I have made you go erectly' (xxvi. 13).

3641. All in both Heaven and Hell appear erect . . .

3901⁴. 'Upon its feet erect like a man' (Dan. vii. 4). Ex.

7068. They who are in truth . . . stand erect, as if they were hard . . .

8371. (In Jupiter) they do not walk erect.

8391. Of himself, man is continually falling, but he is continually erected by the Lord; of himself, he falls when he thinks to will evil, and he is erected by the Lord when he resists evil, and thence does not do it. Such is the state with all who are in good; whereas they who are in evil are continually falling; and they, too, are continually being elevated by the Lord; that is to say, lest they should fall into the most grievous Hell of all . . .

8764⁴. 'Their wings were erect of the one to the other' (Ezek. iii. 13) represented the consociation of all things in the Divine. E. 283¹³.

9164. Falsities . . . do not stand erect to Heaven like the truths of good . . .

9180^e. He who regards charity and faith in the first place, thus the Lord and the neighbour, is an erect man; and in the other life is also presented to view erect, with his head in Heaven.

T. 69. Therefore, also, man stands erect upon his feet . . .

D. 567. Hence it may be evident that the erection of the body is not natural, but artificial . . .

1090. 'Noah awoke from his wine'= . . . that he came out of the errors.

1102^e. When a man feels that he has compassion . . . especially for one who is in error as to the doctrine of faith, he may know that he 'dwells in the tents of Shem,' that is, that he possesses internal things through which the Lord is operating.

1381. These are called wandering Souls or Spirits . . .

2679. 'She went and wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba' (Gen. xxi. 14)=an erratic state in the doctrinal things of faith. . . In this verse is described the quality of the state at first with those who are being reformed; to wit, that they are carried away into various errors . . . The things, however, which enter at that time, although for the most part erroneous, are still such things as serve to promote growth . . .

3708⁵. Of those who are in ignorance of good, it is predicated that 'they wandered in the wilderness' (Ps. cvii. 4).

Erudition. See LEARNING—eruditio.

Esau. Esau.

A. 367. The brotherhood (of charity and faith) was represented by Esau and Jacob; wherefore there was the dispute about the primogeniture and the dominion thence.

—². That Esau, that is, the charity represented by Esau, should at last have the dominion, is evident from the prophetic prediction made by Isaac: 'Upon thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother, and it shall be, when thou hast the dominion, that thou shalt drive his yoke from off thy neck' (Gen.xxvii.40). Or, what is the same, the Church of the gentiles, that is, the new Church, is signified by 'Esau;' and the Jewish Church, by 'Jacob;'; and therefore it is so frequently said, that they should acknowledge the gentiles as brethren.

3232. Thirdly, it treats (in Gen.xxv.) of the conception and birth of the Divine Natural, as to good, which is 'Esau;' and as to truth, which is 'Jacob.' 3279^e. 3289. 3293.

3279^e. That the Divine Natural was born from the Divine Rational, is signified by Esau and Jacob being born from Isaac.

3296. By 'Esau' is represented good; by 'Jacob,' truth. That a collision or combat came forth concerning the priority and dominion, is described in the internal sense by Jacob's taking away the primogeniture from Esau, and also the blessing; yet that this was done only for a time, is evident from Isaac's prophecy about Esau.

3299. 'Twins were in her womb'=that both were conceived together. . . namely, the good represented by 'Esau,' and the truth represented by 'Jacob.' How it is that the good and truth of the Natural are conceived together. Ex.

3302. 'They called his name Esau' (Gen.xxv.25)=the quality thereof, namely, of the Natural as to good. . . 'Esau'=the Lord's Divine Natural as to Divine good when first conceived.

3304. 'His hand took hold of the heel of Esau' (ver.26)=the lowest of natural good to which it adhered with some power. . . 'Esau'=the good of the Natural.

—². Hence it is that from the first conception truth supplants good; as it is said of Jacob that he supplanted Esau.

3305. 'Esau'=the good of life of natural truth. . . For there are two things which constitute the Natural . . . one, which is of life; the other, which is of doctrine . . . the former is called good, and the latter, truth. This good is what is represented by 'Esau;' and the truth, by 'Jacob;'; or, what is the same thing, the good of life of natural truth is what is represented by 'Esau,' and the doctrine of natural truth, by 'Jacob' . . .

3309. 'Esau was a man knowing in hunting' (ver.27)=the good of life from sensuous and scientific truths. 'Esau'=the good of life.

3313. 'Isaac loved Esau because hunting was in his mouth' (ver.28)=that the Divine good of the Divine Rational loved the good of truth. . . 'Esau'=the Lord's Divine Natural as to the good therein. . . As the good of truth, which is here represented by 'Esau,' and is signified by 'hunting,' is exterior, namely, in the natural affection proceeding from truth, it is said to have been 'in the mouth of Isaac.'

3317. 'Esau came from the field' (ver.29)=the study of the good of life. 'Esau'=the good of life of natural truth.

3318. 'He was weary'=a state of combat.

3319. 'And Esau said to Jacob' (ver.30)=the Lord's perception from the good of the Natural . . . 'Esau'=the Lord as to the good of the Natural.

3320. 'Cause me to sup of the red' (id.)=a longing for doctrinal things.

3321. 'Because I am weary'=a state of combat.

3322¹¹. 'Was not Esau Jacob's brother; and I loved Jacob; and I hated Esau, and I set his mountain a waste' (Mal.i.2,3). Here, 'Esau'=the good of the Natural, which does not admit spiritual truth, which is

'Israel;' and what is doctrinal of truth, which is 'Jacob;' and, moreover, is vastated, which is 'to be hated.'

3326. 'Esau said, behold, I am going to die' (ver.32) = that he would afterwards rise again. 'Esau' = the good of the Natural.

3327. 'And for what is this primogeniture to me?' = that in this case he had no need of priority.

3330. 'And he sold his primogeniture to Jacob' = that in the meantime the priority was conceded to the doctrine of truth.

3332. 'And Jacob gave Esau bread and pottage of lentiles' (ver.34) = the good of life endowed with the good of truth and the good of doctrinal things. 'Esau' = the good of life.

3333. 'And he ate and drank' = appropriation.

3334. 'And he rose up' = elevation thence.

3335. 'And he went' = life.

3336. 'And Esau despised his primogeniture' (id.) = that in the meanwhile the good of life made no account of priority.

— In order that the signification in the internal sense of the things which are said in this chapter about Esau and Jacob may be apprehended, the thought must be entirely removed from the historicals, thus from the persons of Esau and Jacob; and in their place must be substituted the things which they represent, namely, the good of the Natural and the truth thereof; or, what is the same, the spiritual man who is being regenerated by means of truth and good. . . . When the good of the Natural and the truth thereof are apprehended in place of Esau and Jacob, it is evident how the case is with the regeneration of man by means of truth and good; namely, that in the beginning, the truth with him apparently has priority and also superiority, although in itself good is prior and superior. Ex.

3469. 'Esau was a son of forty years' (Gen.xxvi.34) = a state of temptation as to the natural good of truth. 'Esau' = the natural good of truth.

— The reason these things concerning Esau are immediately adjoined to those which have been related concerning Abimelech and Isaac, is that it has treated of those who are in the good of truth, that is, who are in a life according to doctrinal things taken from the literal sense of the Word. Ex.

3490. It now treats (in Gen.xxvii.) of the Natural, how the Lord made it Divine in Himself; 'Esau' = its good; and 'Jacob,' its truth. . . .

— In the representative sense, it also treats of the regeneration of man as to his Natural; in which sense, 'Esau' = the good of the Natural; and 'Jacob,' its truth; both, nevertheless, Divine, because all the good and truth in a regenerate man are from the Lord.

3494. 'He called Esau his elder son' (ver.1) = the affection of natural good, that is, the good of life. 'Esau' = the Divine good of the Natural; and as the good of the Natural is that which appears in the affection and life, it is the affection of natural good, or the good of life, which is here represented by 'Esau.' The affection of good in the Natural, and thence the good of life, is what is called 'the elder son'; but the affection of truth, and thence the doctrine of truth, is what is called 'the younger son.' Ex.

3495. 'He said unto him, My son; and he said unto him, Behold me' (id.) = presence by virtue of what is foreseen and provided.

3499. 'Take, I pray, thy weapons, thy quiver, and thy bow' (ver.3) = the doctrinal things of good which he had. . . . namely, which the good of the Natural had, which is represented by 'Esau.'

3500. 'Go thou forth into the field' = where the ground is good.

3501. 'And hunt me hunting' = the truth of good. . . . because it is said to Esau, by whom is represented the good of the Natural.

3502. 'Make me dainties such as I have loved' (ver.4) = pleasant things thence, because from good. . . . The reason they are from good, is that they were from Esau, by whom is represented the good of the Natural. Ex.

3504. 'That my soul may bless thee' = adjunction to his own life.

3505. 'Before I die' = the first state of resuscitation in the Natural. . . . (For) the good of infancy and thence the good of life is that which is the first of regeneration; which state up to this point is represented by 'Esau.'

3508. 'Esau went into the field to hunt for hunting, and to bring it' (ver.5) = the endeavour of the affection of good to procure truth which might be conjoined with the Divine Rational. 'Esau' = the good of the Natural; hence, he = the affection of the good of the Rational in the Natural; for the good which is in the Natural is not of the Natural, but is of the Rational in the Natural.

3509. That from the Divine good of the Divine Rational, which is represented by 'Isaac,' the Lord willed to acquire truth through the good of the Natural, which is represented by 'Esau'; by means of which truth He might glorify. . . . His Natural. . . . cannot be comprehended unless it is illustrated by those things which come forth with man while he is being regenerated by the Lord. Ex.

—². 'Esau' = the good of the Natural coming forth from the good of the Rational.

3510. 'I heard thy father speak to Esau thy brother, saying' (ver.6) = that the Divine good of the Divine Rational willed the affection of good. . . . 'Esau' = the affection of good in the Natural.

3518. Natural domestic good is that good which man derives from his parents. . . . and it is perfectly distinct from the good of the Natural which flows in from the Lord. . . . The one is called the good of the Natural; and the other, natural good. Moreover, every man receives domestic good from his father and from his mother, which goods are also distinct from each other: that which he receives from his father is interior; and that which he receives from his mother is exterior. With the Lord, these goods were most distinct; for the good which He had from the Father was Divine; whereas that which he had from the mother was contaminated with hereditary evil. That good in the Natural which the Lord had from the Father was His Own, because it was His life itself; and this it is which is represented by 'Esau,' (Whereas the natural good He had from the mother is what is meant by domestic good, and was rejected.)

[A.] 3526. 'Esau my brother is a hairy man' (ver. 11)=the quality, relatively, of the good of the Natural. Ex.

3527². Hence it is evident what Esau represents, namely, the good of the Natural; for he was called 'Esau' from what is hairy (Gen. xxv. 25), and 'Edom' from what is ruddy (ver. 30). Mount Seir, where he dwelt, also has a similar meaning, namely, what is shaggy . . .

3537. 'Rebekah took garments of desires of her elder son Esau' (ver. 15)=the genuine truths of good. . . 'Of desires'=genuine ones, because they are of the genuine good of the Natural, which is represented by 'Esau the elder son.' 3539. 3575.

3539³. That the state is completely inverted, is represented by Jacob's counterfeiting Esau, to wit, in his putting on the garments of Esau, and the skins of the kids of the goats . . .

3550. 'I am Esau thy first-born' (ver. 19)=that he believed it was real natural good. 'Esau,' and 'first-born'=good; in fact, the natural good which is represented by 'Esau,' (For the truth which pertains to man before he has been regenerated believes itself to be really good.)

3560. 'Whether thou art my son Esau, or not' (ver. 21)=that it was not natural good.

3563. 'And he said, The voice is the voice of Jacob, and the hands are the hands of Esau' (ver. 22)=that the Intellectual there, is of truth which is within; but the Voluntary there, is of good which is without; thus of inverted order.

—². The good of the Rational inflows into the Natural through a twofold way, namely, through the shortest way, into the good itself of the Natural, thus immediately, and through the good of the Natural there into truth. This good and this truth are what is represented by 'Esau' and his hunting. The good of the Rational also inflows into the Natural through a way less short . . .

—³. Therefore, good comes forth there under another form, namely, outwardly like the good which is represented by Esau, but inwardly like the truth which is represented by Jacob . . .

3564. 'He did not recognize him, because his hands were hairy like the hands of his brother Esau' (ver. 23)=that from the Voluntary which was without he perceived that it was natural good; (for) he did not recognize Jacob as Jacob, that is, the truth which Jacob represents; but he perceived Esau, that is, the natural good which was without . . .

3567. 'He said, Art thou he my son Esau; and he said, I' (ver. 24)=the state of natural truth, that then, from the external form, it believed itself to be natural good.

3576. From these particulars concerning Esau and Jacob, it may be evident, that the good of the Rational inmosty conjoined itself with the good of the Natural, and, through the good there, with the truth . . . (for) Isaac had Esau in mind when he pronounced the blessing over Jacob . . .

—². 'Upon thy sword thou shalt live,' etc.=that so long as truth is being conjoined with good, good, as to the appearance, is in the lower place; but that it will be in the higher place; and then there shall be the conjunction of the Rational with the good of the Natural, and, through this, with the truth; and thus truth will become of good; and therefore Esau will then represent the good itself of the Natural; and Jacob its truth itself, both conjoined with the Rational: thus, in the supreme sense, the Lord's Divine Natural; Esau as to the Divine good; and Jacob as to the Divine truth there.

3588. 'Esau his brother came from his hunting' (ver. 30)=the truth of good and its advent. 'Esau'=the good of the Natural.

3592. 'And Isaac his father said to him, Who art thou? and he said, I am thy son, thy first-born Esau' (ver. 32)=the state of perception concerning natural good and the truth thence derived.

3597. 'Esau heard the words of his father' (ver. 34)=the apperception of the good of the Natural from good Divine.

—⁵. 'Esau lifted up his voice and wept' (ver. 38)=a further state of alteration.

3599. 'Isaac his father answered and said unto him' (ver. 39)=perception concerning natural good, that it would be made Divine. . . 'Esau'=natural good. . . It was said above that Esau represents the Lord's Divine Natural as to Divine good . . . but here, that Esau represents natural good which should be made Divine. How this is . . . The natural good which Esau first represents, is the Natural of the Lord's infancy, which was Divine from the Father, but human from the mother . . . (But) after the Lord . . . had expelled everything human that was from the mother, Esau represents the Lord's Divine Natural as to good; and Jacob, His Divine Natural as to truth. But Esau and Jacob represent the Divine good and the Divine truth of the Lord's Divine Natural as conjoined with each other like brothers, and which, regarded in themselves, are nothing else than a single simultaneous power for the formation and reception of actual good and truth.

3603². But when man comes into the state in which he does what is good from the affection of good, that is, when he is regenerate, he comes into the state which is described in the blessing given to Esau.

3605. 'Esau hated Jacob on account of the blessing with which his father blessed him' (ver. 41)=that natural good was averse to the inverted conjunction of truth. . . The reason 'to hate'=to be averse, is that it is predicated of the good which is represented by Esau . . .

3608. 'Rebekah was told the words of her elder son Esau, (ver. 42)=the Lord's perception from Divine truth concerning the mind-animo-of natural good at that time.

3610. 'Behold, Esau thy brother comforteth himself for thee to kill thee' (id.)=the mind-animum-to invert the state. and to deprive truth of self-derived life.

3614. 'Until thy brother's anger recedes from thee' (ver.44)=what is successive of the state with natural good. . . 'Wrath' is predicated of truth, here, of the truth of good which is represented by Esau; whereas 'anger' is predicated of that good itself.

3616. This end, after the completion of Jacob's stay with Laban, is represented by Esau, when 'he ran to meet Jacob, and embraced him, and fell upon his neck, and kissed him, and wept' (Gen.xxxiii.4) . . .

3659². In order that the representative might fall into a single person, it was permitted that he should thus take away the primogeniture from Esau, and afterwards the blessing. Hence it is, that Jacob now represents the good of the Natural . . . Esau is also still further treated of (in Gen.xxviii.6-8), to the intent that the good of truth, and the interior truth of good, of the Lord's Natural, might be represented, which could not yet be represented by Jacob.

3669. The good which is from truth is what, here, is 'Jacob'; and the good from which is truth, is what is 'Esau' . . .

3677. 'The brother of Rebekah, the mother of Jacob and Esau' (ver.5)=affinity from the mother with the good of truth which is 'Jacob' with the truth of good which is 'Esau' . . . 'Esau'=the truth of good, that is, the good from which is truth in the Natural.

3679. 'Esau saw that Isaac had blessed Jacob,' (ver.6) =the thought of natural good concerning conjunction by means of the good of truth, which is 'Jacob' . . . 'Esau'=the good of the Natural.

3687. 'Esau went to Ishmael, and took Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael the son of Abraham' (ver.9)=the conjunction of that good with truth from a Divine origin. 'Esau'=the good of the Natural.

4234². The good with which (the truth represented by Jacob) was to be conjoined, is represented by Esau. That 'Esau'=the Divine good of the Lord's Divine Natural. Refs. This conjunction, namely, of truth Divine with the Divine good of the Lord's Divine Natural, is now treated of in the supreme sense.

4239. 'Jacob sent messengers before him to Esau his brother' (Gen.xxxii.3)=the first communication with celestial good. . . 'Esau'=celestial good in the Natural. Refs.

4240. The land of 'Seir'=celestial natural good: Esau, too, who dwelt there, represented that good . . .

4242. 'Thus shall ye say to my lord Esau' (ver.4)=the first acknowledgment of good, that it was in a higher place. . . 'Esau'=good . . . This also, is what is meant by the prophetic words of Isaac . . . 'it shall be when thou shalt have the dominion,' etc.

4245. 'I send to tell my lord, to find grace in thine eyes'= . . . the condescension and humiliation of truth before good.

4247. 'We came to thy brother, to Esau, and he even cometh to meet thee' (ver.6)=that good is continually flowing in, in order to appropriate truths to itself.

4248. 'And four hundred men with him'=the present state of good, that it may take the prior place.

4250. The preparation and disposition of truths and goods in the Natural to receive the good represented by Esau, Sig.

4252a. In the Natural . . . in which the good which is represented by Esau was not yet as conjoined with truth.

4256. 'Snatch me, I pray, out of the hand of my brother, out of the hand of Esau, because I fear him' (ver.11)=the state relatively. . . (For) when the order is being inverted, and good is manifestly taking its prior place . . . the natural man is in fear and straitness, and also enters into temptations. Ex.

4262. 'He took of that which came into his hand a present for Esau his brother' (ver.13)=the Divine things to be initiated to celestial natural good. . . 'Esau'=the Divine Natural as to good; here, as to celestial good, because the Natural was not yet made Divine.

4267. 'When Esau my brother shall meet thee . . . thou shalt say, Thy servant Jacob's: it is a present sent unto my lord Esau' (vers.17,18)=submission. Ex. 4268.

4336. It here treats (in Gen.xxxiii.) of the conjunction of the Divine good natural, which is 'Esau,' with the good of truth, which is 'Jacob'; thus concerning the submission of the latter, and its insinuation into Divine good natural.

4337. 'Jacob'=truth in the Natural; and 'Esau,'=the good with which the truth is to be conjoined. . . After the conjunction, good is actually in the first place (as is signified by the prophecy of Isaac to Esau); and it now treats of that state; wherefore Jacob calls Esau his lord, and himself a servant.

—e. Nor can truth be conjoined with the good which flows in through the internal man, and is Divine in its origin, which is here represented by Esau, until the truth is truth in will and act . . .

4340. 'Esau came' (ver.1)=Divine good natural. 4348.

4350. 'Esau ran to meet him' (ver.4)=the influx of Divine good natural.

4358. For by Esau is represented the Lord as to Divine good natural.

4366. 'Esau said, I have much, my brother, be that to thee which is thine' (ver.9)=tacit acceptance, that thus he might insinuate the affection of good from truth.

4373². By Esau is represented Divine good in the Natural.

4385. 'Esau said, Let me set, I pray, with thee of the people who are with me' (ver.15)=that some things relating to the truth of good might be conjoined.

4387. 'Esau returned in that day to his way to Seir' (ver.16)=the state at that time of Divine good natural to which the goods of truth were adjoined.

4563⁴. 'Esau'=the good of the Natural by virtue of the immediate influx from the good of the Rational, that is, Isaac; and 'Jacob'=the good or the good of truth of the Natural by virtue of mediate influx through the truth of the Rational, that is, Rebekah.

4621. 'His sons Esau and Jacob buried him' (ver.29)=that he rose again in the good and in the good of truth of the Natural. . . 'Esau'=the Lord's Divine Natural as to good.

4639. Gen.xxxvi. treats of the Lord's Divine good natural (which is 'Esau'); and the whole order of that good is described by the names of ('the nativities of Esau').

4641. 'These are the nativities of Esau' (ver.1)=the derivations in the Lord's Divine good natural. . . As this good is of such a nature that it does not fall into the understanding of any man, and scarcely into that of any Angel, it is described by mere names; for the Lord's Divine good natural, which is represented by Esau, is that which was Divine in Him from His birth. . . Jacob represented that good which He acquired by virtue of His Own power. . . This good is that which He conjoined with the Divine good. . . The good which Esau represents flowed in through an internal way, and through rational good into natural, immediately; whereas the good which Jacob and Israel represents, flowed in through an external way. . .

4643. 'Esau took his women from the daughters of Canaan' (ver.2)=the first conjunction of natural good with the affection of apparent truth.

4645. 'Esau took his women, and his sons, and his daughters, and all the souls of his house, and his substance, and all his beast, and all his purchase, which he had acquired in the Land of Canaan, and went to the Land from before Jacob his brother' (ver.6)=all things of Divine good and of the truth thence, which ever appertained to Him, with which there is correspondence in Heaven, and thence Heaven; receding from Jacob because of the representation.

4646. 'These are the births of Esau the father of Edom' (ver.9)=the derivations in Divine good natural.

4647. 'These are the dukes of the sons of Esau' (ver.15)=the chief truths of good. —^e.

4651. 'These are the names of the dukes of Esau as to their families, as to their places, in their names' (ver.40)=the doctrinal things of good from them; and their rise, state, and quality.

—^e. 'Esau himself is the father of Edom' (ver.43)=the Lord's Divine good natural in the Lord's Divine Human.

5135⁷. 'Esau' (Jer.xlix.8)=the evil of the love of self to which falsities are adjoined. —^s.

9340⁸. 'The mount of Esau' (Obad. 19)=the good of love. Refs.

E. 410⁴. By 'Esau,' here, (Jer.xlix.) is signified the love of self and thence evil destroying the Church.

448¹¹. By 'Esau and his house' (Obad. 18) are meant those who believe themselves to be intelligent and wise, not from the Lord, but from themselves; for in verse 8 it is said, 'I will destroy the wise ones from Edom, and the intelligent ones from the mount of Esau,' who are those who have confirmed themselves in such things as favour their own loves from the sense of the letter of the Word.

— . That 'the house of Jacob shall be the heir of the inheritances of the house and of the mount of Esau;' and that 'the house of Jacob shall be a fire and the house of Joseph a flame to it' (vers.17,18)=that in the place of those who are meant by 'Esau' there shall succeed those who are in the good of life according to the truths of doctrine. . .

710²⁰. By 'Esau' is signified natural good in what is spiritual.

714²⁵. By 'Esau' (Mal.i.3) are meant those who are in good as to the natural man; here, those who are in evil as to him; wherefore it is said, 'Esau have I hated.'

730²¹. By 'Esau' (Mal.i.3) is signified the natural love of man; by 'his mountains' are signified the evils from that love; and by 'his inheritance,' the falsities from these evils.

Escape. Evadere, Evasio.

Escaper. Evasor.

A. 1701. 'There came an escaper, and told Abram the Hebrew' (Gen.xiv.13)=that the Lord perceived from His interior man.

5899. 'To a great escape' (Gen.xlv.7)=deliverance from damnation. . . They who receive these goods and truths. . . escape damnation, and are among the residue. Hence it is that 'escape' is mentioned in the Word passim where 'residues' and 'remains' are mentioned. Ill. . . From these places it is evident what 'to escape' signifies; namely, that those who 'escape' are those who have remains; and that 'to escape'=to be delivered from damnation.

7646. 'It shall eat the residue of that which is escaped, which is left unto you from the hail' (Ex.x.5)=the consumption of all things that have anything from truth.

7655. Hell, whence there is no escape. Sig.

H. 410^e. Which becomes painful to him.

E. 413⁵. 'There was no escaper and residue' (Lam.ii.22)=no good and truth.

654⁶⁶. 'They shall not have a residue or one escaping' (Jer.xlii.17)=that nothing whatever of truth and good will remain.

Esek. Esek.

3427. 'He called the name of the well Esek, because they contended with him' (Gen.xxvi.20)=denial on account of these. . . and other things, because they were against them. . . 'To quarrel,' or 'contend'=to deny. Hence the name 'Esek,' which, in the Original Language, means a contention or quarrel; and is derived from a related word which means oppression and injury:

and as 'well' here = the Word as to the literal sense in which is the internal sense, 'Esek' or 'contention' = the denial of the internal sense of the Word; (for they appear to be opposites).

5986. Many of the ways there are stopped by cross-bars . . .

5987. Certain of the Zinzendorians . . . do not see these cross-bars . . . I saw one of them pass along the ways through the cross-bars without seeing them; it was also said that he did not see those cross-bars or barriers—repagula—because he believed himself to be sincere and true, when yet he was insincere and untrue; wherefore he was driven away. It was Levi the printer.

D. Min. 4601. There appeared an immense tower surrounded by boarded cross-beams.

A. 30. The very essence and life of faith is the Lord alone . . .

144. By the name the ancients understood nothing else than the essence of the thing.

145. In the Word, also, by 'name' is signified the essence of the thing. Ill. 1736^s. —^e. 1754.

256. In order that from His Divine power He might unite the Divine celestial proprium with the human proprium, in His Human essence; so that they might become one in Him . . .

300. He is called 'Jehovah,' because He alone Is, or lives; thus from essence . . .

367. Evident from the nature or essence of faith.

379^e. The essence of faith, that is, charity . . .

501. As it is removed from the centre . . . it partakes less of the essence of the fruit or seed . . .

1150. The Essential of worship is the adoration of the Lord from the heart.

1175. All external worship is the Formal of internal worship; for the internal is the Essential itself . . . (See WORSHIP, here.)

1228. This is evident from the essence of an internal Church . . .

1408^s. (Thus) the vessels are one thing, and the Essentials which are in them are another; the vessels are natural things, the Essentials which are in them are spiritual and celestial ones.

1419^s. The essence of celestial love consists in this. As the Lord is love itself, that is, the essence and life of the love of all in the Heavens . . . The desire to be great is contrary to the essence and life of celestial love . . .

1426. By Abram is represented the Lord as to His Human essence; afterwards, as to both the Human and the Divine essence; and then he is called 'Abraham.'

1436. Every living Essential which is possible in that obscure state. Sig.

1458. In order that as to His Human essence He might become the very light of Heaven . . .

1470. Truth is attended with happiness and delight, but these are essential when it is from what is celestial.

1477. Celestial or Divine things were not so adjoined to the Lord as to make one essence, until He had undergone temptations; and had thus expelled the hereditary evil from the mother.

1645. Ends and uses are the principals and the Essentials of things.

1785. In His childhood, and in temptations, when the essences were not as yet united as one . . .

1802^e. Mutual love is the veriest Vital which they receive from the essence of the Lord, as from His Father.

1808^s. All celestial and spiritual things, which are from the Lord, are living and essential; or, as they are called, substantial.

1997. These two affections . . . are distinct from each other, both as to essence, and as to origin . . .

2225. The sense of the letter is similar to the internal sense, especially where it treats of the Essentials of faith . . .

2250^e. It is mercy itself which is intercession; for such is its essence.

2319. Angels, in the Word, = some Divine Essential with the Lord.

2349^s. As may be evident from the essence of love . . . 2715.

2385. They become truths falsified, because they are defiled by the essence of the beginning or principle.

2429^s. Good is the very essence of truth; and truth without its own essence is not truth.

2535. According to the essence of the thing which is the object of the prayer.

2576^s. For (the garments of the Angels) are real substances, thus essences in form.

2657^e. Hence He was no longer the son of Mary; but was Jehovah as to each essence.

2689^s. These are they who become spiritual men according to the essence of the truth in which they have faith.

2715^s. The humiliation which is the Essential in all worship . . .

2718. In this verse is described the man of the Spiritual

Church, such as he is as to good, that is, as to the essence of his life.

[A.] 2935^e. These are Essentials.

2982². The Churches which call faith the Essential the Church . . .

3023. 'Jehovah God of heaven' . . . = Jehovah Himself who is called 'the Father,' from whom He was conceived, thus who was His Divine essence; for the conception itself gave the veriest essence from which He was: 'Jehovah God of earth,' in this case, = Jehovah who is called 'the Son,' thus His Human essence: the latter came forth from the former when the Lord made it also Divine.

3761. As (faith and charity) are known only as to the terms, and are unknown as to the essence . . .

3910. 'God' is said in the Word from . . . power; 'Jehovah,' from being or essence. Hence it is, that 'God' is mentioned when it treats of truth: and 'Jehovah,' when of good. E. 220.

4060. Charity receives its quality from the truths which are of faith; and the truths of faith receive their essence and their life from charity.

4180. The Divine good as to each essence. Sig. —⁶.

—'. 'The God of Abraham' = the Divine Itself which is called the Divine essence.

4190^e. They acknowledge Him only as a common man as to His other essence, which they call the human nature.

4235. In the Lord was the Divine Itself which is called 'the Father,' the very essence of life, which with man is called the soul, was thence, and was Himself: this Divine is what is called in common discourse the Divine nature, or, rather, the Divine essence of the Lord.

4301. Truth receives its essence, and consequently its life, from good. 7759.

4574³. Thus they make one, like an essence and its form, or like the essential and the formal.

4606. 'Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Zebulon' = the Essentials of external Divine goods and truths. —^e.

4607. The Essentials of (interior goods and truths) are represented by Joseph and Benjamin. Enum.

4608. The Essentials of (subsequent goods and truths) are represented by Dan and Naphtali. Enum.

4609. The Essentials of (these mediums) are represented by Gad and Asher. Enum.

4680². Still there was one Church, because all made charity the Essential of the Church. They who . . . separated faith from charity, and made faith the Essential of the Church, were called 'Ham.'

4683^e. Hence it may be evident . . . what sort of a Church is that, which makes faith, and not the life of faith, essential.

4723. There are two Essentials which constitute the Church . . . one, that the Human of the Lord is Divine; the other, that love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour make the Church . . .

4812. The sons by Tamar = the two Essentials of the Church; namely, faith and love.

4831^e. Internal things are essential; rituals are only formal.

4839². Divine good is the Essential of order, and Divine truth the Formal.

4899^e. They who do not know that charity is the internal, and thus the Essential of the Church . . .

4926⁴. The Church where charity and life is the Essential. Sig.

4981. He then makes . . . eternal life essential.

4985. 'Form' = the essence of a thing; 'aspect,' the manifestation thence: and as good is the very essence; and truth is the manifestation thence, 'beautiful in form' = the good of life, and 'beautiful in aspect,' the truth of faith . . .

5200^e. Thus are described the truths of the Natural . . . by their Formal, and by their Essential; the Formal is constituted of the things of faith; and the Essential, of those of charity.

5207. Good is what is essential; and truths are its formal things.

5272². Divine truth proceeding from Divine good is the veriest reality, and the veriest Essential in the universe . . .

5689^e. That which gives essence is as the father, for the essence is the soul; and that which gives the covering is the mother . . .

5948. There are Essentials and there are Instrumentals. In order that an Essential may produce an effect anywhere, it must have an Instrumental through which it acts; and as the Instrumental is formed, so it acts . . .

—². In the Word, Essentials are called things; and are those things which act through Instrumentals: thus interior things are relatively Essentials, because they act through exterior ones. By external things not being a subject of care, is meant that they must not be as the end, but that Essentials must be so; for in proportion as instrumental things are as the end, Essentials withdraw themselves and vanish. Examps.

—³. But it is to be known that the Essential and the Instrumental are relative; namely, that the Essential is so called because it acts through the other, as through its instrument or organ; but when another thing acts through that which was the Essential, this latter becomes an Instrumental, and so on. Moreover, in the created universe, there is nothing Essential in itself; this exists only in the Supreme . . . Who, as He is being or Essential in itself, is called 'Jehovah,' from being: all other things are only Instrumentals. Hence it follows, that as Essentials must be as the end . . . the Lord alone must be so.

6269³. (Thus) the Church would have a different face, if the good of charity were in the first place, that is, the Essential; and the truth of faith in the second, that is, its Formal.

6427. When the truth of faith is lived . . . it is called the good of truth, but in its own essence it is truth in act.

6487. They supposed the Lord to act from (fate or absolute necessity), because He cannot proceed otherwise than according to the most essential things . . . Ex.

—^e. All things which are from the Lord are most essential ; but they do not follow in order from necessity, but in application to the freedom of man.

6587^e. The good of charity is the Essential of the Church.

7004². Divine truth is the only Essential. 7678^e. 8861^e.

7233³. It is therefore not surprising that with most people faith is the Essential of the Church . . .

—^e. But the Intellectual cannot be enlightened, unless it is believed that love to the Lord, and charity towards the neighbour are the principals and Essentials of the Church.

7236. In their own essence, the goods of the Spiritual Church are nothing but truths . . .

8200^e. (Such) can perceive no otherwise than that truth from the Divine is a mere cogitative affair, of no real essence ; but it is the veriest Essential, from which are all the essences of things in both worlds.

8873. Humiliation and submission are the Essentials of worship . . .

9199². They who distinguish the Divine into Persons, and not into essences united in one . . .

9210². For they regard what is good and just as the essential and only thing . . . and gain and honour . . . as relatively not Essentials . . .

10033³. To acknowledge the Divine of the Lord, is the first and the very Essential of all things which are of faith in the Church.

10361. (Therefore) love and faith are the Essentials of the Church, because they conjoin men and Angels with the Lord . . .

10370. That the very Essential of the Church is the acknowledgment of the union of the Divine Itself in the Lord's Human ; and that this must be in each and all things of worship. Sig. . . The reason this is the Essential of the Church, and thence the Essential of its worship, is that the salvation of the human race depends solely on that union . . . That the salvation of the human race is thence, and consequently that this acknowledgment is the Essential of the Church and of its worship, the Lord teaches in many places. III.

H. 133. In its essence, the heat of Heaven is love.

172. The things in Heaven are not like those on earth as to essence . . .

375. The Essential of marriage is the union of minds . . .

549. From His own Divine essence, which is good, love, and mercy, the Lord cannot act in the same way with one man as with another. Ex.

L. 54. Therefore God is one both in Person and in Essence. F.35. P.231^e. 262⁷. R.67. B.116. T.2.

S. 46. As external things derive their own essence from internal ones, and both the latter and the former from the Inmost . . .

F. 18². Charity and faith make one, like essence and form ; since the essence of faith is charity, and the form of charity is faith ; from which it is evident, that faith without charity is like form without essence, which is not anything ; and that charity without faith is like essence without form, which also is not anything.

W. 24². Should it be said that these heads have one essence . . .

27. If another . . . should say that a plurality of Infinities, of Uncreates, of Omnipotents, and of Gods is possible, provided they have one and the same essence . . . is not one and the same essence one identity . . .

28. That the Divine essence itself is love and wisdom. Gen.art.

35. As there is such a union of love and wisdom . . . in God Man, the Divine essence is one. For the Divine essence is Divine love, because it is of the Divine wisdom ; and it is Divine wisdom, because it is of the Divine love. And as there is such a union of these, the Divine life is one : Life is the Divine essence.

45^e. As this very Substance and Form is Divine love and Divine wisdom, it follows that it is the very and only love, and the very and only wisdom ; consequently, that it is the very and only essence . . .

81. Think of the Divine Love and the Divine wisdom as being the very essence itself, space abstracted and a vacuum denied. Then think from space, and you will perceive that the Divine is the same in the greatest and least things of space ; for in essence abstracted from space there is neither great nor small, but identity.

84². The Sun of the Spiritual World in its essence is such, that spiritual heat and light can come forth from it ; and the sun of the natural world in its essence is such, that natural heat can come forth from it.

90^e. Spiritual heat and light derive their essence from a Sun which is pure love, and which is life itself ; whereas natural heat and light derive their essence from a sun which is pure fire, in which there is absolutely nothing of life.

335. The essence of spiritual love is to do good to others . . . for the sake of others : infinitely more is this the essence of the Divine love.

P. 157. There is an only Essence, an only Substance, and an only Form, from which are all the essences, substances, and forms that have been created. That only Essence, Substance, and Form is the Divine love and the Divine wisdom . . . —², Ex. —⁵, Ex.

242. By Cain and Abel . . . are meant the two Essentials of the Church ; which are love and wisdom, or charity and faith.

[P.] 256³. It is everywhere acknowledged that the Word is holy, and that the Lord has the Divine; and these two things are the Essentials of the Church . . .

259². When the Church itself had assumed as its Essentials such things as are of the understanding only . . . and when the things of life are not the Essentials of the Church, man from the understanding is in mere darkness . . .

—³. There are three Essentials of the Church,—the acknowledgment of the Divine of the Lord, the acknowledgment of the holiness of the Word, and the life which is called charity. . . If these three had been regarded as the Essentials of the Church, intellectual dissensions would not have divided, but would have only varied it . . .

328⁸. It is provided by the Lord that there is religion everywhere; and in every religion there are the two Essentials of salvation, which are, to acknowledge God, and not to do what is evil because it is contrary to God: all other things which are of the understanding . . . and which are called matters of faith, are provided for everyone according to his life, for they are accessories of life . . . Those who in the world have been in these two Essentials of religion, accept the truths of the Church . . .

340². There are two Essentials and at the same time universals of religion,—the acknowledgment of God, and repentance . . .

R. 9. There are two Essentials through which is effected conjunction with the Lord and thence salvation, the acknowledgment of one God, and repentance of life; but at this day, instead of the acknowledgment of one God there is the acknowledgment of three, and instead of repentance of life there is repentance of the mouth only that one is a sinner; and through these two there is not any conjunction: wherefore, unless a New Church arises, which acknowledges those two essentials, and lives them, no one can be saved . . .

44. 'In the midst'=in the inmost, from which those things which are around . . . derive their essence; here, their light or intelligence.

465². His presence itself, such as it is in itself, or in its own essence, no Angel . . . can endure.

469. 'The little book'=the Word as to something essential therein; which is this doctrine in the Word, that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that His Human is Divine.

485, Preface. Of what quality they who are interiorly in faith alone are in their opposition to the two Essentials of the New Church; which are, that the Lord alone is the God of Heaven and earth, and that His Human is Divine; and that we are to live according to the precepts of the Decalogue. Tr.

490. The reason these are they who are meant by the 'two witnesses,' is that these two things are the two Essentials of the New Church . . .

491. That these two things, the acknowledgment of the Lord, and a life according to the precepts of the Decalogue, which are the two Essentials of the New Church, are to be taught even to the end and the beginning. Sig.

494. That those who want to destroy these two Essentials of the New Church, will perish by infernal love. Sig.

495. That he who condemns them, will be in like manner condemned. Sig.

496. That those who turn themselves away from the two Essentials of the New Church, cannot receive any truth from Heaven. Sig.

497. That those who turn themselves away from these two Essentials, falsify the truths of the Word. Sig.

498. That those who want to destroy these two Essentials of the New Church, cast themselves into evils and falsities of every kind, as often and as much as they do it. Sig. . . The reason is, that in proportion as anyone destroys these two Essentials, he destroys the truths of the Word . . . For these two Essentials are the truths of the Word . . .

500. That those who are in the internals of the doctrine of faith alone will set themselves in opposition, and will attack these two Essentials of the New Church, and will reject them with themselves, and as far as they are able, with others. Sig.

501. That the two Essentials of the New Church are completely rejected by those who are interiorly in the falsities of doctrine concerning faith alone. Sig.

505. When all who have been and shall be in falsities of doctrine and thence in evils of life from faith alone, at the end of the Church which still is, to the beginning of the New Church, have heard and shall hear about the two Essentials, which are the acknowledgment of the Lord and of works according to the Decalogue. Sig.

506. By 'the bodies' are here signified the two Essentials of the New Church . . . And by 'not suffering them to be put into monuments,' is signified to reject them as condemned.

509. That these two Essentials, the one concerning the Lord and concerning the Divine Human, and the other concerning a life according to the commandments of the Decalogue, are in opposition to the two Essentials received in the Reformed Church, of which the one relates to a Trinity of Persons, and the other to salvation by faith alone without the works of the law; and that owing to this opposition the two Essentials of the New Church, which is the New Jerusalem, are regarded with contempt, uneasiness, and aversion. Sig.

510. That these two Essentials of the New Church, at the end of the former one, while the New Church is beginning and advancing, are vivified by the Lord with those who receive them. Sig.

512. These two Essentials of the New Church taken up by the Lord into Heaven, whence they are and where they are, and their protection. Sig.

514. 'To see the two witnesses'=to hear these two Essentials of the New Church, and also to see confirming things from the Word. . . Yet they did not receive. Sig.

529. The New Heaven, in which the Lord is worshipped in His Divine Human, and they live according to the precepts of His Decalogue, which are the two Essentials of the New Church, through which there is conjunction. Sig.

537. These are they who are meant by 'the dragon' . . . for they are against the two Essentials of the New Church, which are, that God is one in Essence and in Person, in Whom is the Trinity, and that this God is the Lord ; and also that charity and faith are one, like an essence and its form ; and that no others have charity and faith than those who live according to the precepts of the Decalogue . . .

611⁷. Therefore, my disciples, think of God from Essence, and from this of His Person ; and not from Person, and from this of Essence ; for to think from Person about Essence, is to think materially even about Essence ; whereas to think from Essence about Person, is to think spiritually even about Person.

875². Consequently, the essence of the Heavens is love, and their manifestation is wisdom . . .

876^e. In this Heaven are all the little children of Christians, because they are educated by the Angels in these two Essentials of the New Church, which are the acknowledgment of the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth, and a life according to the precepts of the Decalogue.

903. See DOCTRINE.

961². The Divine being is the Divine essence . . . because the Divine essence . . . is God. (See BE, here.)

M. 21^e. Consent is the Essential of marriage ; all other things, which follow, are its formal things.

87³. There does not exist an essence without a form, nor a form without an essence ; and good is essence or being, and truth is that through which the essence is formed, and the being comes forth.

183³. As (marriage love) is from the Lord, it is love, wisdom, and use, which are three Essentials that together make one Divine essence, and nothing but what is of the Divine essence can proceed from Him, and inflow into the inmost of man which is called his soul ; and these three Essentials are turned into analogous and corresponding things in their descent into the body. What (therefore) is meant by the third proceeding Divine Essential, which is called use ? Ex.

306. There are some ceremonies which are only formal, and there are some ceremonies which are also essential : among the latter are weddings. Ex.

T. 5. As the acknowledgment of God from the Knowledge of Him is the very essence and soul of all things in universal theology . . .

17. (The notion that the three Divine persons are of one essence, refuted.) 168.

18. (The distinction between the Divine being and the Divine essence.) (See BE, here, and at 21².)

23. Consequently, another God of the same essence is not possible.

—². That an identity of three Divine essences is an offence to reason . . .

29³. His Sun . . . which consists of the Divine essence . . .

36. On the essence of God, which is Divine love and Wisdom. Gen.art.

— We have made a distinction between the being of God and the essence of God, because [we have made one] between the infinity of God and the love of God ; and the term infinity is applied to the being of God, and the term love to the essence of God ; for the being of God is more universal than the essence of God . . . not that the being of God pre-exists, but because it enters into the essence as what is adjunctive cohering, determining, forming, and at the same time elevating.

37. That God is love itself and wisdom itself, and that these two make His essence. Gen.art.

— Love and wisdom are the two Essentials . . . But as men withdrew their minds from Heaven . . . they began not to know what love is in its essence, and thence what wisdom is in its, not knowing that love abstracted from form is impossible . . . Now as God is the very, the only, and thus the first Substance and Form, of which the essence is love and wisdom . . . it follows, that He created the universe . . . from love through wisdom . . . Love, moreover, is not only the essence which forms all things, but is also that which unites and conjoins them . . .

—². Heat and light are the two Essentials . . . (and) they correspond to the Divine love and the Divine wisdom ; for the heat which proceeds from the Sun of the Spiritual World, in its essence, is love ; and the light thence, in its essence, is wisdom. 49. I.6.

— They may also be illustrated by the two essentials and universals by means of which human minds come forth and subsist, and which are the will and the understanding . . . The same things may be further illustrated by the two essentials and universals by means of which human bodies come forth and subsist, and which are the heart and lungs . . .

38. Hence it is that in the Church there are two essentials, which are called charity and faith . . .

43. That the essence of love is to love others outside of itself . . . Gen.art. There are two things which make the essence of God,—love and wisdom ; but there are three things which make the essence of His love,—to love others outside of itself, to will to be one with them, and to make them happy from itself : the same three things also make the essence of His wisdom . . . (These three Essentials explained in order.)

49. Hence it is evident, that as infinity, immensity, and eternity pertain to the Divine being, so omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence pertain to the Divine essence . . .

73². Thus fill with the Divine essence man's natural faith . . .

134³. (These things are diametrically contrary to the Divine essence itself. Enum.)

139. That which proceeds is of one and the same essence with Him from whom it proceeds ; like these three, the soul, the body, and the proceeding, which together make one essence ; with man, a merely human one ; but with the Lord, a Divine and at the same time a Human one ; which, after glorification, were united as the prior with its posterior, and as the essence with its form. Thus the three Essentials, which are called the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, in the Lord are one.

[T.] 145. As the Lord is Divine truth itself from Divine good, and this is His very essence, and everyone acts what he does act from his essence, it is evident that the Lord continually wills . . . to implant truth and good in every man. This may be illustrated by many things . . . Every man wills, thinks, and, as far as is allowable, speaks and acts from his essence. Examps. . . It is the same with every subject of a lower sort in the animal kingdom . . . every one is Known from its essence or nature; from this, and according to this, is the instinct of every one of them. In like manner in the vegetable kingdom, every tree, shrub, and vegetable, is Known from its fruit and seed, in which its essence is innate . . . Nay, every kind of ground, clay, and stone . . . and every mineral and metal, is judged of from its essence.

166. As these three, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, are the three essentials of the one God, which make one . . . Gen.art. There exist general essentials of one thing, and also particular ones, and the latter together with the former make one essence. The general essentials of one man are his soul, body, and operation; and that these make one essence may be seen from this, that the one is from the other, and for the sake of the other, in a continuous series; for the man begins from the soul, which is the very essence of the seed: this not only initiates, but also produces in their order the things which are of the body, and afterwards . . . the operations; wherefore, from the production of the one from the other, and the consequent engrafting and conjunction, it is evident that these three are of one essence, and they are therefore called three essentials.

167. Everyone acknowledges that these three, to wit, the soul, the body, and operation, were and are in the Lord God the Saviour. . . The Divine of the Father, like the soul in man, is therefore His first essential. That the Son whom Mary brought forth, is the body of that Divine soul, follows . . . This, therefore, is the second essential. The reason the operations make the third essential, is that they proceed from the soul and the body together; and the things which proceed are of the same essence as those which produce them. That the three essentials, which are the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, in the Lord are one. III.

168. When it is said that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, are the three essentials of one God, like the soul, body, and operation with man, it appears to the human mind as if three Persons were these three essentials . . . But when it is understood that the Divine of the Father which makes the soul, and the Divine of the Son which makes the body, and the Divine of the Holy Spirit, that is, the Divine proceeding, which makes the operation, are the three essentials of the one God, this then falls into the understanding. For God the Father is His own Divine, the Son from the Father is His, and the Holy Spirit from both is His, and these, being of one essence and unanimous, make the one God. If, however, these three Divines are called Persons, and to each is attributed His own property . . . the Divine essence becomes divided . . .

170. (The three Gods supposed to have one Divine essence, by which is meant eternity, immensity, omnipotence; and thence equal divinity, glory, and majesty.)

—². The reason this Divine Trinity is in the Lord God the Saviour and Redeemer Jesus Christ, is that the three essentials of the one God, which make one essence, are in Him.

172³. If, however, they had said, that the Father has the Divine essence, that the Son has the Divine essence, and that the Holy Spirit has the Divine essence, but that there are not three Divine essences, but that the essence is one and indivisible, then this mystery would be explicable. Ex. . . For then there are understood three essences which are of one and the same Person, and so together make an essence one and indivisible.

177². Derivatives derive their essence from the beginning or principle.

178. From this (notion) it follows that the universe is what is called God; that nature is its essence . . .

339. In its own essence, faith is spiritual, but in its own form it is natural . . .

352. As faith in its own essence is Truth . . .

357. Because faith and charity are the two essentials of salvation . . .

364. Neither could God . . . divide His essence; for this is one and indivisible.

—². The sun . . . with all its essence, which is heat and light, inflows into every tree . . .

—³. The Lord is omnipresent, and where He is present, there He is with His whole essence; and it is impossible for Him to take some of it away, and so give part to one and part to another; but He gives the whole, and affords man the opportunity to take little or much.

365. Therefore the Lord with all the essence of faith and charity flows in with every man. Gen.art. . . For the life of the Divine wisdom is the essence of faith; and the life of the Divine love is the essence of charity . . .

367³. To separate charity from faith is like separating essence from form. It is known . . . that essence without form, or form without essence, is not anything; for essence has no quality except from form, nor is form any abiding being except from essence; consequently, nothing can be predicated of either when separated from the other. Charity, moreover, is the essence of faith, and faith is the form of charity; just as good is the essence of truth, and truth is the form of good. These two, to wit, good and truth, are in each and all things which essentially come forth . . .

374². From which it follows, that works are essentially of the will, formally of the understanding, and actually of the body.

—³. Fruits are essentially of the seed, formally of the boughs and leaves, and actually of the wood of the tree.

380. Thus all that which is essentially charity, and essentially faith, is from that marriage.

384. Merely natural faith has not the essence of faith in it.

410. Wherefore, good itself is essentially the neighbour.

420. (Thinking and willing, and speaking and acting) do not essentially make the external and the internal man.

421. (Charity and good works) are formally distinct, like the mind which thinks and wills, and the body through which the mind speaks and acts; while they are essentially distinct, because the mind itself is distinct . . . Therefore, if works proceed from . . . the natural mind, they proceed from a good will which is not charity . . . and charity in only the external form . . . does not possess the essence of charity. Examp.

445. If moral life is looked at in its essence . . .

450. Heresies . . . in each of which these three essentials, which are God, charity, and faith, have been and are acknowledged . . .

482. This perception is understanding itself in its essence.

493². The interior will is the man himself, for the being and the essence of his life are there; the understanding is its form . . .

508⁵. This light in its essence is truth.

585^e. Every particle of dust . . . exhales from its essence a subtle something . . .

658⁸. The will is the being or essence of man's life; the understanding is the manifesting or manifestation thence: and as an essence is not anything unless it is in some form, so is the will unless in the understanding . . .

712. It is known that the essentials of the Church are three, namely, God, charity, and faith . . . Can. Trinity x. 7.

778. Every man is his own love and his own intelligence, and whatever proceeds from him derives essence from these two essentials or proper things of his life; wherefore the Angels Know of what quality a man essentially is, from a short intercourse with him . . .

D. 1000^e. To the sanguineous essences.

1004. They who discern the inmost essences, belong to the renal capsules.

1715. Could never fall to the lot of spiritual essences, or Spirits. 1719. —. —.

3954. He said his spirit . . . was his interior essence . . .

4399. The affection of truth is formal; the affection of good is essential. Examp.

4847². The Divine . . . is not divided into three equal essences; but into three successive essences . . . I perceived that the Divine Itself which is the first essence is a Man in endeavour . . . That the second essence was born a Man and is essentially from the first one; and that the third essence in the succession is a Man proceeding . . .

6081. They have rejected the three most essential things of the Church and of Heaven,—the Divine of the Lord, the Word . . . and the works of charity.

E. 105. Life according to Knowledges is the essential of the Church.

283. All things by which celestial things are represented as to the bodies themselves=essential things; and as to those things which are around them, formal things. Thus man, as to the body, =good in essence; and as to those things which encompass it, good in form. Celestial good is good in essence; and spiritual good is good in form; and this, because the will, where good resides, is the man himself or the man in essence; and the understanding, where truth is, which is the form of good, is the man thence, thus the man in form.

343³. He believes the three names to be three Gods, but one as to essence. Yet it cannot be said that they are one as to essence when to one there is attributed what is different from the other, because thus the essence is divided; thus upon each essence there is bestowed the name of a Person. But they are one essence, when the three are of one Person . . .

435². For there are three things which fully constitute and form every universal essential, namely, the good of love, truth from this good, and thence the good of life.

438. Each tribe represented . . . some universal essential which makes Heaven and the Church. There are in general three universal essentials which make them, namely, love to the Lord, charity towards the neighbour, and the obedience of faith. Sig.

687¹⁷. 'To sit' is a term significant of essence and permanence in the state of a thing and of life.

797⁴. Love in its essence is willing, and in its manifestation is doing.

944³. As the heat and light of Heaven vivify spiritual essences, so the heat and light of the world vivify natural essences . . .

959². The essence of God is Divine love; and His quality is thence the Divine truth united to Divine good . . .

1097². Thought about the infinite, eternal, uncreate, omnipotent, omnipresent, and omniscient God, opens Heaven; for these are the attributes of the essence of the one and true God.

1104². The Athanasian doctrine teaches that in the Lord there are two essences, a Divine one and a human one . . .

1111³. From the Divine essence (it appears) that one Divine by itself is not possible, but there must be a trine: this trine consists of being, manifesting, and proceeding . . . and this trine is one in Essence and one in Person, and is God.

1206². All that is called soul which is essence; for that which has no essence in itself does not come forth, because it is not an entity-ens, because there is no being from which it is. This is the case with nature ; its essence, from which it comes forth, is the Spiritual, because this has Divine being in it . . . this essence may also be called the soul, because everything spiritual is alive . . .

[E.] 12267. The essence of uses. (See USE at this ref.)

Ath. 74. It is said that there is one substance or essence, when yet there is a specific difference, because the attribute in special belongs to one more than another. Ex.

108. To Spirits who were saying that they believed in three Persons and still in one God, because there is one essence or substance to the three, I said, What need is there of the metaphysical term essence and substance? . . . Consult your thoughts: do you not think of three Gods . . .

151. The reason the most essential thing of the Church is to know and Know its God ; and that without this most essential thing there is not any conjunction with God . . . is that in the Spiritual World the thought and will have their conjunction with him who is regarded and loved.

1682. That the substance or essence makes one God therefrom falls into the idea of no one when the essence or substance is distinguished by attributes of the one which are not proper to the other ; for so the one is worshipped for this attribute, and the other for that.

169. If, however, you think that it is the substance or essence which is called Person, there necessarily results one Person, and the Trine in that.

170. Moreover, each attribute by which the one Person is distinguished from the other is a Divine attribute . . . and whatever Divine there is in the three Persons is a distinct Divine essence or substance : and as Athanasius saw this, he took care that all the three should be in each attribute. From this it follows again, that the substance and essence is not one unless it is in one Person.

183. Consider whether one and the same essence or substance, in which are the like properties and attributes, can be said to be otherwise than one, without any distinction into Persons. It is otherwise when specific properties and specific attributes are of the same essence or substance ; it can then be distinguished into Persons ; but still it is not then the same essence which from three makes one.

209. Christians can with difficulty think of . . . the Divine Human . . . because they think of a common man, and not of the Human essence, which is love.

222. Athanasius and the learned after him thought to conjoin the three Divines into one by this, that the essence is one . . . But from this subtlety, which cannot be comprehended, who ever thinks of one God ? What he thinks is that there are three Persons . . . so that he does not see one God, but three Gods.

D. Love xviii4. Everyone attends to the things he sees and feels, but not to the life, soul, or essence from which he sees and feels.

D. Wis. i4. Wisdom with the Angels gives to see these things in their essence, and light gives to see them in their form . . .

xi. 1e. The end is the very essence (in the cause and the effect).

Q. ii. The essence purely Divine, which was the purely Divine celestial and Divine spiritual essence, transcends both the angelic and the human Rational.

iv. 'The Word' . . . was the Divine wisdom, which with the Divine love constitutes the Divine essence, and thus one and the same God.

Can. God ii. This one God is the being itself which is Jehovah ; and thence the essence and manifestation of God in Himself.

2. And therefore this only God is Essence, Substance, and Form ; and men and Angels are spiritual essences, substances, and forms ; that is, images and likenesses . . .

6. Consequently, another God, of the same essence with the one God, is not possible.

7. The plurality of gods in ancient times, and partly so in modern ones, has had no other origin than from the non-understanding of the Divine essence.

v. 1. Love and wisdom are the two essentials and universals of life ; love is the being of life, and wisdom is the manifestation of life from that being.

Redeemer i. In Jehovah God there are two things of the same essence, Divine love and Divine wisdom, or Divine good and Divine truth.

viii. 1. Jehovah God from eternity possessed a Human like that of the Angels . . . but of infinite essence, thus a Divine Human.

Redemption i. 7. There are four essentials of the Church,—the Knowledge of God, the Knowledge of the goods of charity, the Knowledge of the Truths of faith, and a life according to them.

Trinity ii. These three, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, are the three essentials of the one God . . .

1276. Their situation is constant, nor is it varied to eternity.

1327³. The profanation of what is holy is attended with eternal damnation. 2520^e.

1414². That which a man derives from the father remains to eternity.

1568². The things which are discordant with the eternal life, that is, with the spiritual and celestial life, which is the eternal life, if not removed in the life of the body, are removed in the other life; and if they cannot be removed, the man can never be otherwise than unhappy to eternity.

3404². The Divine is infinite as to being, and eternal as to manifesting; and that which is finite cannot comprehend the . . . eternal, for the eternal is the infinite as to manifesting . . . Wherefore, the things which are infinite and eternal are presented before the Angels in appearances, which are finite; but still in such things as are very far above the sphere of man's comprehension; as, for example, man can never have any idea of eternity except from time; and because of this incapability, he cannot comprehend what from eternity is, thus what the Divine was before time or before the world was created; and so long as there is in his thought anything of idea from time, if he thinks about from eternity, he must necessarily fall into errors from which he cannot be extricated; but to the Angels, who are not in the idea of time, but in the idea of state, it is given to perceive this perfectly well; for eternity with them is not an eternity of time, but an eternity of state without the idea of time. 8325².

3701. For in the Lord everything is infinite and eternal; infinite relatively to being, and eternal to manifesting.

3854³. (Consequences going on to eternity. See CONSEQUENCE.)

—^e. As the Lord has foreseen from eternity what a man would be, and what he will be to eternity, it is evident that Providence is present in the smallest things . . .

3938. See BLESS—*bear*e.

—². The being of man is nothing but a recipient of the eternal which proceeds from the Lord . . . The reception of life is that of which manifesting is predicated.

—³. The happiness of eternal life is what, in the supreme sense, Eternity corresponds to, which Eternity is from the Divine being of the Lord.

3998. In the supreme sense, 'yesterday' = from eternity; 'to-day' = eternity; and 'to-morrow' = to eternity; for the times mentioned in the Word = states . . . and with the Lord there are no states, but everything there is eternal and infinite.

4180⁵. He had been the Light itself from eternity . . .

4379. He is continually being conceived and born . . . in the other life to eternity. 5122³. 5202⁴. 5354³. 8326^e.

4383. Each and all things are foreseen by the Lord, what their quality will be to eternity.

4493⁵. If the internals (of Hamor and Shechem) had been closed up, they would have perished to eternity.

4552. Eternal rejection. Sig. . . 'Under an oak'=to eternity. Ex.

4601³. The things which are thus conjoined can never be separated to eternity, wherefore the deepest Hell awaits them.

4609. 'Asher,' in the supreme sense, =Eternity; in the internal sense, the happiness of eternal life.

4747². For the things which are once confirmed in both doctrine and life at the same time, remain to eternity. Ex.

4901^e. Therefore it is said of the Lord that He is 'the Last and the First' . . . and by this, in the relative sense, is signified what is perpetual; and in the supreme sense, what is eternal.

4926³. 'To build according to the days of Eternity' (Amos ix. 11)=according to the state of the Church in ancient times.

5110³. This Divine, or this Jehovah in Heaven, is the Lord from eternity.

5116². Universal nature . . . is a representation of the eternal and the infinite; of the eternal from propagation even to eternity . . .

5264². Providence, being from the Divine, has in it the eternal and the infinite; the eternal, because it regards neither a terminus from which nor a terminus to which . . . That in each and all things which the Lord does there is what is infinite and what is eternal, will be illustrated by examples elsewhere. 5503.

5309. To foresee is to Know from eternity to eternity.

5398². Man is such evil, that to eternity he cannot be fully delivered, even from one sin . . .

5663³. It is this Man that the Lord . . . united to the Divine Itself, as He had been united from eternity; for from eternity He was one.

6232². The Angels are being perfected to eternity . . .

6239². Eternity is predicated of the Most Ancient Church, because it was in the good of love to the Lord, of which good eternity is predicated because it is immediately from the Lord. 'The generations of Eternities' (Is. li. 9)=the goods thence.

—⁵. 'Eternity' is predicated of Judah (Joel iv. 20), because by Judah is represented the Celestial Church.

—⁶. 'Eternity' (Is. li. 8) is predicated of the good of love; for 'justice' is said of it.

—⁷. Unless 'eternity' (Ps. cxlv. 13) were predicated of what is celestial; and 'generation,' of what is spiritual . . . it would be a useless repetition.

6280. This is the Divine Human from eternity. (See DIVINE HUMAN, here.)

6435⁹. 'The mountains of Eternity' (Hab. iii. 6)=the good of love which was of the Most Ancient Church. . .

When this Church is understood in the Word, being the most ancient one, there is sometimes added 'Eternity.'

6491. That the Providence of the Lord . . . regards what is eternal. Examp. 8478⁴. 8560. 10775^e.

6573. According to order from eternity. Sig.

6648². In the other life (the growth of good and truth) is immense, and this perpetually to eternity.

6888. In the Word, it is said 'to eternity,' and 'to generation of generations' . . . because 'eternity' is predicated of Divine good; and 'generation of generations,' of Divine truth.

6983. Not from eternity. Sig.

— In the Divine . . . instead of time, there is eternity. Infinity and eternity are the two things to which correspond the times and spaces which are in the world; and the states as to being and as to manifesting which are in the Heavens.

6984. 'From now,' or from to-day=eternity, thus to eternity, because it involves the time following.

7212. The Lord's life there to eternity. Sig. . . (For) everything which is given as an inheritance, is the perpetual possession of him to whom it is given, in Heaven the eternal one, because they live there to eternity.

7541³. When they are elevated into Heaven, they are afterwards perfected to eternity. But they who are cast into Hell . . . endure evils which are continually worse, until they dare not do evil to any one; and they afterwards remain in Hell to eternity . . .

7931. 'To keep this word even to eternity' (Ex. xii. 24)=that all this must be observed hereafter.

8174. 'Ye shall see them again no more for ever'=that the falsities which are once removed shall be removed to eternity.

8331. 'Jehovah shall reign for ever and to Eternity' (Ex. xv. 18)=that the Lord alone is the God of Heaven and earth. Ex.

8495. The conjunction of good and truth to eternity. Sig.

8637. (It is necessary to learn from revelation) that man will live to eternity; if he has lived well, in Heaven; and if evilly, in Hell.

8717². God sees all things, and knows all things from eternity; and provides all things to eternity.

—³. Not considering, that the Divine blessing consists in being happy to eternity, and that the Lord regards momentary things . . . no otherwise than as means to eternal ones . . .

8783. 'And also believe in thee to eternity' (Ex. xix. 9)=that there may be the faith of truth which shall be permanent.

8939. There is no proportion between what is temporary and what is eternal . . . The infinite as to time is the eternal.

8991. 'He shall serve him perpetually'=to eternity . . . It is said to eternity, because they who do what is good from the obedience of faith, and not from the affection of charity . . . in the other life can never be brought to a state of good . . . Wherefore . . . they remain such to eternity.

[A.] 9334°. The regeneration of man in the world is only a plane for the perfecting of his life to eternity. 9452.

9683. The life in the world remains with everyone to eternity.

9715°. For he who once conquers the Hells, conquers them to eternity.

9787°. For everything which the Lord ordains, that is, provides, with man and Angel, is eternal.

9788. 'An age' = what is eternal.

9789. What is eternal in the Spiritual Kingdom. Sig.

—'. 'Generations' = what is eternal. Ex. and Ill.

—°. 'Eternity' is predicated of the Divine Celestial or good; and 'generation,' of the Divine Spiritual or truth.

9888. 'Overagainst its faces' = to eternity. (For) that which is overagainst the faces there, is in the Lord's perpetual view, thus is preserved to eternity.

10048°. The infinite relatively to duration is the eternal. Hence it is that whatever the Lord disposes and ordains is eternal . . . There are in man external, internal, and inmost things; and all these are disposed and ordained simultaneously and successively to the reception of things that follow, to eternity.

10204. 'In your generations' = to eternity with those who are in faith from love.

10243°. Unless the Natural is purified and cleansed with man while he lives in the world, it cannot be purified afterwards to eternity; for such as the Natural of man is when he dies, such it remains. Ex.

10248. 'It shall be to them the statute of an age' = an eternal law of order . . .

—'. See AGE=saculum.

10284°. Man is such, and remains such to eternity, as is his love.

10315°. Many in that (Third) Earth believe that their spirits have existed from eternity . . .

10409°. The goods, happinesses, and felicities which are . . . provided for man by the Divine, are eternal ones, and have no end. . . The temporary to the eternal, as the finite of time to its infinite, has no proportion. That which lasts to eternity is, but that which has an end relatively is not . . . —°.

10579°. This was the Lord from eternity. Ex.

10591. To be conjoined with God is to live to eternity.

10596. Hence such as a man's love and such as his faith has been when he lived in the world, such does his life remain to eternity . . .

10620. 'Keeping goodness to thousands' = to eternity. . . 'To thousands' = in perpetuity and to eternity. Refs.

10749. Hence it is evident, that those who come into Hell remain there to eternity; and that those who come into Heaven remain there to eternity.

H. 39°. (It is from possessing this Inmost) that man lives to eternity.

167. As the Angels have not any notion of time, they have a different idea of eternity from that of men of the Earth. By eternity the Angels perceive infinite state, and not infinite time. I was once thinking about eternity, and through the idea of time I could perceive what to eternity is, that it is what is without end; but I could not perceive what from eternity is, thus neither what God was doing before creation from eternity. On this causing me anxiety, I was elevated into the sphere of Heaven, and thus into the perception in which the Angels are concerning eternity, and then I was enlightened that eternity is not to be thought of from time, but from state, and that then what from eternity is perceived; which, also, took place with me. T.31°. M.328°.

363. His dominant affection or love remains with every man after death; it is not extirpated to eternity. Ex.

414. They who are in Heaven are continually advancing to the spring-time of life . . . and this to eternity . . .

419. I saw that the extent of the uninhabited Heaven is so great, that it cannot be filled to eternity . . .

469. Through this, the Rational (of Spirits and Angels) is continually being cultivated, and this to eternity.

—°. With every Spirit and Angel there remains the affection, as to both magnitude and quality, which he had in the world; and this is afterwards perfected through infilling, which also takes place to eternity; for there is nothing which cannot be infilled to eternity; for every thing can be infinitely varied . . .

477. There is a reigning love which remains with man after death, nor is it ever changed to eternity.

480. That man after death remains to eternity such as he is as to his will or reigning love. Gen.art.

—°. Hence it is, that man remains to eternity as his life of love has been in the world.

501. Wherefore, such as a man is as to his interiors, such he remains to eternity.

N. 305°. That the Divine Human from eternity was the Divine truth in Heaven . . . Refs.

—°. That this was the Son of God born from eternity. Refs.

J. 13. That every Divine work regards what is infinite and eternal. Gen.art.

25. That every man after the life in the world lives to eternity. Gen.art.

—°. The spiritual man, when separated from the natural, remains such as he is to eternity; for the state of man cannot be changed after death. Moreover, the Spiritual of every man is in conjunction with the Divine . . . and that which can be thus conjoined with the Divine, to eternity cannot die; for the Divine is with him, and conjoins him with itself.

—°. (How it is that the evil also live to eternity.) Ex.

64°. Their lot after death, although it is to remain to eternity, they account of slight value.

L. 30. That the Lord from eternity is Jehovah. Gen.art. Ill.

S. 12°. 'Death' (the rider on the pale horse) = eternal damnation.

F. 35. He thus keeps Hell . . . in obedience to Him to eternity.

W. 36. In every Divine work there is a union of love and wisdom; from this comes its perpetuity, nay, its Eternity.

76. He who . . . cannot from some perception think of God apart from time, is quite unable to perceive eternity otherwise than as an eternity of time; and then he cannot but rave in thought concerning God from eternity . . . From this idea he cannot be extricated, except by the spiritual or angelic idea about eternity, which is apart from time; and when it is apart from time, the eternal and the Divine are the same. The Divine is the Divine in itself, and not from itself. The Angels say that they can indeed perceive God from eternity, but in no wise nature from eternity . . . Being in itself is life itself, which is the Divine love of the Divine wisdom, and the Divine wisdom of the Divine love. This is eternity to the Angels; thus abstracted from time . . .

156. The creation of the universe . . . cannot be said to have taken place . . . from time to time, thus progressively and successively; but from eternity and infinity; not from an eternity of time, because there is no such thing, but from an eternity not of time, for this is the same as the Divine . . . T. 31³.

—e. When it is said that . . . (an eternity of time is not possible, everyone affirms it from reason), because this is an infinity of time. If one say, to eternity, this is comprehended from time; but not so, from eternity, unless time is removed.

240². In these two faculties the Lord is with every man . . . Hence it is that every man, both good and evil, lives to eternity.

318. That in all the forms of uses there is some image of what is infinite and what is eternal. Gen.art. P. 56.

P. 32³. By drawing nearer, this conjunction (of man with the Lord) may be augmented to eternity; and with the Angels it actually is augmented to eternity . . .

46. That in all it does the Divine Providence regards what is infinite and what is eternal. Gen.art. 55.

48. That the Infinite in itself, and the Eternal in itself, is the same as the Divine. Gen.art.

— By what is eternal the Angels understand the Divine manifesting.

—². There cannot be an infinity of time which is eternity a quo, because what is infinite is without first and last, that is, without boundaries.

51. From thought abstracted from time and space, there is a comprehension . . . of the Divine from eternity; but none at all from thought in which there inheres an idea from space and time. (Thus) it is possible to think about God from eternity, but never about nature from eternity.

52. That the Infinite and the Eternal in itself cannot but regard what is infinite and eternal from itself in finite things. Gen.art.

59². As they who are in the Divine think from the Lord, they think from what is eternal while they think from what is present; saying to themselves, What is that which is not eternal? Is not what is temporary comparatively as nothing? . . . It is otherwise with what is eternal; this alone is, because its being never comes to an end. To think in this way is to think from what is eternal at the same time as one is thinking from what is present; and when a man so thinks and at the same time so lives, the Divine proceeding with him . . . in all its progression, regards the state of his eternal life in Heaven, and leads to that. In every man, both evil and good, the Divine regards what is eternal.

60. That an image of the Infinite and the Eternal stands forth in the angelic Heaven. Gen.art.

64. That to regard the Infinite and the Eternal in forming the angelic Heaven . . . is the inmost of the Divine Providence. Gen.art.

99². The adult who does not come into freedom itself and rationality itself in the world, can never come into them after death; for then the state of his life remains to eternity such as it had been in the world.

214. That the Divine Providence regards eternal things, and temporary things no otherwise than in proportion as they agree with eternal things. Gen.art.

215. By eternal things are meant those which do not perish and cease with time, thus not with life in the world.

216. That eternal things relate to spiritual honours and wealth, which are those of love and wisdom, in Heaven. Gen.art.

217⁴. That when dignities and wealth are blessings, they are spiritual and eternal . . .

218. That temporary and eternal things are separated by man, but that they are conjoined by the Lord. Gen.art.

219. What temporary things are, and what eternal things. Ex.

—². That man is in himself temporary, and that the Lord is in Himself eternal; and that therefore from man there can proceed only what is temporary, and from the Lord only what is eternal.

—⁴. That temporary things separate from themselves eternal things; and that eternal things conjoin with themselves temporary ones.

220. That the conjunction of temporary and eternal things with man is the Divine Providence of the Lord. Gen.art. —⁸.

—². That it is of the Divine Providence that by death man puts off . . . temporary things, and puts on . . . eternal things.

—⁴. That through His Divine Providence the Lord conjoins Himself . . . with temporary things through eternal things according to uses.

318¹¹. That everything confirmed in the will and at the same time by the understanding endures to eternity; but not that which is only confirmed by the understanding.

319³. With the good these spirals turn forwards, but with the evil backwards . . . and as when the turning is once induced it cannot be reversed, it is evident, that such as a man is when he dies such he remains to eternity . . .

324. That every man is created to live to eternity.

— He who can receive the Divine, so as to see and perceive it in himself, cannot be otherwise than conjoined with the Lord, and, through this conjunction, live to eternity.

[P. 324.]⁴. In Heaven they remain to eternity (in the age of early manhood).

333^o. All the present is to Him eternal.

334. The operation of the Divine Providence is said to last to eternity, because every Angel is perfected in wisdom to eternity; but everyone according to the degree of the affection of good and truth in which he was when he left the world: it is this degree which is perfected to eternity . . .

335^o. As this goes on to eternity, there is no last or ultimate which is the close.

R. 611. At last they find a Society which perfectly agrees with their affections, and there they dwell to eternity.

765^o. They thus become mere falsities as to the understanding, and so remain to eternity.

864. 'They shall be tormented day and night for ages of ages'—that they . . . were cast into Hell, where they will be interiorly infested by the love of their falsity and by the lusts of their evil constantly to eternity.

937^e. For such as a man is in the world as to the spirit, such he remains to eternity; with the sole difference, that his state becomes more perfect if he has lived well . . .

961^e. (I said), By the birth of the Son of God from eternity, I understand His birth foreseen from eternity and provided in time.

M. 18^e. The delight of the love of uses eternizes these delights.

38. He perceives his happinesses—faustitates—ascending in a like degree (with marriage love); and these constant to eternity.

46. The reigning love . . . remains with the man to eternity, and together with it the subordinate loves.

132^o. The appearance that love and wisdom . . . are in man as his, causes man . . . to be able to be conjoined with God, and thus live to eternity.

—⁶. How can man live to eternity, unless he is conjoined with an eternal God?

134^e. Thus be conjoined with the Lord, and thereby become man, and live to eternity.

162. That with those who are in love truly conjugal, this conjunction becomes more and more inward to eternity.

185^e. Because eternity is the infinite of time.

216. That those who are in love truly conjugal, in marriage regard eternity . . .

—². (The effect on two married partners in Heaven from whom the idea of eternity in relation to marriage was taken away.)

328^o. (I said), You can think of the essence and omnipresence of God from eternity, that is, of God before the creation of the world, because you think of the essence of God from eternity apart from time, and of His omnipresence apart from space . . .

524^o. I can therefore testify for certain, that everyone is there explored . . . and that the life which he has contracted in the world remains with him to eternity . . .

T. 31. That the infinity of God . . . relatively to times is called Eternity . . . but still there is nothing of time in His Eternity. Gen.art.

— . The reason the infinity of God relatively to times is called Eternity, is that to eternity is predicated of things progressive, which are measured by time, without end. Examp.

—². In Heaven . . . by Eternity, the Angels perceive the Divinity as to manifesting; also . . . by Eternity they perceive the Divinity as to wisdom: the reason is that from the Divinity the Angels abstract . . . times; and then these notions result. But as man cannot think otherwise than from ideas taken from such things as are of space and time, he cannot perceive anything . . . of His Eternity before times; nay, when he wants to do so, it is as if his mind fell into a swoon . . .

—⁴. There appear two statues . . . at one extremity of the Spiritual World, by which those who think vain things about God from eternity seem to themselves to be swallowed . . .

49. Eternity, etc., pertain to the Divine being.

79^e. They asked those who were in that prison, whether they would live so to eternity. Some there replied, We have been here some ages, and we shall remain for ages of ages . . .

295. The celestial sense of the (first) commandment is, that Jehovah the Lord is infinite, immense, and eternal . . .

415^e. As the spiritual life has no end, it is eternal; wherefore being can be predicated of it.

504⁷. Reciprocal conjunction with God causes . . . that after death man lives to eternity . . .

718. With every man of sound mind, there is the faculty of receiving wisdom from the Lord . . . to eternity; and also of receiving love . . . to eternity.

D. 1126. The only thing they then think about is Eternity . . . I wanted to know from them how their thought could be fixed on Eternity alone, unless at the same time on eternal life. But they said that they could not then meditate on anything but eternity, and that it involved the same as eternal life. They tried to induce . . . the state of their Society on my . . . mind . . .

2583. As man supposes . . . that the soul of man will be tormented to eternity, this is evident,—that man is condemned to eternal suffering; for he has deserved it; but of the Lord's mercy damnation is at last taken away . . .

2679. What is eternal was represented as an abyss without a bottom . . .

2793. Punishments . . . do not alter or change the nature, which remains to eternity as contracted in the life of the body . . .

2826. There was one who supposed . . . that infernal punishments would last to eternity . . .

2876. It has been decreed from eternity . . .

2878. What are forty or fifty years . . . to Eternity ?

3478. Certain corporeal Spirits . . . could not perceive time from eternity; for that there is an eternity to come they could perceive from the fact that there is no end to time; thus that it is time without end; but that there has been time from eternity they cannot conceive . . .

3958. (I said) that no words are applicable to the Lord except eternal and infinite; and that only the eternal and infinite Is . . . And, as nothing but eternal things can be predicated of Him, the past, the present, and the future are all eternal. They wondered that the present should be called eternal, but as (the above) is the case, although no idea of it can possibly be perceived, it follows that our present is to Him eternal.

3973. On what is eternal. As the infinite Divine is not of space, so neither is the eternal of time. . . That a kind of idea of the Divine eternal is insinuated into the Angels by the Lord, is evident from the fact . . . that they have no idea of past and future things, but that both past and future things are in their present . . . Neither is there in their idea anything of old age or of death, but only of life; wherefore there is none of time; but in all their present there is as what is eternal.

4204. On those who think that there is an origin to all things, thus that God is not eternal.

— . They who are in the idea of time cannot think otherwise than by means of time, that eternity is nothing but time; when yet with the Lord each and all things are eternal, and the idea of time cannot agree with the idea of eternity.

—^e. By this idea it was impressed, that whether nature is eternal . . . or the Lord, the anxiety begins to be set at rest.

5552. (Thus) while man lives in the world, he acquires for himself a fixed plane, and this cannot be changed; whence it is, that man remains to eternity such as he has become in the world. He has this plane in him, but it is completely quiescent; but still his interiors cease in it.

5830^e. I then clearly perceived that he who once comes into Hell remains there to eternity . . .

6110⁶. Unless what is eternal is thought of, that is, an eternal conjunction, there is no wife, but a concubine; and from the idea of what is not eternal, marriage love perishes.

D. Min. 4609. On the quality of the idea of . . . the eternal from the idea . . . of time.

4652. The smallest movements of man's life have a series of consequences to eternity . . . Hence it may be evident, that the eternal of the Lord . . . is from the Lord . . .

E. 23. From Him who is the all in all of Heaven and the Church, from eternity to eternity. Sig. . . For all times in the Word = states of life . . . Therefore, when the Lord is treated of, they = infinite state; and infinite state, as to time, is eternity. . . Many things might be said concerning eternity, which is of the Lord alone; but they would not be understood by the natural man, whose thoughts are chiefly founded on time, space, and matter, when yet eternity does not include such things in it; and therefore if a man could think about eternity as the Angels do, he might come into some idea of it, and thus comprehend what from eternity is . . . also what the Divine foresight is, that it is in every single thing from eternity; and what the Divine Providence is, that it is in every single thing to eternity; and therefore that whatever proceeds from the Lord is from eternity to eternity; and that unless this were the case, Heaven and the universe would not subsist.

—². Eternal cannot be expressed in Heaven by any other word than Divine. The reason is, that what is infinite cannot fall into an angelic idea, and still less into a human one, and the eternal is the infinite manifesting from the infinite being; but this falls only into the idea that the eternal, which is the Divine as to manifesting, is the all in all of Heaven and the Church . . .

112². Such as is the determination of the interiors of a man's mind, such does he remain after death to eternity . . .

128. For man remains to eternity such as he is (at the end of his life in the world); namely, such as his life has been to that period.

193. After death, man remains to eternity in that state of life which he has acquired in the world; wherefore, he must watch.

— . All things which are in the spirit of man remain with him to eternity . . . Those things remain in the spirit of a man which he has thought from himself, consequently, those things which he has thought from his own love when he was alone . . .

194³. 'Thou shalt not know in what hour I will come upon thee' = . . . thou art ignorant of the state of life that will remain to eternity; for such as is the state of a man's past life up to its end, such does the man remain to eternity. Ill.

—^e. (Note) that man remains to eternity such as he is as to his whole life up to the end, and not at all such as he is at the hour of death . . .

221. 'He shall no longer go out' = that they shall be therein to eternity.

289^e. The reason 'for ever and ever' = what is eternal, is that in the world these words = times as to all their duration; but in Heaven . . . they = what is eternal.

359. The removal of evils and thence of falsities at the end of life and afterwards to eternity. Sig. . . For he who fights against evils and falsities, and conquers them in the world up to the end of life, conquers them to eternity; for such as a man, from his past life, is at the end of life, such he remains to eternity.

383. Eternal damnation. Sig.

— . 'Hell,' here, = eternal damnation, because they who once come into Hell, remain there to eternity; wherefore, also, it is said 'and Hell followed with him;' for 'to follow with him' = to remain in it; namely, in damnation to eternity.

468. It is natural to say 'for ages of ages,' but spiritual to say to eternity.

629⁹. 'The mountains of Eternity' (Hab. iii. 6) = the Celestial Church, and love to the Lord.

[E.] 65⁵. Lest there be a representative of eternal damnation. Sig.

659²⁰. 'The seed of the malicious shall not be mentioned to eternity' (Is. xiv. 20) = eternal dissociation and separation.

701⁷. 'Even to eternity will I make firm thy seed' (Ps. lxxxix. 29) = the Eternity of the Divine truth from Him. 'To eternity will I keep mercy for him' (ver. 28) = the Eternity of the Divine good from Him.

860. Hence it was evident, that such as a man is when he dies, such he remains to eternity.

870. The eternal is the Divine as to manifesting.

972. This being is meant by the eternal; for the eternal, when predicated of the Lord, is understood in Heaven without any idea of time . . . For, in the angelic idea, the eternal is the state of the Divine manifestation . . . The infinite manifesting, which, also, is the eternal, is the Divine proceeding.

1029¹⁴. 'It shall not be inhabited to eternity' (Is. xiii. 20) = its destruction to eternity . . .

1087³. Hence it is, that such as a man is in the world, such he remains to eternity . . .

1130³. As God is uncreate, He is also eternal. Ex.

1131². The natural idea of eternity is from time; but the spiritual idea of it is not from time.

1162^e. The Inmost . . . through which man lives to eternity.

1220³. They fall into Hell; nor can they be taken out to eternity.

Ath. 78. They were asked whether they were able to think of His having been born from eternity . . .

117. The reason the Lord says, that He was with the Father as they are from eternity, is that in the world He was the Divine truth, which is the Divine proceeding; whence it is evident what is the Son of God from eternity, and the Son of God that was born. No mortal can comprehend what born from eternity means in any other sense. 149.

D. Wis. viii⁷. This is why Spirits and Angels can subsist and live to eternity. Ex.

Can. God 3. This very God is from eternity; and thence is Eternity itself.

iii. 5. The infinity of God correspondently to times is called Eternity.

6. Still, there is nothing of time in His Eternity.

7. By the Eternity of God is meant His Divinity as to manifesting.

9. Angels and men . . . cannot comprehend His immensity and Eternity, as they are in themselves.

Ethiopia. Aethiopia.

Cush. Kusch.

Ethiopian. Aethiops.

A. 116. 'The land of Cush' (Gen.ii.13)=the mind or faculty. The things of this river relate to the understanding, to which belong the Knowledges of good and truth.

117. The land of Cush or Ethiopia abounded with gold, precious stones, and spices, which signify good, truth, and the grateful things thence, such as are those of the Knowledges of love and faith.

— The like things are meant by 'Cush' or 'Ethiopia' as by 'Sheba.' III.

— 'The Ethiopians' (Dan.xi.43)=Knowledges.

349°. 'Ethiopia' (Zeph.iii.10)=those who possess celestial things, which are love, charity, and the works of charity.

1132. They who cultivated the Knowledges of spiritual things are 'the sons of Cush' (Gen.x.7).

1160. 'The sons of Ham' (ver.6)=faith separated from charity. 'Cush, Mizraim, Put, and Canaan' were so many nations, by which in the internal sense are signified the Knowledges, knowledges, and worship which are of faith separated from charity. 1163.

1163. By 'Cush' or 'Ethiopia,' in the Word, are signified the interior Knowledges of the Word, by means of which they confirm false principles. . . By 'Cush' are also signified simply the interior Knowledges of the Word. 1164, Fully III.

1169. 'The sons of Cush' (ver.7)=those who had not internal worship; but the Knowledges of faith, in the possession of which they made religion to consist.

1171². 'Cush and Seba' (Is.xliii.3)=the spiritual things of faith.

— 'The merchandize of Cush and of the Sabeans' (Is.xlv.14)=the Knowledges of spiritual things, which are of service to those who believe in the Lord.

1172°. 'The sons of Cush'=the Knowledges of spiritual things; and 'the sons of Raamah,' the Knowledges of celestial things.

1174. 'Cush' (ver.8)=the interior Knowledges of spiritual and celestial things.

1175°. Such worship is called 'Nimrod;' and it is born from the Knowledges which are 'Cush;' and these from faith separated from charity, which faith is 'Ham.'

1176. 'Cush begat Nimrod'=that those who had the Knowledges of interior things instituted such worship. . . The Knowledges of interior things are those things which are called doctrinal. Examp.

1195°. 'Cush and Put' (Jer.xlvi.9)=Knowledges.

1238². (Ethiopia was a country of the Ancient Church.) 2835⁵.

3242°. 'The tents of Cushan' (Hab.iii.7)=a religiosity from evil.

3540. As these external truths . . . are from evil . . . they are compared to 'the Ethiopian' or negro, and 'his skin' (Jer.xiii.23).

6723. 'Beyond the rivers of Cush' (Is.xviii.1)=to the Knowledges through which they confirm false principles.

9340°. 'The sons of the Ethiopians' (Amos ix.7)=those who are in the Knowledges of good and truth, which they apply to confirm evils and falsities.

10252°. The knowledge of correspondences was the chief one in those times with the Arabians, the Ethiopians, and with others in the east; wherefore, in the Word, by 'Arabia,' 'Ethiopia,' and 'the sons of the east,' are meant those who are in the Knowledges of heavenly things. Refs.

S. 117. From these Words, religions things emanated . . . through Egypt and Ethiopia into the kingdoms of Africa.

D. 5946°. I was afterwards led in the spirit to others in Africa, to a tract which is known to Europeans, and in the maps is called Ethiopia, where they dwell in tents, a good nation.

E. 240°. See ASSYRIA.

304²². 'Beyond the rivers of Cush'=as to Knowledges themselves from the sense of the letter of the Word, which are falsified.

406°. 'Cush' (Is.xx.4)=the delight which is favoured by the natural man.

—¹⁵. By 'the isles of the nations' and by 'the Cushites—Kuschios' (Zeph.ii.11,12) are signified those who indeed are in falsities, but not in the falsities of evil; and, abstractedly, falsities, but not the falsities of evil.

439°. 'Ethiopia'=the natural man as to the Knowledges of good and truth.

532°. 'Egypt' (Is.xx.3)=the external or Natural as to what is scientific; and 'Cush'=the external or Natural as to worship; and when these are devoid of the internal Spiritual, they are also devoid of truth and good . . .

654²¹. 'The fat ones out of Egypt' (Ps.lxviii.31)=the gentiles who are in the affection of knowing truths; and 'Cush'=those who draw them in from the delight of the natural man.

780°. 'Shall the Ethiopian change his skin'=that evil cannot change its nature; 'the Ethiopian'=evil in its form, because he is all black.

A. 1947⁴. The sacrifices that were spontaneous, votive, pacific or eucharistic. 2180².

3880⁸. The sacrifices of confession . . . were thanksgivings, and in a universal sense, were called eucharistic and retributory sacrifices, which were of two kinds, namely, of confession and votive. Ex. —⁹.

8936. 'Thou shalt sacrifice upon it thy burnt-offerings and thine offerings of thanksgiving' (Ex.xx.24)=worship in special according to the spiritual life of each person.

10097. The pacific or eucharistic sacrifices were voluntary sacrifices, and the things which are voluntary are from the freedom of man, (thus) from the love and from the will . . .

Eunuch. Eunuchus.

A. 394. They are called 'eunuchs' (Matt.xix.12) who are in the heavenly marriage; 'those born from the womb,' who are as the celestial Angels; 'those made by men,' who are as the spiritual Angels; 'those who have made themselves,' who are as angelic Spirits, who [act] not so much from charity, but from obedience.

5081². 'The eunuch' (Is.lvi.3)=the natural man as to good. . . For the Lord's Church is internal and external . . . Those who are natural, and yet in good, are 'eunuchs.'

M. 151. That chastity cannot be predicated of eunuchs so born, or of eunuchs so made. Gen.art.

156^e. By 'the eunuchs who have made themselves eunuchs for the sake of the Kingdom of God,' are meant spiritual eunuchs, who are those that in marriages sustain from the evils of whoredoms. That Italian eunuchs are not meant, is evident.

E. 710²⁸. Marriages, with the Jewish nation . . . understood in a spiritual sense, were adulteries . . . Hence the Lord spoke about eunuchs, by whom are meant those who do not want to enter into marriage . . . with the affection of evil, because so the understanding of truth and good would be perverted and dissipated: thus by 'eunuchs' are meant both the married and the unmarried with whom the understanding of truth and good is conjoined with the affection of truth and good. The reason they are called 'eunuchs' is that they are devoid of what is lascivious . . .

—²⁹. The marriage of the understanding of truth and good with the affection of truth and good . . . exists in a threefold degree . . . (This marriage) with the celestial, is meant by 'the eunuchs who are born eunuchs in the mother's womb.' Ex. . . But (this marriage) with the spiritual, is meant by 'the eunuchs who are made eunuchs by men.' Ex. . . And (this marriage) with the natural, is meant by 'the eunuchs who make themselves eunuchs.' Ex.

Euphrates. Euphrates.

Phrath. Phrath.

A. 118. 'Phrath' or 'Euphrates' (Gen.ii.14)=knowledge, which is the ultimate or boundary.

120. As by 'Egypt,' so by 'the Euphrates,' are signified knowledges or scientifics, and also the sensuous things from which are scientifics. Ill.

—^e. For the Euphrates was the boundary towards Assyria, up to which was the dominion of Israel, as the Scientific of the memory is the boundary of the intelligence and wisdom of the spiritual and celestial man. The same is signified by these words which were said to Abraham: 'To thy seed will I give this Land, from the river of Egypt, even to the great river, the river Euphrates' (Gen.xv.18). These two boundaries signify like things. E.654¹².

130. With him who wants to be wise from the world . . . his river Euphrates is the whole of his Scientific, which is damned.

1585². The ultimate things, or boundaries, represented the external man. The boundaries of Canaan were . . . in general the two rivers Euphrates and Jordan, and also the sea. Hence the Euphrates and the Jordan represented external things.

—³. That the river Euphrates, being a boundary, represented the sensuous and scientific things which are of the external man, was shown before.

1866. 'From the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Phrath' (Gen.xv.18)=the extension of spiritual and celestial things: 'to the river of Egypt'=the extension of spiritual things; 'to the river Phrath'=the extension of celestial things.

—². That the river Euphrates=the extension of celestial things, may be evident from the countries which that river bounds and separates from the Land of Canaan, by which are also signified the scientifics and Knowledges of celestial things; but here, as it is called 'the river,' and 'the great river,' it is nothing but celestial things and their Knowledges . . .

369⁵. The river Euphrates is one boundary of it, namely of spiritual and celestial things; and the Great Sea . . . the other.

4112. Aram or Syria was separated by . . . the Euphrates from the Land of Canaan.

4116. 'He passed over the river' (Gen.xxxi.21)=a state where there is conjunction; (for) 'the river,' here, the Euphrates, =conjunction, namely, with the Divine. The reason this river has this signification here, is that it was the boundary of the Land of Canaan on that side; and all the boundaries of Canaan represented that which is last or ultimate, and that which is first. Ex. . . As Jacob was now entering, this river was the first boundary, consequently conjunction, in the supreme sense, with the Divine.

—^e. As all things in Canaan were representative . . . so were the rivers which bounded it, as the river of Egypt, the Euphrates, and the Jordan.

4454^e. Canaan (in the time of the Most Ancient Church) was all the land from the river of Egypt to the river Euphrates (Gen.xv.18).

9341. 'From the wilderness even to the river' (Ex. xxiii.31)=from the delight of the Sensuous even to the good and truth of the Rational. . . The Euphrates, which, here, is 'the river' =the good and truth of the Rational. The reason the Euphrates has this signification, is that Assyria was there, which =the Rational. This is meant by 'the Euphrates,' where it is said 'from the wilderness to the Euphrates,' also 'from the river of Egypt to the Euphrates.' Ill.

—³. But something else is signified by 'the Euphrates' when it is regarded from the middle of the Land of Canaan as its extremity on the one side, or as that which closes it on the one part; then by this river is signified that which is the ultimate of the Lord's Kingdom, that is, that which is the ultimate of Heaven and the Church as to rational good and truth. . . Therefore 'the Euphrates' =such truths and such goods as are of the Sensuous, and which correspond to the truths and goods of the Rational. But as the Sensuous . . . acknowledges nothing as good but that which delights the body, and nothing as truth but that which favours this delight, by 'the river Euphrates' in this sense is signified pleasure originating from the loves of self and of the world and the falsity which confirms it through reasonings from the fallacies of the senses. Ill.

—^e. Here, also, 'the river Euphrates' = truths falsified and goods adulterated through reasonings from fallacies, and from the scientifics thence which favour the loves of self and of the world.

9828⁴. 'The Euphrates' = the extension and the boundary of the celestial things which are of good in its ultimate.

R. 444. 'Loose the four Angels that are bound at the great river Euphrates' (Rev.ix.14)=that external restraints should be removed from them, in order that the interiors of their minds might appear. . . 'The Euphrates,' in the Word =the interior things of the mind of man, which are called rational things, and which, with those who are in truths from good, are full of wisdom; but with those who are in falsities from evil are full of insanity. These are signified in the Word by 'the river Euphrates,' because that river divided the Land of Canaan from Assyria; and the Land of Canaan =the Church; and Assyria, its Rational; and therefore the bounding river =the interior things of the mind, which are called rational things, in both senses. E. 569⁴. 995.

—². That 'the Euphrates' =the interior things of the mind of man coterminous with the spiritual things of his Church, may appear from those passages of the Word where Asshur or Assyria is mentioned.

— . But 'the Euphrates' occurs in the opposite sense, in which it =the interiors full of falsities, and thence of insanities. Ill.

699. 'The sixth Angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates' (Rev.xvi.12)=influx from the Lord into their interior reasonings, by which they confirm themselves in justification by faith alone. 'The great river Euphrates' =interior reasonings; here, the interior reasonings of that Church, by which they confirm justification by faith alone.

791^e. 'The midst of the Euphrates' (Jer.li.63) has a similar signification to the sea, because the Euphrates bounded Assyria, where Babel was, and separated it from the Land of Canaan.

D. 2701. (I dreamed of a field of thick grass) beyond a river; and I perceived that the river was called the Euphrates . . . And in my dream it was replied, that if in our land—within the Euphrates—the land were destroyed, still in that land beyond the Euphrates it would not be destroyed so much.

2702. At last it was opened to me, that the land beyond the Euphrates is those who are in natural and philosophical things, and who want to be confirmed thence concerning spiritual and celestial ones . . . Such thoughts are that abundant grass. . . But still the grass in such a land as is beyond the Euphrates appeared to be useful; whereas, in the lands which are within the Euphrates, namely, with those who do not care for such things, and still believe, nay love; such grass . . . is not useful . . .

E. 406¹⁶. Which boundaries were represented by the rivers Jordan and Euphrates relatively to the Land of Canaan.

410¹⁰. 'The Euphrates' =everything of the Church as to good; here (Jer.xiii.) as to evil.

518¹⁶. 'The river,' here the Euphrates, =the Rational. —¹⁷. 654¹⁷.

—³⁰. 'All the depths of the river (that is, the Euphrates) shall dry up' (Zech.x.11)=that all acute reasonings from Own intelligence shall perish.

—³⁰. 'Asshur' =the Rational; here, the Rational perverted. Hence, its 'river' (Is.viii.7) which was the Euphrates, means ratiocination.

—³⁸. 'The river Euphrates' (Jer.xlvi.6)=false reasonings.

[E.] 569^d. By the river Euphrates is signified the Rational, and thence also ratiocination . . . because it distinguished Assyria from Canaan; and Assyria = the Rational; and Canaan, the Spiritual. Besides the sea, there were three rivers that were boundaries of Canaan . . . and by the river Euphrates is signified the Rational which is with man from knowledges and Knowledges.

—⁵. The river of Egypt or the Nile, and the river of Assyria or the Euphrates, signified the terminations of the Church, and also introductions into the Church.

—⁶. The river of Assyria or the Euphrates signified the Rational, because through the Rational, man is introduced into the Church. Ex.

—⁸. By 'the Angels bound at the river Euphrates' is signified a guard lest the Natural of man should enter into the spiritual things which are of Heaven and the Church . . .

—¹⁰. That the river Euphrates = the Rational, through which is the way from the spiritual man into the natural. Ill.

—¹⁵. As by the river Euphrates is signified the Rational, in the opposite sense ratiocination is signified by it. By ratiocination is here meant thought and argumentation from fallacies and from falsities; but by the Rational is meant thought and argumentation from knowledges and from truths. —¹⁶, Ill. 577³. 654⁴³. A. 1118. Their breathing . . . did not enter the ear of another through the external way, and beat on what is called the drum of the ear, but through a certain way within the mouth, which is now called the Eustachian tube. 7361. D.3322.

7359. The breathing (of the Spirits of Mars) . . . entered through the mouth, and through a way within the mouth, in fact through the Eustachian tube, into the brain.

10587. (The inhabitants of the Fourth Earth) think within themselves, and the ideas of thought are communicated to another by means of a certain gliding into the interiors of the ear, through a way unknown in this Earth, yet known to learned anatomists; for there is a certain channel within the mouth, which is called the Eustachian tube, and which opens into the mouth, and terminates in the chamber of the ear, being encompassed with a thin membrane. Through this channel, the respiratory air glides under a fine delicate sound, and thus the speaking thought is communicated. This is effected by means of the atmosphere.

D. 1541. The speech (of the inhabitants of Mars) is silent speech, being of a more subtle atmosphere, and is directed towards the mouth, into which it enters, and so proceeds through the Eustachian tube, which, as appears, is their organ of hearing. With such a speech did one speak to me . . . It entered through the lips, the fibres of which were disposed so as to receive its diversities; and so it penetrates through the Fallopiian tube, and thus upwards. It is very clearly perceived, and is a far fuller and more perfect speech than that of the ear, for it carries a number of things all at once. 3488.

1658^e. The sound of the speech (of the Spirits of Jupiter) flows in through a different way . . . namely, through the Eustachian tube.

Eve. Chavah, Chajah, Evah.

A. 281. From the life of faith in the Lord (the Most Ancient Church) was called 'Eve,' and 'the mother of everything living.'

291. The first time, when the Church was in the flower of its youth . . . was called 'Eve,' from life.

476. 'Female' = the will . . . wherefore she was called 'Eve,' from life, which belongs to love alone.

P. 313³. By the condemnation of Eve, is signified the condemnation of the voluntary proprium.

R. 239. See ANIMAL.

E. 388²². 'Wild animal' (in the Hebrew) is called chajah, and chajah means life; and the very spiritual life of man is in the affection of truth and good . . . As 'wild animal,' or 'chajah,' in this opposite sense = the affection of truth and good, Eve the wife of Adam is called 'Chavah' from that word . . . 650^o. 725².

1119². Hence it is that it is said of Adam and Eve . . .

De Verbo 14⁵. By Adam's wife is meant the Church, which, because it has life from the Lord, is called 'Eve,' from life . . .

Evening. Vespera, Vespertinus.

A. 22. 'There was evening, and there was morning, day first' (Gen. i. 5) . . . 'The evening' is every preceding state, because it is one of shade, or of falsity and no faith. . . 'Evening,' in general, = all things which are proper to man.

—². As it is 'evening' when there is no faith . . . the time when the Lord comes is called 'evening' (Dan. viii. 26).

28². Concerning the man to be regenerated, in Zechariah: 'There shall be that one day, known to Jehovah, not day, nor night, and it shall be, at the time of evening there shall be light . . . (xiv. 7).

860. (Thus) all regeneration proceeds from evening to morning . . . The evening is here described (Gen. viii. 2, 3).

883. 'The dove returned to him at the time of evening' (ver. 11) = that the goods and truths of faith began to appear a very little. The time of evening is as in the twilight before the morning. . . Evening is a term of regeneration, in fact, of that state of it when he is as yet in the shade, or when as yet very little light appears with him. . . As the evening meant the twilight before the morning, mention is so often made of evening in the Jewish Church; and for the same reason they commenced their sabbaths and feasts from the evening; and Aaron was commanded to kindle the holy lamp in the evening (Ex. xxvii. 21).

1837. The Lord's Church is compared to the times of the day . . . its last state to sunset or evening and the shades which then prevail.

2318. 'There came two Angels to Sodom in the evening' (Gen. xix. 1) = the visitation which precedes judgment. . . That 'evening' = the time of visitation, will be seen below. 2323, Ex.

2323. The state of the Church which is called 'evening,' is when there is no longer any charity, and therefore when there begins to be no faith; thus when the Church ceases to be. This is the evening which is followed by night. It is also when charity, and consequently faith, begins to shine forth, thus when a new Church arises. This evening is the twilight before the morning. Thus 'evening' = both; for it is provided by the Lord, that when a Church ceases to be, a new one arises, and this at the same time . . . This chapter treats of both states of the Church . . . hence it is that it is here said, that 'two Angels came to Sodom in the evening;' and that mention is made of what was done in the evening . . . in the night . . . and in the morning.

[A.2323]^e. Visitation is called 'evening' in Zeph.ii.7.

2335. 'Evening' = the state of the Church which precedes the last one, when there begins to be no faith; and also the visitation which precedes judgment.

2405^e. 'Evening,' here (Ex.xxvii.21) = the twilight before the morning.

3056. 'Near the time of evening' (Gen.xxiv.11) = a state at that time more obscure. . . 'Evening' = what is obscure. For 'evening,' in the Word, = the state which precedes the last state of the Church which is ceasing to be, which is called 'night;' and also the first state of the rising Church, which is called 'morning.' In both senses, it is what is obscure which is signified by 'the evening;' but here, the obscurity which precedes the morning.

3197. 'Towards the evening' (ver.63) = relatively to those things which are beneath. 'Evening' = what is obscure; (for) those things which are beneath with man, namely, those things which are of the natural mind, relatively to those which are above, are obscure . . .

3643. In the Heavens, they are in . . . light as of morning and mid-day, verging also towards evening.

3693. 'The sun setting' = what is in obscurity; for it is then evening, by which is signified what is obscure.

—4. These changes of state (with the Angels) are as . . . evening when the sun is setting . . .

—7. When good and angelic Spirits fall into a state of the love of self and thence into a state of falsity, they are remitted a little into their natural or lower state, and are therein imbued with Knowledges of good and truth as to that thing, which is signified by 'washing themselves with waters in the evening' (Lev.xxii.6; Deut.xxiii.11).

3833. 'It came to pass in the evening' (Gen.xxix.23) = a state as yet obscure. . . The feasts which took place in the evening, that is, the suppers, signified among the ancients . . . the state of initiation which precedes conjunction, which state, relatively to that of conjunction, is obscure . . .

3949. 'Jacob came from the field in the evening' (Gen.xxx.16) = the good of truth in a state of good, but in the obscurity which is characteristic of the Natural.

5270^e. The state when man is apparently deprived of truths, is called in the Word 'desolation,' and is also compared to 'evening,' in which man is before he comes into the morning; wherefore, in the representative Church, the days commenced from the evening.

5576². When the Angels are in the evening, that is, in the state in which the things of intelligence and wisdom are lacking, to the same degree they are relatively not in happiness . . .

5579^e. In the Spiritual World there is evening, or the shade of their day, but after it comes the dawn or the morning . . . They come into that evening, or into spiritual hunger, in order that they may have appetite and longing for truths and goods.

5672. The alternations of enlightenment there are . . . as morning, noon, and evening on earth. States of shade come forth like those in the evening, not from the Sun there . . . but from the proprium of the Angels; for, as they are let into their proprium, so they come into a state of shade or of evening. 6110⁴.

5725². The former is the evening, or autumn, of Spirits.

5962². It is the evening of Spirits and Angels when they are removed from truths; it then appears to them that the Lord is more remote, and that He is hidden from them.

5964. It here treats . . . of removal from the things which are of good and truth, thus from those which are of the Church . . . This state in the Word is signified by 'evening' . . .

6000⁷. The day when it was 'not day, nor night,' was when the Lord was born, for it was then evening, that is, the end of the representatives of the Church. 'The light about the time of evening' = the Divine truth which would then appear.

6110. When it is evening (with the Angels) truths fail, and this even to the daybreak . . .

—6. In Heaven there is no night, but only evening, which is succeeded by the daybreak which precedes the morning.

— . In Hell . . . the evening is anxiety.

6443. 'At the evening he shall divide the prey' (Gen.xlix.27) = their possession in the Lord's Kingdom while as yet they are in obscurity. . . The reason this is said to be done in the evening, is that those who are elevated into Heaven are at first in obscurity . . .

7174. They said that they saw a light much clearer and purer than they had ever seen before, and that a greater light could not possibly be seen; it was then the time of evening here.

7193³. States of temptations and of infestations, also states of desolations, are there evening and night.

7218². When there is a state of evening and night with Spirits, their thought is in a state of compulsion . . .

the first-born there were given to slaughter. That this is called 'evening,' is evident from 'Thou shalt sacrifice the passover in the evening, when the sun has set, at the stated time of thy going forth out of Egypt' (Deut.xvi.6).

—³. In the Word passim, 'evening' is mentioned, and by it is signified the last time of the Church, and also its first time; the last with those among whom the Church is ceasing, and the first with those among whom the Church is beginning. Hence, primarily, by 'evening' is signified the Advent of the Lord, for then was the end of the former Church, and the beginning of a new one, the first state of which is also called 'evening,' because the man of the Church commences from obscure light . . .

—⁴. That the Advent of the Lord into the world is signified by 'the evening' and 'the morning,' III.

—⁵. 'Evening' (Zeph.ii.7)=the first state of the rising Church.

— As 'the evening'=the last state of the old Church, and the first of the new one, it was commanded that Aaron and his sons should 'make the lamp ascend from evening even to morning before Jehovah.'

—⁶. That 'evening'=the last state of the Church, when there is dense falsity because there is no faith. III.

7901. 'In the evening' (Ex.xii.18)=the end of the former state and the beginning of a new one. 7904.

8108^o. When it is evening and night there, they have obscurity of the understanding; but this is tempered by the Lord by means of the good of love (the pillar of fire).

8426. 'In the evening and ye shall know that Jehovah hath brought you forth out of the land of Egypt' (Ex.xvi.6)=at the end of the former state a revelation that they are delivered. . . The reason 'evening'=the end of the former state. Ex. . . The end of every state corresponds to evening, and is also sometimes called 'evening' in the Word. . . When it is evening, they are in obscurity as to truths, and in the delight of natural love: this delight is what is signified by 'the quails' which they received in the evening.

—³. (Thus) 'evening'=the end of the state of the thing that is being treated of; hence, also, the end of the state of the Church.

8431. 'In Jehovah giving you in the evening flesh to eat' (ver.8)=that at the end of the state good will be appropriated by means of delight.

—². By that which is given in the evening time, is signified natural good or delight; for, in the other life . . . the state of evening is when natural good, or the good of the external man, is in clearness; and spiritual good, or that of the internal man, is in obscurity. Alternations thus succeed each other, to the intent that man may be perfected, especially that good may be appropriated to him, which is done in a state of evening by means of delight.

8447. 'Between the evenings ye shall eat flesh' (ver. 12)=that at the end of the state good will be appropriated by means of delight. 8451.

8452. The reason 'the quails'=what is productive of good, is that they were given in the evening; for when in the other life there is a state which corresponds to evening, the good Spirits, and also the Angels, are remitted into the state of the natural affections in which they had been when in the world, consequently into the delights of their natural man . . . in order that they may be perfected. All are perfected through the implantation of faith and charity in the external or natural man . . .

8487^o. But the concupiscences into which those who are in Heaven are remitted, when it is evening with them, are not concupiscences which are opposite to heavenly good. Ex.

8687. 'From morning even to evening' (Ex.xviii.13) =in every state, interior and exterior. . . (For, in the other life, they are . . . exteriorly in good and truth, when in the state of evening there; for when they are in the state of evening, they are in natural delight. 8690.

8750^o. Hence it is that there is a correspondence of the states there with the times in the world; namely . . . a state of obscurity with evening and night.

8812^o. In the other life . . . evening and night=the privation of the good of love and the truth of faith, which are ignorance and blindness in the things which are of faith; and torpor and cold in the things which are of celestial love.

9787. 'From the evening even to the morning before Jehovah' (Ex.xxvii.21)=constantly in every state; 'the evening'=the end of one state; and 'morning,' the beginning of another; (and) 'evening' involves every state of shade which is signified by the following night . . .

10134^o. By 'evening,' in the Word, is signified a state of light in obscurity. Refs.

—⁹. The third state of a Church is a state of light in obscurity, which is its evening.

10135. 'The other lamb thou shalt do between the evenings' (Ex.xxix.39)=the like in a state of light and of love in the external man. . . For 'evening' in the Word=the state of the interiors when the truths of faith are in obscurity and the goods of love in some cold; for when the Angels . . . are in a state of light in obscurity, it is evening with them; and afterwards, when they are in a state of love in obscurity or in some cold, it is night with them, or rather the twilight before the morning. . . (It is) when they are in externals (that) they are in a state of love and thence of light in obscurity . . .

—⁴. But here . . . 'the evening' involves also the twilight; for when in the Word it is said 'morning and evening,' the whole day is meant; thus by . . . 'evening' also the night or twilight. Hence it is that . . . 'evening,' here, =a state of light and also of love in obscurity, that is, in the external man.

—⁵. That 'between the evenings' does not mean the time between the evening of one day and the evening of another day, but the time between the evening and the morning, thus, inclusively, the night or twilight, is evident from the fact that the continual burnt-offering from a lamb was made not only in the evening, but also in the morning; and hence it may be manifest that 'between the evenings' has a like signification elsewhere, as in . . . Ex.xii.6; Num.ix.5,11.

[A. 10135]^f. That 'evening,' in general, = a state of light in obscurity. III.

—^c. The end of the Church is 'the time of evening' (Zech. xiv. 7).

10202. 'Between the evenings' (Ex. xxx. 8) = an obscure state of love, and thence of truth in the shade. Ex.

H. 155². Evening corresponds to the state of their wisdom in obscurity.

—^c. (Hence) in the Word . . . 'evening' = wisdom in its shade.

C. J. 13^e. As such things are meant by 'evening,' and 'night,' the Lord, in order to fulfil the Word, was buried in the evening, and afterwards rose again in the morning.

F. 66. This vision predicts the future states of the Church . . . for it is said that . . . this was to be 'to the evening the morning' (Dan. viii. 26), when what is holy shall be justified. For by 'the evening' is meant the end of the Church when there will be a new one. 67^e. B. 83^e. E. 573^d. 612².

W. 73^e. By 'evening' is meant the decrease of the Church.

253². (Such) are in the boundaries in some higher Heaven, where they are as it were in the light of evening . . .

R. 219^e. 'The evening' = the last time of the Church; wherefore, when the Lord went away from the world, it being then the last time of the Church, He supped with His disciples, and instituted the Sacrament of the Supper. The evening = the last time of the old Church, and 'the morning,' the first of the new Church. 816^d.

816^d. The reason it is called 'the wedding supper of the Lamb,' is that this takes place at the last time of the Church, which is called 'evening;' and suppers take place in the evening; whereas the first state of the new Church is called morning. In the evening, man is called to the Church, and when those who are called are present, it becomes morning.

T. 109. The difference (between the Churches before and after the Lord's first Advent) is like that between the evening and the morning. The state of the Church before the Lord's Advent is also called 'evening,' in the Word . . .

433. Their suppers signified consociations and conjunctions in the first state of the establishment of the Church; for the evening, in which they took place, signified that.

764². In these passages, by 'evening,' and 'night,' is meant the last time of the Church.

405²³. 'About the time of evening it shall be light' = the last time of the Church, when the Judgment takes place; it is then 'evening' to the evil; but 'light' to the good.

706⁷. The reason the Lord then spoke about 'the evening' and 'the morning' (Matt. xvi. 2, 3), is that by 'the evening' and 'the morning' is signified the Advent of the Lord; here, when the Church with the Jews was devastated, with whom there was then 'fair weather,' because they did not know Him, and lived securely in falsities from evil; this is 'the evening.' But when they knew Him, and, on account of the falsities from evils in which they were, denied Him, and attacked Him, is signified by 'the morning when there is a tempest.' Hence it was that the Lord said, 'Ye hypocrites, ye know how to judge of the face of the heaven, but 'the signs of the times,' that is, of His Advent, 'ye cannot judge of.'

A. 21. (Before regeneration) evil appears like good, and falsity like truth.

30°. For in evil and falsity there is no life . . .

38. 'Night'=evil; wherefore . . . evils are called works of the night.

39. As in man there is nothing except evil and falsity . . . 55³.

50°. The Angels (then) merely arrange that man does not precipitate himself into ultimate evil. . . But when he has been regenerated, the Angels . . . inspire him . . . with horror and fear of evils and falsities.

63. Meanwhile the Lord continually fights for man against evils and falsities.

127. A desire to inquire into the mysteries of faith by means of sensuous and scientific things . . . is the cause of the fall of every Church; for thence come not only Falsities, but also evils of life.

139°. He who desires, is already in evil, and it is granted to him.

150°. The man who supposes that he lives from himself . . . appropriates to himself all evil and falsity; which he would never do if he believed as the case really is.

154. Nothing evil and false ever exists which is not proprium, and from proprium; for the proprium of man is evil itself, whence man is nothing but evil and falsity . . .

209. The evils of those who lived in the most ancient time sprang from the will.

230. The dominant evil of this posterity was the love of self; and not so much the love of the world, as at this day.

231. The evil of the Most Ancient Church . . . the evil of the Ancient Church . . . the evil of the Jewish Church, and the evil of the Church of the gentiles after the Lord's Advent, as also the evil of the present Church, is that they do not believe the Lord or the Word, but themselves and their senses; hence comes no faith; and when there is no faith there is no love of the neighbour; thus there is all falsity and evil.

233°. Of himself, man cannot do otherwise than do evil . . . yet it is not man who does this, but the evil Spirits who are with him; nor do the evil Spirits do it, but the evil itself which they have appropriated to themselves; nevertheless, man really does evil . . . and is in fault.

—^e. When they believe that what is spiritual and celestial has no existence . . . they love whatever is of self and the world; hence, from falsities come cupidities and evils.

251. 'The serpent'=all evil in general . . . because all evil originated from what is sensuous, and also from what is scientific.

—^e. 'The devil' . . . means evil itself.

389. That all evil and falsity would destroy him. Sig.

— . Without charity there is disjunction (from the Lord, and then) man is left to his proprium; and whatever he then thinks is falsity, and whatever he then wills is evil.

585. 'The evil of man was multiplied in the earth' (Gen. vi. 5)=that there began to be no will of good.

—^e. (Thus) 'the evil of man in the earth'=his natural evil, which is of the will.

592. (He afterwards learns) that nothing of evil comes from the Lord . . . but that it is man who brings evil on himself; although it is not man, but evil Spirits, who excite and lead him; still it is man, because he believes no otherwise than that it is he himself. —².

—². For such is the . . . equilibrium in the other life, that evil returns to him who does evil, and becomes the evil of punishment . . . which is said to be permitted, on account of the amendment of evil; but still the Lord turns all the evil of punishment into good. 696. 967.

633. With every man, and with every Angel whatever, even the most celestial, his proprium is nothing but falsity and evil.

—^e. Every man is able to be perfected . . . according to the actualities of his life in consonance with the hereditary evil implanted in him by his parents.

681. The reason evil Spirits speak and do evils, is that they so receive and pervert all the goods and truths which are of the Lord; for such as is the form of the recipient, such is the reception and affection. Examp.

689. See EQUILIBRIUM. 2122°. 5982. 6308. 6477. 6657, etc.

761. The Angels . . . defend even the things which are false and evil with man; for they know perfectly well whence man's falsities and evils come . . . Man never produces anything false and evil from himself, but it is the evil Spirits who are with him who produce it, and at the same time make the man believe that it is from himself . . . The man who has not faith in the Lord cannot be enlightened so as not to believe that evil is from himself; and therefore he appropriates evil to himself . . . As the Angels know this, in the temptations of regeneration they defend man's falsities and evils; for otherwise he would yield, because with man there is nothing but evil and the falsity thence, so that he is a mere heap and composition of evils and thence of falsities.

845. Evils, which are of the will, are the things which damn man . . . not so much falsities, unless they are coupled with evils, in which case the one follows the other . . .

847. When there is a celestial temptation, there is a fluctuation between good and evil; when there is a spiritual temptation, there is a fluctuation between truth and falsity . . .

[A.] 868. At this day everyone believes that when man is being regenerated, the evils and falsities with him are entirely dispersed and abolished, so that when he is regenerate, nothing of evil and falsity remains . . . But this is most false. Never is there a single evil, or a single falsity, so dispersed as to be abolished, but everything whatever that has been hereditarily imbued from infancy, and that has been acquired by actuality, remains; so that man, although regenerate, is nothing but evil and falsity. Ex.

—². As, therefore, the state of man is such, that never is there any evil and falsity so dispersed as to be abolished, because his proper life consists in evil and falsity, the Lord . . . when He regenerates man, by means of temptations, so subdues his evils and falsities, that they appear as if they were dead . . . The Lord, also, through temptations, gives a new capacity of receiving goods and truths, by endowing man with ideas and affections of good and truth, to which evils and falsities can be bent.

—². When man is thus formed, he is said to be regenerate, all his evils and falsities still remaining . . .

—⁶. In the other life, all the evils and falsities of him who is evil return, exactly as he was in them in the life of the body, and they are turned into infernal phantasies and punishments.

929. When man is regenerate, he is withheld from the evil and falsity which are with him . . . If, however, he were in the least let go, or left to himself, he would rush into all evil and falsity.

948. A tun . . . in which are those . . . who had made good to consist in evil.

966. No one undergoes any punishment or torment in the other life on account of his hereditary evil, but on account of the actual evils which he has himself committed. 2308.

986. When the internal man dominates, the man has fear of evils, and terror at falsities . . .

—³. As to 'fear' being predicated of evils; and 'terror,' of falsities, the case is this. The Spirits with man do not so much fear to do evils, as they fear to speak falsities; for man is born again through truths . . . wherefore Spirits are not allowed to excite falsities. For with everyone of them there is nothing but evil, so that they are in evil; their very nature, and thence all their endeavour, is evil; and as they are in evil, and their proper life consists in evil, they are excused when they do evil, while they are in any use; but to speak falsity is not permitted . . .

—⁶. To the regenerate man . . . the evil itself of life is falsity, because it is against the truths of faith. It was otherwise with the man of the Most Ancient Church . . . He perceived the evil of life as evil, and the falsity of faith as falsity.

987. They are in the greatest error . . . who believe that they are able of themselves to have dominion over evils; for man is nothing but evil; he is a heap of evils; all his will is mere evil; as is said in the preceding chapter: 'The fashion of the heart of man is evil from his childhood' (Gen. viii. 21). Fully Ex.

1011^e. It is the order of all things in the other life, that evil itself punishes itself; in like manner falsity, so that in the evil and falsity itself there is the punishment thereof; and as there is such an order that evil punishes itself; or, what is the same, that an evil person runs into the punishment answering to his evil; the ancients derived from it their law of retaliation; which is here signified by . . . 'He who sheddeth blood, his blood shall be shed.' D. 2438.

1079^e. They who are in charity scarcely see the evil of another, but . . . the things which are evil and false they interpret for good. Such are all the Angels, which they have from the Lord, who bends all evil into good.

1307. The love of self . . . is the source of all evils. Enum. 1326.

1311^o. Judgment is predicated when evil is brought to its height . . . (For) all evil has its limits up to which it is permitted to go; when it is carried beyond these limits, it runs into the punishment of evil . . .

1321. At last falsity is acknowledged as truth, and evil as good.

1327³. Like a man who does evil, but does not think evil: to him is not imputed the evil he does.

1444. 'The Canaanite was then in the Land' = hereditary evil from the mother in His external man . . .

— . No one can undergo temptation unless evil adheres to him; he who has no evil cannot have the least of temptation, for it is evil which the evil Spirits excite. With the Lord there was not any actual or proper evil, as there is with all men, but only hereditary evil from the mother . . . 1573⁴. —⁶. —⁷. —⁸.

—⁶. All kinds of evils are signified by the idolatrous nations in the Canaanitish land.

1477^o. Thus He expelled the hereditary evil from the mother.

1511. Spirits who are in falsities inflow into the thought, and completely persuade that falsity is truth . . . In like manner, Genii, who are in evils, inflow into the will, and make us feel, most completely, that evil is good . . . Thus it is perfectly evident whence come the falsities and evils with man . . .

1573. 'The Canaanite and the Perizzite were then dwelling in the Land' = evils and falsities in the external man . . . For where there is hereditary evil, there is also falsity; the latter is born from the former; but falsity cannot be born from evil, until the man has been imbued with scientifics and Knowledges; for evil has nothing into which it may operate or inflow, except into scientifics and Knowledges; thus evil, which is of the voluntary part, is turned into falsity in the intellectual part; therefore, this falsity also was hereditary; but this is not the case with falsity from principles of falsity . . . And as there was hereditary evil from the mother before the Lord was imbued with scientifics and Knowledges . . . it is said that 'the Canaanite was then in the Land' . . .

—³. For it is impossible for one man to be born of another man, without deriving evil thence; but . . . the hereditary evil from the father is interior, and remains to eternity . . . Such the Lord had not . . . But the hereditary evil from the mother is of the external man, which was with the Lord, and is called 'the Canaanite in the Land,' and the falsity thence 'the Perizzite.'

—⁷. The Divine is not susceptible of evil.

— . It was also that He might put on evil, against which He would fight, and which He would overcome, that the Lord came into the world . . .

1580^e. They who have been in temptations . . . long for separation (from evil), sometimes to such a degree that they are angry with evil, and want to expel it. Sig.

1581. But there is not separation, but quiescence. The evil which is in the external man cannot be separated with any man, but only with the Lord; for whatever a man has once acquired, remains. But it seems to be separated when it is quiescent . . . and then for the first time there inflow goods from the Lord, and affect the external man. Such is the state of the Angels; they know no otherwise than that evil is separated from them; but there is only a detention from evil, thus its quiescence . . .

1607^e. He expelled all evil, which alone disunites.

1661². No one can ever fight against evils and falsities until he knows what evil and falsity is . . . and what evil is, man does not know, and still less what falsity is, until he has power in understanding and judgment . . . Every man first of all combats from the goods and truths which he receives through Knowledges; and from and through those (goods and truths) he judges concerning evils and falsities. —⁵.

—³. Before he is regenerated, no one can ever know . . . that he cannot resist any evil and falsity by his own power; for he does not know that evil Spirits excite and infuse evils and falsities . . . —⁴. —⁵.

1668². Evils or evil Spirits rebel, in proportion as a man who wills to be in goods and truths, confirms with himself any evils and falsities . . .

1673³. (These persuasive Spirits) excite with man mere confirmations of falsity, so that a man sees no otherwise than that falsity is truth, and evil good . . .

1680. As to the evils and falsities against which the Lord fought, they were infernal Spirits who were in evils and falsities . . .

1683². It is the evil Spirit who brings evil on himself . . . This follows from the nature of evil . . . It is the nature of evil to want to assail everyone . . .

1691. All evil and falsity comes forth from the love of self and the love of the world; they have no other origin . . .

1692. Temptations are the means by which evils and falsities are loosened and dispersed in man.

1695. Still, licence is not granted to (evil Spirits) to think and speak what is false, except that which is from their evil; but not that which is contrary to their own proper evil . . . For in so far as they speak falsity from their own evil, they speak from their own life . . .

1740. That evil and falsity was conquered. Sig.

—². The reason why evil and falsity is conquered, or why evils and falsities are conquered, by means of the combats of temptations . . . is that evils and falsities are thus dissipated . . . For it is evil Spirits who excite evils and falsities; and unless they are excited, man scarcely knows that evils and falsities exist; but they then appear, and the longer the combats of temptation last, the more they appear, until at last they are held in horror as evils and falsities. And as evils and falsities are dissipated, so do goods and truths succeed in their place; and the more horror there is contracted for evils and falsities, the more of love for goods and truths is insinuated by the Lord. The more horror, also, there is for evils and falsities, the less dare evil Spirits approach, because they cannot endure aversion and horror for evils and falsities, in which their life consists . . .

1832². They suppose . . . that because He permits evil, He is the cause of evil.

1834². As charity vanished, evils succeeded, and with evils falsities also insinuated themselves . . . Sig.

1835. When the Church is only beginning to recede from charity, evils and the falsities thence are more easily put to flight. Sig. and Ex. . . But in process of time, evils and the falsities thence increase, and are thus confirmed and strengthened.

—². So far as possible, the Lord is continually putting evils and falsities to flight, but this by means of conscience . . .

1857². In the other life the evil are not punished until their evils are carried to their height, and this both in general and particular; for such is the equilibrium there, that evil punishes itself, or that the evil run into the penalty of evil; but only when it is carried to its height. Every evil has its own limit, and this with diversity in everyone . . .

—³. When there is nothing but evil, he is thrust down into Hell.

1860. There is 'darkness' when there is falsity instead of truth; and 'thick darkness' when there is evil instead of good . . . When there is hatred instead of charity . . . man is utterly ignorant that it is evil. Ex.

—^e. (The Hebrew word for 'thick darkness,' here) involves both . . . That is, dense falsity from which is evil, and dense evil from which is falsity.

1864². What is man but something vile and filthy, which from itself can think and do nothing but evil?

1868². With every man who is being regenerated, the falsities and evils which had possession of him are subdued and dissipated, and in their place are implanted truths and goods. (Sig. by the expulsion of the nations from Canaan by the Israelites.)

1874^e. The Lord provides . . . that evils are turned into goods.

1875. Temptation and evil were rejected (in the angelic ideas about the Lord's Prayer).

1906². Man's states of evil, without tempering by states of the affection of good, would be more fierce than those of any animal . . . These states of good are what are called remains . . .

1911⁴. The Rational first conceived . . . supposes that as the Lord rules everything, evil also is from Him . . .

1921. Whatever is from the exterior man, has with it what is hereditary, thus also evil.

[A.] 1937². When any evil crept in, as they did not feel any resistance from within, they surrendered themselves to it; but these . . . are among the more useless . . . Whereas, they who have compelled themselves against evil and falsity, although at first they supposed that this was from self, in the other life cannot be led by evil Spirits, but are among the happy.

—⁵. In temptations . . . when a man compels himself against the evil and falsity which is infused and suggested by evil Spirits, there is more freedom than there ever is in any state out of temptations . . .

—⁶. In this freedom, when man compels himself against evil and falsity . . . there is celestial love . . .

1944. The Rational . . . is said to be born, when man begins to think that it is evil and falsity with himself which contradicts and is adverse to truth and good; and still more when he wills to remove and subdue it . . .

1992^e. At that time . . . they were in this religion . . . that all evil, thus all temptation, came from God . . .

2107. 'To be circumcised' = to be purified from the loves of self and of the world, or, what is the same, from evils, for all evils are thence. Refs.

—². All the evils of life of those who have lived in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour remain, but they are tempered by the goods which, through the life of charity, while they lived in the world, they have received from the Lord; and thus they are elevated into Heaven; nay, are withheld from the evils which they have with them, so that they do not appear. They who doubt . . . that they have evils with them . . . are remitted into them, until they know that the case is so . . .

2196⁶. When he is withheld from evil . . . man from appearances supposes that there is nothing but good . . . with him; when yet in man there is nothing but what is evil, unjust, and profane.

2240. 'Cry' = falsity; and 'sin' = evil.

—⁶. 'The voice of weeping shall not be heard' = no evil.

—⁷. 'For judgment a scab' = that instead of truth there shall be found evil.

—⁸. 'The fields and grapes of Gomorrah' = evils from falsities.

—^e. There are two kinds of falsity . . . and so there are two kinds of evil. Sig.

2243. Whether evil has arrived at its height. Sig.

— . There are two kinds of falsity . . . namely, the falsity which is from evil, and the falsity which produces evil; the falsity which is from evil is all that a man thinks while he is in evil, namely, all that favours evil. Examp. . . But the falsity which produces evil, is when a man takes up any principle from his religion, and therefore believes that it is good and holy, when yet in itself it is evil. Examp.

—^e. (Thus) consummation is when evil comes to its height.

2246. That mankind was in such great evil. Sig.

2256. 'The impious' = evil.

—². All the evil (which a man has ever thought and done, remains) so that not the least of it perishes entirely; it is written in his book of life . . . But goods are never so commingled with evils, and evils with goods, that they cannot be separated . . . When man comes into the other life, if he has lived in the goods of love and of charity, the Lord separates evils . . . But if he has lived in evils, namely, in things contrary to love and charity, the Lord separates goods from him; and the evils carry him into Hell . . . It is, however, a separation, and never a plenary taking away.

2269³. Goods can never be insinuated into falsities, nor can evils into truths, as recipient vessels . . . If they should endeavour to conjoin themselves, the one would spew out the other; good would spew out evil as poison, and evil would spew out good as what excites vomiting. Such enmity between evil and good has been provided by the Lord, lest they should ever be commingled . . .

2272. In temptations . . . evils are regarded as abominable; hence come new thoughts . . . to which he can afterwards be bent, and thus from evils to goods . . .

2280⁴. All over twenty died in the wilderness, because evil could be imputed to them.

—⁶. The life of charity is attended with this, that the falsity and evil of ignorance can be easily bent to truth and good . . .

2284. (The influx of good and truth from the Lord is received) according to the life of evil, and according to the principles of falsity, in which a man has confirmed himself . . . Lest, therefore, goods should be commingled with evils, and truths with falsities . . . the Lord separates them, and stores up the goods and truths . . . in his interior man, whence he never permits them to come forth, so long as he is in evil and falsity . . .

—³. Man is now such, that he can counterfeit good, although within he is nothing but evil; and can also appear to be evil, although within he has good.

2313. The second state (of the Spiritual Church), that with them evils begin to act against goods, but that they are powerfully withheld from evils, and are kept in goods by the Lord. Tr.

2318^e. The destruction of those who are altogether in evil and falsity. Tr.

2327^e. The worst evils of all. Enum.

2334. Temptation is attended with . . . despair . . . in order that they may be confirmed in this . . . that with self there is nothing but evil.

2348. Falsities and evils recent and confirmed. Sig.

2354². The Divine Human and Holy proceeding of the Lord is denied at heart by all those who are in the life of evil; namely, by all those who despise others in comparison with themselves, who hate all that do not worship them, who feel delight in revenge against the same, nay, in cruelty, and who account adulteries as nothing.

—³. Through evil Spirits man communicates with Hell . . . In proportion, therefore, as his life accedes to evil, Hell flows in . . . (Therefore) they who are in the life of evil cannot acknowledge the Lord . . .

2357². They who are in the life of evil are admitted no further than to the Knowledge of good and of the Lord, and not as far as to the veriest acknowledgment and faith; because so long as they are in evil, they cannot be in good . . . He who once acknowledges and believes, and then returns to a life of evil, profanes good . . .

—^e. This is why so few are now permitted to believe . . . for they are in the life of evil.

2363. See BLESS-beare.

2364^e. They who have imbued the life with evil, are bent to good by abstaining from evil . . .

2371^r. (That man is mere evil used as an argument for faith alone.)

2380. In the other life, the approach is closed by the separation of the good from the evil, so that they cannot be infested by the spheres of the persuasions of falsity and of the cupidities of evil . . . Sig. and Ex.

—³. They who are in evil have no conscience; they do not care for what is just and fair except in so far as it affects their reputation; they do not know what good and truth are . . . they think evilly about the neighbour, and will evilly for him, and also do evilly . . . if he does not favour them; and they perceive delight in it; if they do anything of good, it is from the end of recompense. Such within the Church secretly deny the Lord . . .

—^e. The delight of evil they believe to be good.

2388. That all . . . should be saved . . . even they who are in the truth of faith, if they would recede from evil. Sig. and Ex.

—². The truths of faith are the recipient vessels themselves of good, and they receive good in proportion as man recedes from evil; for good is continually flowing in from the Lord, but it is evil of life which hinders its being received in the truths which are . . . in the memory. Hence, in proportion as man recedes from evil, good enters, and applies itself into his truths. . . Truth does not live so long as man is in the life of evil . . .

2401. That they should not remain in a state of evil. Sig.

2410. Resistance from the nature of evil. Sig. . . For the evil which is in man continually reacts against the good which is from the Lord. Evil from what is hereditary and actual with man adheres to every single one of his thoughts; nay, to the least things of his thoughts; this draws him downwards; but the Lord, through the good which He insinuates, withholds and uplifts him; thus man is kept suspended between evil and good. Therefore, if man were not withheld from evils by the Lord every instant, of himself he would rush downwards . . .

2426. 'Lest perchance evil cleave to me and I die' (Gen. xix. 19) = that then it could not be otherwise than that he would be at the same time in evil, and would thus be damned. . . (For) the Lord constantly provides against the commingling of evil with good; so that in proportion as man is in evil he is removed from good; for it is better that he should be altogether in evil, than that he should be in evil and at the same time in good; for if he is in evil and at the same time in good, he cannot but be damned to eternity.

2438³. Unless the good were withdrawn from the evil, from the cupidities of evil and the persuasions of falsity which the evil continually scatter about like poison, they would easily perish. In general, however, before this is done, (it is necessary) that with the good evils should be separated, and that with the evil goods should be separated, in order that the former through their goods may be uplifted into Heaven, and the latter through their evils may cast themselves down into Hell. 2449², Ex. 2451.

2520⁴. Evil and falsity are from Hell.

2568^e. See DENY.

2588⁴. All evil is from man or self.

—⁵. They who are in good can believe, but not they who are in evil . . . (For) truth and good agree together, but not truth and evil; and as in evil, so also from evil, is all falsity . . . (Moreover) truths shun evils, and evils spew out truths.

2590^e. Evil of life never receives (the seed of truth); for even if they who are in evil were to be instructed in a thousand ways, and were even to become the best instructed of all, still the truths of faith would penetrate no further with them than into the memory . . .

2632^e. When he is regenerate, the Lord flows in through an internal way, and successively and continually separates those things which adhere from hereditary and actual evil.

2634². That the interiors of man are to be successively and continually purified from the evils which are of cupidities, and from the falsities which are of phantasies thence, is according to Divine order . . .

2654⁴. This Rational would mock, if told that . . . whatever it thinks and does from proprium is evil, even if it is good.

2689⁴. See DOUBT.

—^e. (Persuasive truth) is indeed born in addition to evil, but it does not conjoin itself with evil; and it is therefore extirpated in the other life.

2715. As the Voluntary with the spiritual man is so destroyed, that it is nothing but evil, and yet the evil thence constantly inflows into the intellectual part or thought, it is evident that the good there is comparatively obscured.

—⁵. (Thus) the spiritual man does not know what evil is; he scarcely believes anything to be evil but what is contrary to the precepts of the Decalogue, not being aware of the evils of affection and of thought, which are innumerable; nor does he reflect upon them, nor call them evils . . . being ignorant that such are the things which affect his spirit, and that he becomes altogether such in the other life.

[A.] 2760, Preface². This faith closes Heaven, to prevent evils and falsities from entering. Sig.

2768^o. It is the evil with man which makes and which also leads into temptation . . .

2826³. In order that there might be worship from fear with such, all evils even to curses were attributed to Jehovah. Refs.

2842. His glory in Heaven, nay, His mercy itself (appeared like a devouring fire and smoke) before the people who were in evil and falsity.

2851. That charity and faith shall succeed in the place where before there was evil and falsity. Sig. 3187.

—'. 'Enemies-hostes' (and 'enemies-inimici')=evils and falsities; or, what is the same, those who are in evil and falsity.

—². One (of the two gates in man) stands open to Hell, and is accessible to evils and the falsities thence derived. . . The gate of Hell is accessible with those who are in evil and falsity . . . —³.

—³. The infernal Genii and Spirits, with evils and falsities, can come no further than the lower or external gate, and never into . . . the rational mind . . . But when they have come thus far . . . the (rational mind) is closed . . . Hence it is that such persons . . . place good in evil, and truth in falsity . . .

—⁴. But when a man is . . . being regenerated, evils and falsities . . . are driven away from that gate or mind, and then goods and truths succeed in their place. Sig. (This signification of 'gate' in relation to evils and falsities, fully ill.)

—¹³. 'To speak with the enemies in the gate'=to have no fear of evils and falsities, thus not of Hell.

2886. Things evil and false have connection with the Hells . . .

2888. Good and truth is received as evil and falsity by the evil, and is also turned into evil and falsity with them.

2889. They first begin to live when they have lost the life of the cupidities of evil and of the persuasions of falsity . . .

2892^o. He who believes that he rules himself is in continual inquietude . . . and because he so believes, the cupidities of evil and the persuasions of falsity adhere to him.

2893. The man of the Church at this day does not believe that all the evils and falsities with him flow in from Hell . . . when yet . . . everybody says, when anyone has committed a great evil, that he has suffered himself to be led by the devil.

2910⁴. One cause (of the fall of the Church) is that parents accumulate evils, and from frequent use and at last habit induce them on nature, and thus transmit them into their offspring . . . Hence the will is more prone to evils and falsities.

2930. For we are able to understand good and truth, but still to will evil and falsity.

2946². Whatever does not come from the Lord is evil and falsity . . .

—^e. If man compels himself to resist evil . . .

2959. In order that the evils and falsities with them may be separated, and as it were dispersed . . .

2967². There are evils and falsities with which man has imbued himself from infancy, and which prevent one person from receiving the like gift as another: these evils and falsities must be vastated before the man can be regenerated.

2995. It was different after these times, when evil and falsity began to reign . . .

3024⁷. That good and falsity, and evil and truth, are not to be conjoined together. Sig.

3033. That falsity can never be conjoined with good, nor truth with evil, because they are of a contrary nature. Refs. 3267^e.

—². That there can only be (a conjunction) of falsity with evil . . . has been given me to perceive to the life . . . When a man has . . . the affection of evil, that is, when he wills evil . . . then when anything is to be thought that is to be willed and done, his will in-flows into his thought, and there excites the Knowledges which appear like truth, and thus impels him to think, to will, and to act; and this by a wrong application of Knowledges, and by looking at some general things which he has drawn from the sense of the letter of the Word, or from some other knowledge, as things which are applicable in every sense. Thus it is evil which is coupled with falsity; for in this case the truth that was therein is deprived of all the essence of truth . . . Such have sometimes been present with me, but they were not susceptible of any affection of good from truth, however much the truths they had known in the life of the body were recalled into their minds; for there was evil with them, with which truths could not be conjoined.

3036. By virtue of Whom the Lord delivered Himself from maternal things as to evils and as to falsities. Sig. . . He fought against the hereditary evil from the mother, but He had no actual evil. . . 'The house of my father'=the maternal Hereditary as to evil; and 'the land of my nativity,' the maternal Hereditary as to falsities; for where there is evil there there are falsities; they are conjoined with each other.

3048². 'The beasts of the south'=those who are in the light of Knowledges, but in the life of evil.

3089^e. Such an (impure) affection must precede; but still it is successively purified by the Lord; until at last evils and falsities are removed and are cast out as it were into the circumference; still, they have served as means.

3108^e. (The conjunction of falsity with evil described. See Good, here.)

3110². If falsity approaches, good betakes itself inwards, and (the falsity) conjoins itself outwardly with some evil, which it believes to be good . . . For evil and falsity is Hell, and flows in from Hell . . . (Therefore) evil and truth can no more be conjoined together than Hell and Heaven . . .

3116^e. Exploration is a most exquisite weighing, lest the least of falsity should be conjoined with good, or the least of truth with evil: in either case man would perish eternally . . .

3142. Nothing more is required of man than to sweep the house, that is, to reject the cupidities of evil and the persuasions of falsity thence; he is then filled with goods . . .

3147⁸. To wash the feet was of charity, namely, that they did not reflect upon the evils of another; and was also of humiliation, namely, that he would cleanse another from evils, as from dirt.

3170. When spiritual things are appropriated to the natural man, the things which belong to the cupidity of evil and the persuasion of falsity recede, thus those things which induce unrest . . . for all unrest is from evil and falsity.

3175³. For in the natural man there are . . . cupidities of evil, and also persuasions of falsity . . .

—⁴. It is a spiritual truth, that . . . all evil is from Hell.

—^e. Man is utterly ignorant of this so long as he is in evil.

3187³. Before man is regenerated, he is interiorly nothing but evil and falsity . . . But when he is being regenerated, evils and falsities, or, what is the same, infernal and diabolical Spirits, are expelled thence, and good and truth enter, and inherit their place.

3310². 'Thorns' = evils.

3318². The vessels (in man's Rational and Natural) are in a contrary position in relation to the influent life, in consequence of the hereditary evil in which man is born, and of the actual evil which he acquires.

—^e. The man who is made new by regeneration still retains in himself the inclination to evil, nay, evil itself, but he is withheld from evil by the influx of the life of the Lord's love . . . Whereas the Lord entirely cast out all evil . . .

3340. The infernals live in (thick darkness and cold); the thick darkness with them is from the falsities in which they are, and the cold is from the evils.

3353⁹. That evil will fight with evil, and falsity with falsity. Sig.

3402². Good and truth with man betake themselves inwards in proportion as he is in evil and falsity . . . The removal of good and truth from the man . . . who is in evil and falsity does not appear to him, because he is then in the persuasion that evil is good and that falsity is truth, and this from the affection and thence the delight of them.

3408⁶. The natural good which is born with man . . . may be evil, for it may receive falsities also, and believe that to be good which is evil.

3469⁴. See HEREDITARY.

3488⁴. See ENMITY.

—⁶. Where there is no faith there is no charity, and where there is no charity there is no faith; but charity is that which receives faith, and no charity is that which rejects faith; this is the origin of all falsity and of all evil.

—^e. For when men are in falsity and evil, they no longer know what truth and what good are; they then believe falsity to be truth, and evil to be good; and vice versa. When the Church is in this state 'then will the end come.'

3603⁹. When a man grows up, that which he has hereditarily from his parents manifests itself more and more; and if he is of such a character as not to suffer himself to be regenerated, he takes evils thence, and makes them his own.

3605⁷. 'Deliver us from evil.' (From these words) evil is rejected (by the Angels), even until there remains . . . good, without the idea of . . . evil; and this with the addition of a kind of indignation and aversion, that evil should be thought of when the Lord is thought of.

—³. The Divine is mercy; but when this flows in with a man who is in evil, and he runs into the punishment of evil, it then appears as hatred.

3614³. 'Jacob' = those who are in evil; and 'Israel,' those who are in falsity.

—⁴. Victories over evils, and . . . victories over falsities. Sig.

—⁵. With the Prophets, where evil is spoken of, so is falsity.

3642. One morning I was in company with angelic Spirits, who acted in unity by thinking and speaking, as they are wont to do. This penetrated towards Hell, into which it was continued, insomuch that they appeared to act in unity with the infernals; but the fact was that the good and truth with the Angels, by a wonderful conversion, was changed into evil and falsity with the infernals; and this by degrees as it flowed down, where Hell acted in unity by means of persuasions of falsity and cupidities of evil.

3696². As (the man who is being regenerated) passes into the new life, he passes at the same time into an untranquil state; for the evils and falsities which he had before imbued emerge . . . and disturb him . . .

3701. Man is born into the nature of his parents, of his grandfathers, and of his great grandfathers . . . thus into the hereditary evil of them all successively accumulated, insomuch that as to what is from himself he is nothing but evil . . . and therefore it is evil which he calls good, and even believes to be good; and falsity which he calls truth, and even believes to be truth. Examp.

—³. In order that (man may become new), he must . . . learn what evil and falsity are . . .

—⁷. In the same degree in which man apperceives delight in this good, and pleasantness in these truths, he feels undelight in the evils of his former life, and unpleasantness in the falsities thereof . . .

[A.] 3743². Hence it is that the evil appropriate evil to themselves, because they do not believe that evils are from Hell.

— . Nevertheless, the evil . . . are forms recipient of life from the Lord, but such forms that they either reject, suffocate, or pervert good and truth; and thus the goods and truths which are from the Lord's life become with them evils and falsities. Examp.

3793. When this good of infancy is indrawn, then into the Natural of man there succeeds and enters evil, to which falsity couples itself, and effects the conjunction and as it were the marriage of evil and falsity with him. In order, therefore, that man may be saved, he must be regenerated, and evil must be removed . . .

—^e. (They who are not in good and truth) do not know what good and truth are, for they suppose evil to be good, and falsity to be truth; wherefore, when good is mentioned, there is at once presented the idea of evil; and when truth, the idea of falsity.

3813⁶. 'Flesh' = man's voluntary proprium, which in itself is nothing but evil. Ill.

—7. The evils which are from falsities, and the evils from which are falsities. Sig.

3854². The Lord foresaw from eternity . . . that evil would continually increase . . .

— . Whatever is not rooted in freedom, is dissipated at the first coming of evil and of temptation.

3905⁹. The truths of faith which are not learned for the sake of doing . . . adjoin themselves to affections of evil and falsity.

3926. The twelve sons of Jacob . . . in the opposite sense = . . . all things of falsity and evil.

3928². They who do not affirm and acknowledge good and truth . . . cannot come into any combat of temptation, because there is nothing within which is opposed to the evil and falsity to which natural delight persuades.

—^e. Here 'Naphtali' = those who fear nothing of evil, because they are in truths and goods.

3938⁴. The affections of evil and falsity also have their delights; and before man is being regenerated . . . he believes there are no others. . . But . . . in proportion as advance is made into the delights of the affections of truth and good, the man begins to hold cheap those delights of evil and falsity, and at last to feel aversion for them.

—³. Those . . . in the delights of evil and falsity . . . have no life until they are deprived of their delights . . .

— . For the Lord inflows into the delights of charity with the light of truth and the flame of good, and thence with intelligence and wisdom; but falsities and evils reject, suffocate, and pervert these things . . .

—⁶. They at first think . . . that they can come into Heaven, not attending to their past life, that thereby they have put on the delight of the affection of evil and falsity by the loves of self and of the world . . .

— . Hence it is evident . . . that they who are in the delight of the affections of evil and falsity, cannot possibly be among those who are in the delight of the affection of good and truth . . .

—⁸. For man is affected either with evil and falsity, or with good and truth, from love . . .

3941³. 'To reap thorns' = the evils and falsities which are of the love of self and of the world.

—^e. 'The tares' = evils and falsities.

3957⁷. Where there is no charity and consequently no conscience, the influent good and truth flows through, and is turned into evil and into falsity.

3963². They are in the affection of evil, with which truth cannot be conjoined.

—^e. They who are in the affection of good from which there is no truth . . . suffer themselves to be led into every evil and also falsity, provided that on the evil there is induced the appearance of good, and on the falsity the appearance of truth.

3987². For the evil can will evil and do good, and also think evil and teach good.

3993. That all good and truth of his shall be separated with which evil is mixed, which is 'the speckled;' and with which falsity is mixed, which is 'the spotted.' Sig.

—⁴. 'Black,' in general, = evil; in special, the proprium of man, because this is nothing but evil.

—⁸. With man there does not exist pure good, or good with which evil is not mixed; nor pure truth, or truth with which falsity is not mixed, for the Voluntary of man is nothing but evil, from which falsity continually inflows into his Intellectual; for . . . man derives from his parents evil that has successively accumulated, and from this evil he himself produces evil actually and makes it his own, and still superadds evil from himself. But the evils with man are of various kinds; there are evils with which goods cannot be mixed, and there are evils with which they can; in like manner falsities; and unless this were the case no man could ever be regenerated. The evils and falsities with which goods and truths cannot be mixed are those which are contrary to love to God and to love towards the neighbour, as hatreds, revenges, cruelties, and consequent contempt for others in comparison with ourselves; also the persuasions of falsity thence derived.

—⁹. But the evils and falsities with which goods and truths can be mixed are those which are not contrary to love to God and to love towards the neighbour. Examps. . . This evil is what is proper to man, and is that which is born with him hereditarily; and if it were suddenly taken away from him, it would extinguish the fire of his first life . . .

—¹². Further, simulation and cunning which have good as their end . . . are prudence; and the evils mixed with them may be mingled with good, from the end and for the sake of the end; but simulation and cunning which have evil as their end, are not prudence, but are guile and deceit, with which good cannot be at all conjoined; for deceit . . . sets evil in the midst, and rejects good to the circumferences, which order is the infernal order itself.

—¹³. That there are evils and falsities to which goods and truths can be adjoined may be evident from the fact, that there are so many diverse dogmas and doctrinal things, of which many are utterly heretical, and yet in every one of them there are those who are saved . . . which could not possibly be the case, unless there were evils with which goods can be mixed, and falsities with which truths can be mixed. For the evils with which goods are mixed, and the falsities with which truths are mixed, are disposed in order by the Lord in a wonderful manner; for they are not conjoined together, still less are they united, but they are adjoined and applied; and in fact so, that in the midst as it were in the centre are goods with truths, and, by degrees towards the circumferences, there are such evils and falsities. Hence it is, that the latter are enlightened by the former, and are variegated like white and black by the light from the midst or centre. This is the heavenly order. Sig.

3994. The proprium of innocence consists in knowing, acknowledging, and believing, not with the lips but with the heart, that there is nothing but evil from self . . . consequently, that man's proprium is nothing but black, namely, both the voluntary proprium which is evil, and the intellectual proprium which is falsity.

3995. That all the good of truth shall be his in which falsity and evil is mixed. Sig.

4005. That the truths of good were separated which were besprinkled and mixed with evils and falsities. Sig.

—². 'Variegated'=truth besprinkled and mixed with evils; and 'speckled'=good besprinkled and mixed with evils: truth mixed with evils belongs properly to the understanding; but good mixed with evils belongs properly to the will; this is the difference.

—³. There are goods mixed with evils, and truths mixed with falsities . . .

4018^e. Evils and falsities are implanted and conjoined by means of the affections of evil and falsity, which affections flow forth from the love of self and of the world as their fountains.

4031². He supposes that the Lord . . . could save everyone . . . by means of Angels who should withhold from evils . . .

—³. (But) whatever compels a man, does not implant in him any affection, and if it is such that it does implant it, it binds itself to an affection of evil; for . . . when the state is changed, the man returns to his former affections, namely, to evils and falsities, and then he conjoins that holy [state] with evils and falsities, and it becomes profane.

4067². There are innumerable Societies . . . which are arranged . . . according to all the genera of good and truth, and there are Societies in the opposite, according to all the genera of evil and falsity . . . So that there does not exist any genus of evil and falsity, nor any species of that genus, nor even any specific difference, to which there do not correspond diabolical Societies.

—³. The evil with man (is so manifold, and consists of such various things, that it can never be investigated, even as to generals). But . . . such as is the evil with a man, such is the Society of evil Spirits that is with him . . .

4073². When the man himself adjoins Societies to himself, he is in evil; but when they are adjoined to him by the Lord, he is in good.

4078. No one can do evil to the Divine, but to hinder its influx is possible; all evil does this.

4126. 'To speak from good even to evil' (Gen.xxxi. 24)=to speak good and think evil; and thus at last to speak evil, and to do evil; for he who thinks evil at last speaks it and does it.

4136³. As he had led an evil life, he was in such stupid ignorance about good . . .

4151⁵. As all good and truth is from the Lord, so is all evil and falsity from Hell . . . Hence it may be evident, that as all good and truth flows in, so does all evil and falsity, consequently, the thinking of evil and the willing of evil . . .

—⁶. Some said, If all evil and falsity flows in, nothing of evil and falsity can be attributed to us . . . But they received for answer, that they appropriated it to themselves by this, that they believed themselves to think from themselves and to will from themselves; whereas if they had believed as the case really is, they would not have appropriated them to themselves . . . and then the evil which entered into their thought and will would not have affected them, inasmuch as evil would not have gone forth, but good would have gone forth; for the things which enter do not affect, but those which go forth . . . Those who are evil can know this, but still not believe it, because they want to be in proprium . . .

4156². With those who are in the life of evil, scientifics are means of being insane, for they thereby confirm not only the life of evil, but also principles of falsity . . .

—³. He is strong in the Rational who can clearly see that good is good and truth truth, and therefore that evil is evil and falsity falsity; whereas he who regards good as evil, and evil as good, and who also regards truth as falsity and falsity as truth, can in no wise be called rational . . . With him who clearly sees that good is good, and truth truth; and on the other hand that evil is evil, and falsity falsity, there inflows light from Heaven, and enlightens his Intellectual . . . But they who are against good and truth, as are all who are in the life of evil, do not admit that heavenly light . . .

4165. That he had not separated himself from evil. Sig. . . 'Transgression and sin'=evil.

4169². 'Go ye not to the gentiles'=not to those who are in evils.

4171. That evil not by his own fault was with that good. Sig. (For) 'torn'=death occasioned by another, thus evil not by his own fault. The evils with man have many origins; the first origin is from what is hereditary . . . The second origin is from what is actual, namely, that which a man acquires through a life of evil; this evil, man takes partly from what is hereditary, as from an ocean of evils, and puts it into act; and he partly superadds many things from himself . . . But this actual evil . . . has also divers origins, in general two, namely, first, that he receives evil from others without his own fault; secondly, that he receives evil from himself, thus by his own fault. Sig. and Examps.

4172. The evil of fault, or the evil which a man has contracted by actual life, and has also confirmed in thought even to faith and persuasion, cannot be amended, but remains to eternity; whereas the evil not of fault, which man has not confirmed in thought, and has not inwardly persuaded himself of, does indeed remain, but only adheres to the externals; for it does not penetrate to the interiors, and pervert the internal man. Such is the evil through which comes good; for the internal man which has not as yet been affected and has not consented, can see it in the external that it is evil, and thus it can be removed . . .

[A.] 4174. The evil of merit in like manner. Sig. and Ex.

4180^o. They who are in evil do not receive Divine good . . . But Divine truth can be received even by the evil, but only by their external man. Ex.

4198^o. Whereas they who receive His presence . . . in evil and falsity are in the life of insanity and folly, yet are still in the capacity of being intelligent and wise . . .

4214^o. That which is from infatuated lumen is in evil, that is, it exists with those who are in evil. The reason they can reason about (spiritual things) is . . .

4215^o. For he who regards self as the end . . . is in evil.

4217^o. The Lord rules . . . the man who is in evil, solely by means of external bonds . . .

4236^o. 'Camp' = evils and falsities, and therefore Hell.

4249. Evil Spirits keep man in evils and falsities.

—². When a man thinks and wills evils, and is thence delighted with falsities, he may know that his thoughts and affections are from Hell.

4255^o. The Jordan being divided, and their passing through on dry land = the removal of evils and falsities, and the admission of those who are in goods and truths.

4274^o. They who yield come into the confirmation of evil, and into the persuasion of falsity. Ex.

4293. Falsities are phantasies, because they are of phantasies; and evils are cupidities, because they are of cupidities.

4295^o. The Angels also say that all their proprium is evil and falsity, both from what is hereditary and from actual life in the world . . . and that evil and falsity is not separated or wiped off from them . . . but that it all remains with them; yet that they are withheld by the Lord from evil and falsity . . .

4299^o. If the presence of the Lord is (too near) the man comes into temptation . . . because the evils and falsities which are with the man, tempered by the goods and truths with him, cannot endure a closer presence . . .

—³. Evils, falsities, and unmerciful things are continually striving to do violence to these holy things; and in proportion as they attack them they are tormented . . . and they then suppose that it is the Divine which torments.

4302^o. See HALT.

4307. Temptation is an excitation of the evil and falsity with man. Refs. Good Spirits and Angels never excite evils and falsities, but defend man against them, and bend them into good.

—². The (Israelites) believed that all evil was from Jehovah.

4317^o. Hereditary evil originates from the parents of each person, and from the parents of his parents in succession. Every evil which they have acquired by actual life . . . is derived into the children . . . together with that which has been implanted in the parents . . . The hereditary evil from the father is interior, and the hereditary evil from the mother is exterior; the former cannot be easily eradicated, the latter can. When man is being regenerated, the hereditary evil inrooted from the immediate parents is extirpated; (with others) it remains . . . Every family has some peculiar evil or good . . .

—⁵. Hereditary evil . . . consists in willing and thence thinking evil; hereditary evil is in the will itself and thence in the thought; it is the endeavour itself which is therein, and it adjoins itself when the man does good; it is known by the delight which is felt when evil befalls another . . .

— . It is from hereditary evil to love self more than another; to will evil to another if he does not honour him; to perceive delight in revenge; also to love the world more than Heaven; and all the cupidities thence derived.

— . In the other life it is manifestly shown how much of evil from what is hereditary, man has attracted to himself by actual life . . .

—⁶. The hereditary evil with the descendants of Jacob could not be eradicated by regeneration . . .

4319. The evil think, will, and act from Hell . . . yet evils . . . appear to be as from themselves. Christians know that evils are from the devil . . . but few believe it; and because they do not believe it, they appropriate to themselves the evils which they think, will, and act.

—^e. They do not believe, because they live in evil.

4327. With those who are in evil and in the falsity thence, there is no longer any general involuntary sense. Ex.

4328^o. The black column signified the Voluntary (of the Celestial Church), that it was altogether destroyed, and that it was nothing but evil.

4333. The Lord's Celestial Church . . . perished in the Antediluvians, by an inundation of evils and falsities, which, in the internal sense, is 'the Flood.' 4334^o.

4334^o. 'Eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage' = their state as to the appropriation of evil and falsity, and thence conjunction therewith.

—⁶. 'And Knew not until the Flood came, and took them all away' = that the men of the Church of that time will not know that they are inundated with evils and falsities, because on account of the evils and falsities in which they are, they will be ignorant what the good of love to the Lord and the good of charity are, and also what the truth of faith is.

4347^o. For when man is in humiliation, he is averse to the evil and falsity with him, and thus removes them; and when they are removed the Divine can flow in with good and truth . . .

4368^o. Everyone may see this confirmed by the daily experience, that those who are in evil do not believe . . . Hence it is very manifest, that the truth of faith is conjoined with good, and never with evil.

4416. They who have known (and confirmed) truths, and yet have lived a life of evil, appear in a snowy, but cold, light . . .

—². But they who are in evil and thence in falsities, appear in a lumen like that of a coal fire . . .

4424. They who are in the Knowledges of good and truth . . . and yet in a life of evil, are said to be 'divided' when they are removed from them; for in the other life the Knowledges of good and truth are separated from them, and they are kept in evils, and thence also in falsities . . .

—³. 'Wailing' = their state as to evils; and 'gnashing of teeth' = their state as to falsities.

4444. That they were in evil against the truth of the Church with the ancients. Sig.

4493^o. But all the evil which the evil intend and do to the good, the Lord turns into good. Examp.

4563. Hereditary evil, that it was expelled. Sig.

—². It is known that man derives evil from both parents, and that this evil is called hereditary evil. Into this, therefore, he is born, but still it does not manifest itself until the man grows up, and acts from the understanding and thence from the will; meanwhile it lies stored up, especially in early childhood . . . Therefore little children . . . appear to be in a state of innocence, but still hereditary evil lies concealed in everything which they do; it yields them nourishment, or is as a nurse until they possess judgment . . .

—³. They who have confirmed themselves that they are justified . . . are remitted into the state of their evils from what is actual and hereditary, and are kept in it until . . . they know that of themselves they are nothing but evil . . .

—^e. But the Lord . . . entirely removed, expelled, and cast out all the hereditary evil from the mother; for He had no hereditary evil from the Father . . .

4572². All the conjunction of good with truth is effected by means of temptations; the reason is, that evils and falsities fight back and as it were rebel, and in every possible way strive to impede the conjunction of good with truth . . .

4644². No man is born into any good, but everyone is born into evil; into interior evil from the father, and into exterior evil from the mother . . .

4663^o. For evil never agrees with truth, but the one rejects the other. If, therefore, they who are in evil speak truths, they speak them from the mouth . . .

4672^o. If evil is in the place of good, it drives away the Lord, and rejects and perverts all things which are of the Lord, thus all things which are of faith . . .

4674. 'An evil report' (Gen. xxxvii. 2) = the blemishes and vices of those who are signified by Joseph's brethren . . .

—². The case is this: the falsities and evils of . . . those who are in the Church do not appear to those who are there; for falsities are not seen from falsities, nor evils from evils, because principles of falsity put truths completely in the shade, and a life of evil extinguishes them. Both of them . . . induce an appearance as if falsities were truths, and truths falsities; and as if good were evil, and evil good . . .

4729. 'An evil beast' (ver. 20) = the life of cupidities.

—². Therefore, when a man wills evil from cupidity, he thinks and confirms it; the confirmation of evil by means of thought is what is called falsities from the life of cupidities; these falsities appear as if they were truths; and when he has confirmed falsities with himself, then truths appear to him like falsities . . .

4744². 'An empty pot' is one in which there is uncleanness and scum, that is, evil and falsity.

4745. 'They sat down to eat bread' = the appropriation of evil from falsity.

—^e. There are two origins of evil in general, one from life, the other from doctrine; that which is from the doctrine of falsity is called evil from falsity.

4750³. Against the good of celestial love in the opposite is the evil of the love of self; and against the good of spiritual love in the opposite is the evil of the love of the world; they who are in the evil of the love of self are against every good whatever; they who are in the evil of the love of the world not so much so.

—⁵. The evil of the love of self, is not, as commonly appears, the outward elation which is called pride, but is hatred against the neighbour, and thence a burning desire for revenge, and the delight of cruelty . . .

4779³. See DUST.

4782. 'All his daughters' = those who are in evils.

4818. The affection of evil from the falsity of evil. Sig.

—³. Evil from the falsity of evil is evil of life from the false doctrine which has been hatched from the evil of the love of self, that is, by those who are in that evil, and confirmed by means of the sense of the letter of the Word; such is the origin of the evil with the Jewish nation ; and such is the origin of the evil with some in the Christian world, especially with those who are meant by 'Babel.' This evil is of such a character that it closes up every way to the internal man to such a degree that nothing of conscience can be formed therein ; for the evil which a man does from false doctrine he believes to be good, because he believes it to be true ; and thus he does it from allowableness, freedom, and delight. Therefore Heaven is so closed to him that it cannot be opened. Examps.

[A. 4818]^f. This evil, as to its quality, cannot be distinguished from other evils by men in the world ; but in the other life evils and falsities appear, as to their quality, and as to their source, with all their distinctive differences, which are innumerable. The Hells are distinguished according to the genera and species of evils and falsities. Man knows almost nothing about these innumerable things ; he merely believes that there is evil, but the quality of evil he knows not ; and this simply because he does not know what good is . . . Had he known the good of charity, he would also have known its opposites, or evils, with all their distinctive differences.

4823. 'Son,' in the opposite sense, = falsity and also evil, but the evil which is from falsity. In its essence, this evil is falsity, because it is thence ; for he who does evil from false doctrine, does falsity ; but as it comes into act, it is called evil. The first-born (son of Judah) = falsity ; and this one = evil. Ex.

—². In the opposite sense, falsity is signified by 'man-vir ;' and evil by 'wife.' But when 'husband and wife' are mentioned . . . then in the opposite sense, evil is signified by 'husband ;' and falsity, by 'wife.' Ex.

4836^e. For evil is nothing but aversion and hatred against the good and truth of the Church.

4837. Evil from the falsity of evil is described by what Onan did . . .

4839. 'What he did was evil in the eyes of Jehovah' (Gen.xxxviii.10)=that it was against Divine order.

— . All that evil is against Divine order which flows forth from evil interiorly, that is, from the intention or end of evil . . . But that which does not flow forth from evil interiorly . . . sometimes appears as evil, but still is not evil if the end is not evil . . .

—². That evil is against Divine order . . . may be known to everyone. Ex.

—^e. Evil Spirits . . . appear as monsters . . . because evil itself is against order, thus against the human form . . .

4843². The worship of evil is signified by 'to sacrifice upon the heads of the mountains ;' and the worship of falsity, by 'to offer incense upon the hills ;' the life of evil is signified by 'the daughters committing whoredom ;' and the doctrine of falsity from which is the life of evil, by 'the daughters-in-law committing adultery.'

—⁴. In temptations, there is a combat of evil against truth, and of falsity against good ; for spiritual temptations are nothing else than vastations of the evil and falsity with a man.

4851. A change of the state as to evil from falsity. Sig.

4865. Therefore adulteries and harlotries=evil and falsity . . . (for) they descend from the conjunction of evil and To, which is from Hell.

4876³. 'To inquire of wood' = to consult evils ; 'the staff shall answer' = the falsity thence, which has power from the evil which they confirm ; 'the spirit of whoredom' = the life of falsity from evil.

4942. The Spirits there are kept in such fear (of thieves) to the intent that they may be deterred from evils, because with some, fear is a means of amendment.

4956. The essence of charity . . . is the acknowledgment of self as being evil and falsity . . . The opposite to the neighbour is evil and falsity ; to these he who has charity is averse : he therefore who has charity . . . is averse to evil and falsity because they are from himself. Sig.

4997. 'How shall I do this great evil, and sin to God' (Gen.xxxix.9)=that thus there would be disjunction, and no conjunction. . . It is said 'to do evil, and sin to God,' because, regarded in itself, evil, and also sin, is nothing else than disjunction from good ; evil itself consists in disunion . . . (For) evil is of the love of self and of the love of the world ; the evil of the love of self disjoins a man not only from the Lord, but also from Heaven, because he loves no one except himself . . . Nor is the case different with the evil of the love of the world ; for this evil covets the wealth and the goods of others . . . hence, also, come enmities and hatreds, but in a less degree. In order for anyone to know what evil is, and therefore what sin is, let him only study to know what the love of self and the love of the world are . . . From this he will know what evil is, and consequently what falsity is.

5025³. It is spiritual . . . to view everyone as separated from ourselves who is in evil, whether he is known or unknown . . . for then we are disjoined from those who are in Hell.

5032^e. They who are solely in natural good, in the other life suffer hard things . . . (because) they had done many evils under the appearance of good.

5036². The man is at that time let into the state of the evil in which he is, (and then) evil Spirits surround him, and when they apperceive that he is interiorly protected by Angels, they excite the falsities which he has thought, and the evils which he has done, but the Angels defend him from within : it is this combat which . . . is perceived as temptation . . .

5069. They who believe themselves to be . . . so justified, that they have no longer anything of evil, are not among the just, but are among the unjust . . . They who are called 'just' and 'holy,' are they who know, and acknowledge, that . . . all evil is from self, that is, is with them from Hell.

5070. It is the opposite with those who are in evil ; these do indeed appear, especially to themselves, to have life, but it is such life as in the Word is called 'death' . . . (for) as there is life in good and in the truth thence, there cannot be life in evil and in the falsity thence . . .

5071. The reason it is said . . . 'Depart from Me ye cursed into eternal fire' . . . is that they had turned to evil and falsity . . . 'Eternal fire' . . . is the concupiscence of evil . . . That it is not the torment of conscience, is because all who are in evil have no conscience . . . Infernal fire is from the love of evil and falsity . . .

5102. 'Wherefore are your faces evil to-day?' (Gen. xl.7)=from what affection was the sadness?

5113². By means of this new will, the spiritual man is elevated by the Lord into Heaven, evil still remaining in his own proper will, which will is then miraculously separated, and this by a higher force, by which he is withheld from evil and kept in good.

—¹¹. 'The wild boar in the forest'=falsity; and 'the wild beast of the fields'=evil, which destroy the Church as to faith in the Lord.

5117². 'It made wild grapes'=the evils of hatred and revenge.

5118². Influx is continual from the Lord through the Rational into the interior Natural, and through this into the exterior Natural; but the things which flow in are changed according to the reception; with the non-regenerate, goods are there turned into evils, and truths into falsities.

5125². Man is in a worse lot (than the irrational animals) if he abuses his . . . Rational to confirm the evils and falsities which sensuous things persuade to . . . But if he does not affirm them, but from within sees their deviations into falsities and their excitations to evils, and studies to chastise them . . . then sensuous things are reduced into order . . .

5126⁴. So far as he then and in the following age . . . in their place believes falsities and does evils, the Rational is closed, and also the interior Natural; yet . . . so much of the communication remains as enables him to apprehend (goods and truths), but not to appropriate them, unless . . . for a long time afterwards he struggles with falsities and evils.

5127². Still more (is man's thinking and willing solely of the exterior Natural) when he thinks falsities and wills evils. Des.

—³. The faculty or power of understanding is always preserved to man by the Lord, but it is very obscure with those who are in falsities and evils; and is always more clear as the falsities and evils are lulled. The Lord's Divine continually flows in with man and enlightens, but where there are falsities and evils, that is, where there are things contrary to truths and goods, the Divine light is either reflected, or suffocated, or perverted; and only so much of it is received as it were through chinks as to enable the man to be in the capacity of thinking and speaking from sensuous things . . .

5128⁴. For a life of evil closes up all life or communication with the Rational, and causes the man to be merely natural and sensuous.

5134. 'And bring me forth out of this house'=deliverance from evils. . . For this follows in its order, (because) when faith is received in the exterior Natural correspondence is effected, and charity is received, and thus communication is effected with the interior Natural; and then the former is delivered from the evils by which the Celestial represented by Joseph has been estranged . . . Moreover, when the Natural is regenerated by means of charity and faith, it is delivered from evils; for evils are then separated, and are cast out of the centre where they were before, to the circumferences, to which the light of truth from good does not reach. With man, evils are thus separated, but are still retained, for they cannot be quite blotted out; but with the Lord . . . evils and falsities were completely cast out and blotted out; for the Divine can have nothing in common with evils and falsities, nor can it be terminated in them, as is the case with man; for the Divine is estranged from evil and falsity at an infinite distance.

5135. That celestial things were estranged through evil. Sig. . . 'To be taken away by theft'=to be estranged through evil. Ex. . . It shall be told how the case is with evils and falsities when they enter and occupy the seat, and also when they claim for themselves the goods and truths which are there. Ex.

—². When man advances in age . . . if he denies (the things which he had before learned and believed) it is a sign that he is in evil . . .

—⁴. But if evil steals the goods and truths there, and applies them to confirm evils and falsities . . . it consumes these remains, because it then commingles evils with goods, and falsities with truths, so that they cannot be separated, and then it is all over with the man.

—⁵. The evil which takes away the remains of good, is signified by 'him that stealeth,' and by 'the house of the thief;' and the falsity which takes away the remains of truth, is signified by 'him that perjureth himself,' and by 'the house of the perjurer.'

—⁶. By 'the accursed things' were signified falsities and evils, which were in no wise to be commingled with holy things.

—⁷. 'Esau'=the evil of the love of self to which falsities are adjoined. That this evil consumes the remains of good and truth. Sig.

—⁸. 'Grapegatherers'=falsities which are not from evil; by these falsities the goods and truths which are stored up by the Lord with man in the interior Natural—that is, remains—are not consumed; but by falsities from evils, which steal truths and goods, and also, by wrong applications, apply them to confirm evils and falsities.

—¹¹. 'Murders'=the evils which destroy goods; 'enchantments'=the falsities thence which destroy truths.

5138. Above, evil was treated of . . . here, falsity is treated of; for where in the Word it speaks of the one, it also speaks of the other . . . for there is an infernal marriage of evil and falsity; for where there is evil there also is falsity; falsity adjoins itself to evil as a wife to a husband . . .

5149². It is the falsity of evil which consumes goods; evil itself is opposite to good, but by itself it does not consume goods, but by means of falsity . . .

5155. Providence is predicated of good, but foresight of evil; for all good flows in from the Lord . . . but all evil from Hell or from the proprium of man . . . Providence concerning evil is nothing else than the direction or determination of evil to less evil, and as much as possible to good; but the evil itself is foreseen.

5156². Unless those who had been hanged had been cast away before the evening, it would have represented that evil was not rejected . . .

[A.5156².] Stoning was on account of falsity; and hanging upon wood was on account of evil. Ex.

—^e. 'To commit adultery with stone and wood' = the perversion of truth, or falsity; and the adulteration of good, or evil.

5185^e. They are those who in the life of the body have adhered tenaciously to their opinions, not so much from evil of life, as from natural depravity.

5203. 'Evil in aspect' (Gen.xli.3)=what is not of faith.

5246^e. For when a man is being tempted, unclean Spirits are near him . . . and excite the evils and falsities which are with him, and also withhold him in them, and pile them up, even to despair . . .

—³. But when the state of temptation ceases, this dark cloud is dissipated, and there is serenity; the reason of which is, that the falsities and evils with man are opened by means of temptations, and are removed; when they are opened, that dark cloud appears; and when they are removed, that serenity appears. Sig.

5259^e. Consequently . . . that man thinks falsely and acts evilly, is from the form which he has impressed on himself.

5270^e. The truths which a man has imbibed cannot be initiated and conjoined with good, so long as there remain in the natural man the evils of the love of self and of the world.

—^e. When this has been done, the Natural is illuminated from within, and then the evils of the loves of self and of the world give place, and in the same degree truths are restored and are conjoined with good.

5339^e. Hence the man who is in evil and thence in falsity, is a Hell in the least form.

5351². That which proceeds from the will is called . . . evil with those who do not want to receive (a new Voluntary from the Lord); and that which proceeds from the Intellectual, is called . . . falsity with those who are not regenerate.

5352. The removal, after temptations, of the evils which occasioned grief. Sig.

5353. The removal of hereditary evils. Sig. . . 'The house of my father,' here, = hereditary evils.

— . In the Original Language, 'Manasseh' means oblivion; thus, in the internal sense, the removal of evils both actual and hereditary; for when these are removed the new Voluntary arises; for the new Voluntary comes forth by means of the influx of good from the Lord, which is continual with man, but it is evils both actual and hereditary which prevent and oppose its reception; wherefore, when they are removed, the new Voluntary comes forth. Examps.

5354. Few know what good and evil are . . . because they do not know what charity . . . is; did they know this, they would also know what good is; and, from good, what evil is. . . This Celestial is continually flowing in, but evils and falsities stand in the way and prevent its reception. In order, therefore, that it may be received, it is necessary for man to remove evils, and, so far as he can, falsities too, and thus dispose himself to receive the influx; when, after evils have been removed, man receives the influx, he then receives a new will and a new Intellectual . . .

—³. From himself, man is nothing but evil, which continually exhales as from a furnace, and is continually endeavouring to extinguish the nascent good; and the removal of such evil, and the inrooting of good in its place, can only be effected through the whole course of life, and by Divine means which are innumerable and ineffable . . .

5356^e. By means of temptations, evils and falsities are mastered, so that they no longer attempt to rise up. Thus are evils with falsities rejected to the sides, and there hang, but flaccidly downwards.

5380^e. For the falsities and evils in which the infernals are, are nothing but urine and excrement in the spiritual sense.

5398. The men of the Church . . . do not know what sin or evil is. If they knew this, they would know that sins cannot possibly be wiped away from anyone, but that they are separated or rejected to the sides to prevent their rising up . . . also that this cannot be done, unless evil is continually cast out, and this by means indefinite in number, and for the most part ineffable . . .

—². Still, they (whose sins are remitted) are not on that account separated from the diabolical crew, to whom they are tied by means of evils, which follow the life, which all have with them. They afterwards learn by experience that to be separated from the Hells is to be separated from sins; and that this cannot possibly be effected, except by a thousand and a thousand methods known to the Lord alone; and this by a continual succession . . . to eternity; for man is such evil, that to eternity he cannot be fully delivered from a single sin; but only, of the Lord's mercy, if he has received it, be withheld from sin, and kept in good.

—^e. For with those who are in anxiety on such occasions, there is an internal acknowledgment of evil . . .

5489². Hence it is, that with the unregenerate, who have rejected the good of charity, the scientifics, which are the truths of the Church, have adjoined to them such things as are of the love of self and of the love of the world, thus evils, which, on account of the delight that is in them, they call goods.

5561. Into such a state are they reduced who have led an evil life, and yet have some remains of good . . .

5585. If there is no conjoining medium, there is no reception of good; and when there is no reception of good, there is evil in its place. If, then, man cries to the Lord, inasmuch as he cries from evil . . . there is no hearing . . .

5623². To those who are in evil, evil is pleasurable, and so is to confirm evil by means of falsities; and therefore they long for falsities; and as they long for falsities they are averse to truths; hence it is that they have no capacity of receiving truths . . . Moreover, every man . . . is in the capacity of receiving truths, but they who turn themselves to evil extinguish that capacity.

5651². The Natural from infancy has imbued nothing else than the things which belong to the cupidities of self and of the world, thus things contrary to charity. The effect of these evils is, that good cannot flow in through the internal man from the Lord; for whatever flows in, is turned in the Natural into evil; the Natural being the plane in which the influx is terminated; and therefore, unless the Natural, that is, the evil and falsity which has formed the Natural, becomes of no account, good cannot possibly flow in through Heaven from the Lord . . . for it cannot abide in evil and falsity.

5696^e. Not that the Lord ever removes or hides mercy, but when he who is being regenerated is let into his evils, the Lord appears to him as if He were removed and hidden: there are evils which interpose themselves, and they effect this.

5712^e. That man is subject to death by reason of evils, or on account of sin, is known . . . So also is he to diseases, for these belong to death.

5725. When man is in this inundation, he is angry, etc., in one way when the left part of the brain is inundated, where falsities are, and in another way when the right is inundated, where evils are.

—^e. The last posterity of the most ancients . . . were completely inundated with evils and falsities, and so perished.

5726. Evil closes the smallest and quite invisible vessels . . . (See DISEASE, here.)

5746. 'Wherefore do ye recompense evil for good?' (Gen. xlv. 4) = why is there aversion? . . . For evil is nothing but aversion (or turning away) from good; for they who are in evil spit out good, that is, the spiritual good which is of charity and faith. That evil is aversion, is very manifest from the evil in the other life, (where) they appear . . . completely inverted, consequently averted.

5763. All freedom from proprium is infernal; for when a man does and thinks anything from his Own freedom, he does and thinks nothing but evil; and is therefore the slave of the devil, for all evil flows in from Hell; he also feels delight in this freedom, because it agrees with the evil in which he is, and into which he was born.

5764. In Hell all associates conspire together into evil . . . (therefore) when they do evil, all are punished . . .

5798². The man who is in evil is angry, etc., and then opposes himself to good and truth; and the penalty which is from the evil he attributes to Jehovah . . .

—⁴. This is like a criminal . . . who attributes to the judge, and not to himself, the evil of the penalty.

—⁵. Here, 'fury,' etc., are nothing but the evils of the penalty on account of aversion and active hostility against good and truth. By a Divine law, all evil is attended with its own penalty . . . In the other life, evil and the penalty cohere together; for as soon as an infernal Spirit does evil beyond his wont, the punishing Spirits are present, and punish, and this without advertence . . .

5828. The apperception that (internal good) has perished by evils and falsities. Sig. . . The reason 'to be torn to pieces' has this signification, is that in the Spiritual World there is no tearing to pieces except that of good by evils and falsities . . .

—². The good which flows in from the Lord . . . perishes no otherwise than by evils and the falsities thence, and by falsities and the evils thence; for as soon as that good comes in a continuous state through the internal man to the external, it is met by evil and falsity, by which the good is torn to pieces and extinguished in various ways as by wild beasts . . .

—³. If there exists no efflux, but if there is resistance in the external man, that is, evil and falsity, which tear to pieces and extinguish the influent good, it follows . . . that the influx accommodates itself to the efflux; and therefore the influx of good draws itself back, and thus the internal is closed . . . and at last comes insanity, so that he sets up falsities against truths, and calls the former truths, and the latter falsities; and he sets up evils against goods, and makes the former goods, and the latter evils; thus good is completely torn to pieces.

—⁴. 'What is torn to pieces,' in the proper sense, = that which perishes by falsities from evils; but that which perishes by means of evils is called 'a carcase;' when, however, only 'what is torn to pieces' is mentioned, it = both . . . Ill.

5846. Everything flows in . . . evil and falsity from Hell, thus through the evil Spirits who are with man.

5848. In order that the Lord's life may flow in . . . there are continually with man . . . (two) Spirits from Hell . . . The reason there are Spirits from Hell, is that of himself man is continually in evil, for he is in the delight of the love of self and of the world; and in proportion as man is in evil . . . Angels cannot be present.

5893². I have apperceived, that when evil Spirits poured in evils and falsities, the Angels . . . kept me in the truths which had been implanted, and thus withheld me from evils and falsities.

[A.] 5897⁷. The goods and truths from the Lord are stored away in man's interiors . . . the reason is that man is continually among evils and falsities. Sig.

5963². They who are in the perception of the Lord's presence, are in the perception . . . that evils do not reach them . . .

5977. Spirits infuse falsities . . . but Genii infuse evils (and) smell in a moment what a man longs for; and if this is good, they most skilfully bend it into evil: they are in the delight of their life when they can cause good to be apperceived as evil, and evil as good. From experience.

5981. (The Angels perceive evil mildly.)

5992². The Angels observe whether any Hells are open that were not open before . . . as takes place when a man goes into any new evil . . .

—³. The Angels call forth the goods and truths with man, and oppose them to the evils and falsities which the evil Spirits excite; thus man is in the midst, and does not perceive either the evil or the good . . . If the Angels were to intermit [their care] for a single moment, the man would be precipitated into evil, from which he could never afterwards be brought out.

5993². (Thus) man cannot live without communication with the Hells . . . for all his life which he derives from his parents . . . and all he superadds thereto from what is his own is of the love of self and the world . . . thus it is one of contempt for others in comparison with himself, of hatred and revenge against all who do not favour him, and therefore of cruelty . . . and unless such Spirits were applied to these evils . . . and man, through them, were led according to the delights of his own life, he could never be bent towards Heaven . . .

6000⁹. 'The death which wastes at noonday' = the evil in which he openly lives.

6024³. That falsity and evil were extirpated. Sig.

—⁴. This general scientific (is first to be believed), that all things which come forth are from God, and so therefore are the evils of penalty; but in what way they are from God, is to be learned afterwards.

—⁶. Moreover . . . they who are in Hell say that all evil is from God, because He permits it and does not take it away; but those who are in the World of Spirits receive for answer, that if evil were taken away from them they would have no life, nor would the man who is in evil; and that the evil which is in them punishes itself according to a law; and that by means of the evils of penalty they at last abstain from doing evils; and also that the punishment of the evil is the protection of the good.

6097. 'Little and evil have been the days of the years of my life' (Gen. xlvii. 9) = that the state of the life of the Natural is full of temptations . . . Temptations in that state are signified by 'the days having been evil.' All temptations appear evil . . . for the man is then let into the state of his evils . . .

—^e. The Natural is especially let into temptations when it is to receive the Spiritual, because therein reside the evils of life and the falsities of doctrine.

6159². The Spirits who are evil, that is, with whom evil has the dominion, are evil in each and all things, even when they are speaking truth and doing good . . . The Angels . . . are good in each and all things . . . and even if they do anything of evil in the external form, still it is their end or intention that good may come forth from it. (Thus) where good universally reigns, it reigns in each and all things; and in like manner evil.

6203. As to the origin of the influx of evil from Hell, the case is this. When a man first from consent, then from purpose, and at last from the delight of affection, casts himself into evil, the Hell is opened which is in such evil—for according to evils and all their varieties are the Hells distinguished from each other—and afterwards there is an influx from this Hell also. When a man comes into evil thus, it adheres to him; for the Hell in whose sphere he then is, is in its own delight when it is in its own evil; wherefore it does not desist, but obstinately persists, and causes the man to think about that evil, at first occasionally, and afterwards as often as anything occurs which is related to it, and at last it becomes with him that which universally reigns; and when this takes place, he seeks out such things as confirm it not to be evil, and this until he completely persuades himself; and then, so far as he can, he studies to get quit of external bonds, and makes evils allowable and clever, and at last even creditable and honourable; as adulteries, thefts achieved by means of arts and wiles, various kinds of arrogance and boasting, contempt for others, vituperations, persecutions under the appearance of justice, and the like . . .

6204. The evil which enters into the thought does no injury to the man, because evil is continually infused by Spirits from Hell, and is continually repelled by the Angels; but when evil enters into the will, it does injure, for then it goes into act as often as external bonds do not restrain. Evil enters into the will by being kept in the thought; by consent; and especially by act and consequent delight.

6206. All evil flows in from Hell . . . but the reason evil is appropriated to man, is that he believes and persuades himself that he thinks and does it from himself; thus he makes it his own. If he believed as the case really is, evil would not be appropriated to him . . . for then, when evil flowed in, he would at once think that it was from the evil Spirits with him; and when he thought this, the Angels would avert and reject it . . .

—². When a man thus appropriates evil to himself, he procures for himself a sphere of that evil, which sphere is that to which the Spirits from Hell adjoin themselves who are in the sphere of the like evil.

6279. 'The Angel who redeemeth me from all evil' (Gen. xlviii. 16) = the Lord's Divine Human by which there is deliverance from Hell. . . 'Evil' = Hell . . . because Hell itself is nothing but evil; for whether you say that all in Hell are the evil, or that Hell is evil, is the same thing. In the spiritual sense, when evil is mentioned, Hell is meant. Ex.

—². 'Sim' = Hell, which is at hand when man does evil. Evil itself also with man is nothing but Hell, for it inflows thence; and man is then a Hell in the least image.

6298. Evil is foreseen and good is provided; and the evil which is foreseen is bent by Providence into good. 6489.

6308. With the evil there is not an equilibrium between evil and good. But they who are in good . . . know from the Word that there is something within which fights against the evil and falsity with them.

—². The evil which inflows into the thought from evil Spirits does no injury whatever to man if he does not receive it; but if he receives it, and transfers it from the thought into the will, he then makes it his own. Sig.

6324². If man believed as the case really is . . . that all evil and falsity is from Hell, he could not be made guilty of any fault, nor could evil be imputed to him; but as he believes that it is from himself, he appropriates evil to himself; for the faith effects this; thus evil adheres to him, nor can it be separated from him. H. 302.

6325. It is an eternal truth . . . that no one lives from himself except the Lord; consequently that everything of life flows in; the life of good from the Lord, and the life of evil from Hell. . . When a man is in this faith, as he can be when he is in good, then evil cannot be affixed and appropriated to him, because he knows that it is not from himself, but from Hell . . .

6348. If faith in doctrine . . . is not initiated into and conjoined with good, it is either dissipated . . . or is initiated and conjoined with evil and falsity. Sig. and Ex.

—³. If (faith alone) is conjoined with evil, which is done when a man first believes the truth of faith, and still more when he first lives according to it, and afterwards denies and lives contrary to it, it becomes a profane thing; for the truth which is of faith and the good which is of charity are first by means of doctrine and life inrooted in the interiors, and are afterwards called forth thence and conjoined with evil. The man in whom this takes place has the worst lot of all in the other life; for with such a one good cannot be separated from evil, which yet are separated in the other life. Neither has such a one any remains of good stored up in his interiors, because they have completely perished in evil . . . Therefore, in order to prevent the profanation of good and truth, the man who is such as not to suffer himself to be regenerated . . . is permitted to be in evil and thence in falsity.

6354. That spiritual good does not want to know the evils which are of their will. Sig.

6368. From himself, man is in Hell; for his will and thought from proprium is nothing but evil and the falsity thence . . .

—². All the states which a man has acquired in the life of the body are retained in the other life, and are infilled . . . The states of evil with the evil are retained and are infilled with evil . . .

6370. He is safe among all evils, even in the midst of the Hells; for love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour are attended with this. Ex. and Sig.

—². There are innumerable Hells, distinguished according to the genera of all evils and the falsities thence, and according to their species, and the singles of species.

6398^e. 'A serpent' = all evil in general; and evils are distinguished by the various kinds of serpents.

6423. Good is of such a character that nothing of evil and falsity can approach it . . .

6427². As the good with the spiritual is impure, they cannot but be infested by evils and falsities, and thus be in combat. Sig.

6467. There is only one life . . . but it is received . . . according to the quality which a man has induced on his soul by his life in the world; hence, with the evil, goods and truths are turned into evils and falsities . . .

6475^e. Where the good of charity is, there the Lord is; and (also) where the contrary is; but no otherwise than to give them life, and, so far as possible, to withdraw them from evil.

6495². As the man who is in this state (that he receives influx from Hell) desires nothing but evils, and thinks nothing about spiritual life but falsities . . . he is kept in bonds by his loves themselves . . .

6502. 'Joseph commanded his servants the physicians' = preservation from the evils which impeded conjunction. . . 'Physicians' = preservation from evils . . . because, in the Spiritual World, diseases are evils and falsities; spiritual diseases are nothing else; for evils and falsities take away health from the internal man, and induce sicknesses of the mind, and at last pains. Ill.

6559. 'To bring back the evil which we have recompensed to him' (Gen. l. 15) = a penalty according to merit.

— How the case is with the bringing back of evil . . . in the Spiritual World . . . If evil Spirits do any evil in the World of Spirits beyond what they have imbued by their life in the world, the punishers are at once present, and chastise them exactly according to the degree of the transcendency; for it is a law in the other life, that no one must become worse than he had been in the world. They who are punished are utterly unaware how it is that the chastisers know that the evil is beyond that which they had imbued; but they are informed that such is the order in the other life, that the evil itself has its own penalty with it, so that the evil of the deed is completely conjoined with the evil of the penalty, that is, in the evil itself there is its penalty.

—². This is the case when evil Spirits in the World of Spirits do evil; but in their own Hell the one chastises the other, according to the evil which they have actually imbued in the world ; for this evil they bring along with them into the other life.

[A. 6559]^e. As to good Spirits, if perchance they speak evilly or do evil, they are not punished, but are pardoned, and also excused, because their end is not to speak evilly or do evil ; and they know that such things are excited with them by Hell . . .

6563. 'Transgression'=evil against truth, which is less ; and 'sin'=evil against good, which is greater.

6564. 'Because they have recompensed evil to thee' (ver.17)=that they were averse to the good and truth which flow in. 'Evil'=aversion.

—². This closing up (of the interiors) penetrates towards the exteriors more and more according to the life of evil and the persuasion of falsity thence.

6571. 'Ye thought evil upon me' (ver.20)=that the things which are estranged intend nothing but evil. Ex.

— . The man who is estranged from good and truth intends nothing but evil (and this evil is in the least things of his thought and will) . . . Hence it may be evident, that the man who is an evil end cannot possibly be among those who are good ends . . . —^e.

6574². 'Ye thought evil upon me, God thought it for good' are words which contain a great arcanum, (which) is this : the Lord permits the infernals in the other life to lead the good into temptations, consequently, to infuse falsities and evils . . . but at such times the Lord . . . is present, and resists, by rebutting the falsities of the evil Spirits, and by dissipating their evil, whence come refreshment, hope, and victory . . . (Thus) the Spirits who induce temptations intend nothing but evil, but the Divine turns it into good . . .

6600². The thought and affection of those who are in evil and falsity have extension into infernal Societies, and this according to the degree of the evil and falsity with them.

6610. So long as a man lives, the ideas of his thought are . . . multiplied and divided, and are thus extended to various and to new Societies ; with those who are in evil, to infernal Societies ; and in like manner with those who are in persuasions of falsity.

6631. Then the delights of earthly loves take entire possession of him, and with them all the evils which are delightful to him from these loves.

6635. The infestation of the truths of faith by the falsities and evils in the Natural. Tr.

6637². They who live in evil, thus who live contrary to doctrine, are further outside the Church than the Gentiles . . .

6655². They who are true men of the Church . . . if they see evil with anyone, excuse it.

—^e. But they who are in evil are afraid of anything they are thinking and willing to shine forth ; for they intend nothing but evil to the neighbour . . .

6657. That thus the associates will be strengthened who inflict evil. (Sig. by what Pharaoh said to his people, Ex.i.10.)

— . The sphere which is from Hell (which is around every man and good Spirit) is a sphere of endeavours to do evil and to destroy . . . Hence man is in equilibrium, and has freedom to think and will evil . . . When, therefore, the man of the Church comes into temptation, which takes place when he is let into his evil, there is a combat around him . . . which lasts so long as the man is kept in his evil.

6663. Most Spirits who come from the world, and have lived the life of the Lord's precepts, before they can be elevated into Heaven . . . are infested by the evils and falsities with them, to the intent that these may be removed . . . The infestations are effected by means of immersions in their own evils and falsities ; and while they are in them, Spirits are present who are in like evils and falsities . . . But still they are not immersed in their own evils and falsities any deeper than so that the influx from the Lord through the Angels prevails ; this is done with an exactitude like that of a balance. The reason is, that he who is being infested may appear to himself to be in freedom, and thus to fight from himself against evils and falsities . . .

—². In such combats it is a general thing for the Lord to turn into good all the evils which the Hells intend ; wherefore it is not permitted to bring forth more and other evils than what can be turned into good that is suitable to him who is in the combat . . .

6666^e. For all evil is contagious, and infects, as dregs do the dough ; thus at last it infects all. T.120².

6669. 'In clay and in bricks'=on account of the evils which they found out and the falsities which they fashioned. . . That 'clay'=the evil from which is falsity. Ill.

6677². If evil, which is of the love of self and the love of the world, and is apparent good to those who are in these things, attacks the good which is of celestial love, the life of the one fights against the life of the other . . .

6708^e. They who are in evil are indeed the neighbour, but in a quite different respect . . .

6724. 'She bituminated it with bitumen and pitch' = good mixed with evils and falsities. Ex.

—². While man is being reformed, as to his internal he is kept . . . in good and truth, and as to his external is let into his evils and falsities, consequently, among the evil Spirits who are in these evils and falsities . . . (But) that which acts interiorly prevails immensely over that which acts exteriorly . . . Thus can good be among evils and falsities, and still be in safety . . . Thus are the evils and falsities removed in which he is, and goods and truths are inserted in their place.

—^e. Further, good can be mixed with evils and falsities, but they are not on that account conjoined together ; for the one shuns the other, and by a law of order each separates itself from the other . . .

6779. They who teach and are in evils. Sig. and Des.

—². For they who are in evils never acknowledge that charity and its works contribute to salvation . . . (for) being in evils, they do not even know what charity is . . .

6828. For he who is in temptation is in vastation and desolation ; for the falsity and evil which are with him emerge, and obscure and almost take away the influx of truth and good from the Lord ; neither does the truth which flows in appear to him to have such life as to dispel the falsities and evils.

6829. When a man is in temptation, he is obsessed round about by falsities and evils, which impede the influx of light from the Divine . . . But when the man emerges from the temptation, light appears together with its spiritual heat . . . (and then) falsities and evils are removed; on the removal of which there is an approach by which good and truth penetrate more interiorly. Sig.

6859. 'To the place of the Canaanite and the Hittite' = the region occupied by evils and falsities. By the nations in the Land of Canaan . . . are signified all the genera of evils and falsities.

6859. 'And of the Amorite and the Perizzite' = by evils and the falsities thence.

— . There are two origins of evil, and also two origins of falsity; one origin of evil is the falsity of doctrine or religiosity; the other is the cupidities of the love of self and of the world: the first origin of falsity is . . . the falsity of doctrine or religiosity; and the other origin of falsity is the evil of the cupidities of the said loves. Sig.

6951. The Lord provides for that which He foresees; He foresees evil and provides good. Here, therefore, by 'Jehovah said' is signified Providence, because the serpent is now turned into a rod, that is, evil into good.

6952. If a man is in evil and falsity, his interiors together with sensuous things look downwards, thus only to those things which belong to the world; thus he puts off the human nature, and puts on a ferine one; for wild beasts look downwards. . . He who looks downwards wills evil and thinks falsity; but he who is elevated upwards by the Lord wills good and thinks truth; the elevation is effected by the Lord actually, and thus a removal from evils and falsities . . .

6971. The man who is sensuous and corporeal is not rational, thus neither is he spiritual, for he thinks falsities and wills evils . . . (and) the acknowledgment and faith of truth, and the life of good, is the veriest Spiritual itself in the Rational . . . whereas the acknowledgment and faith of falsity, and the life of evil, is what is contrary.

—². Hence it is that such see no otherwise than that the evils of their life are goods, and thence that falsities are truths.

6978. 'The whole (city) is a lie and full of rapine' = falsity and the evil from falsity.

—^e. 'A heap of the carcase, neither is there an end of the body' = that thence are innumerable evils, and they who are in evils.

6991. From (the influx of life from the Lord) there come forth both the evils and the goods with everyone; but the evils from man, and the goods from the Lord. The reason evils come forth from man, is that the life which flows in from the Lord, that is, the good and truth, is turned by the man into evil and falsity, thus into what is contrary to life . . . But as it appears as if the Lord brings in evil also, because He gives life, therefore . . . in the Word evil is attributed to the Lord.

6997². The reason anger is attributed to the Lord . . . is that it is a most general truth that all things come from God, thus both evils and goods; but this most general truth, which must be for children and the simple, must afterwards be enlightened, to wit, that evils are from man, but that they appear to be from God, and that it is so said in order that they may learn to fear God, lest they should perish by the evils which they themselves do; and that they may afterwards learn to love Him; for fear precedes love . . .

—⁵. In many passages, 'anger,' 'fire,' etc., mean the punishments and damnations into which a man casts himself when he casts himself into evils; for from Divine order goods are attended by their rewards; and hence it is that evils are attended by punishments; so much so, that they are conjoined together. Ill.

7007. He thinks that if the Divine were in everything that takes place, evils would not come to pass . . .

—². (But) unless man is in freedom he can never be reformed . . . Hence it is that man is allowed to think evil and to do evil so far as external fears do not restrain.

7032. Obstnacy from the delight of doing evil. Sig.

—². This obstnacy is (inDESCRIBABLY GREAT) . . . the reason is that it is the delight of their life to do evil: this delight they have acquired while they lived in the world, especially from this, that they loved themselves alone . . . They who are such . . . act from their own proper Voluntary, which is evil both hereditarily and from actual life; and they who act from (that) act evil from love . . . Hence they have the delight of doing evil, and in proportion as they are in this delight, they are in obstnacy. That this is the case does not appear in the world . . . but in the other life, where external things are taken away from them, and they are left to the will . . . they apperceive nothing more delightful than to do evil; which also they do with such obstnacy that they never desist except through punishments . . . and afterwards through demersions into Hell.

7097³. As after the death of the body the life remains, thus the evil which they have thought, contrived and done, therefore, in order to defend the evils of their life, they either apply the things which they have said to be of faith, or utterly reject them; and lest they should abuse the truths of faith, they are deprived of them (and then) they seize upon falsities . . . and afterwards by means of falsities infest those who are in truths; which is then the delight of their life . . .

7102. 'Lest peradventure He fall upon us with pestilence and sword' = to avoid the damnation of evil and falsity.

—². There are four kinds of vastations and punishments mentioned in the Word . . . 'the sword'=the . . . punishment of falsity; 'famine'=the . . . punishment of evil; 'the evil wild beast'=the punishment of evil from falsity; 'the pestilence'=the punishment of evil which is not from falsity but from evil. . . Damnation is also signified, because this is the punishment of those who persevere in evil. III.

[A.7102]⁰. 'The dread of night'=the falsity which is hidden; 'the missile that flieth by day'=the falsity which is open; 'the pestilence that creepeth in thick darkness'=the evil which is hidden; 'the death that wasteth at noonday'=the evil which is open.

7122. There adheres to man, and is in his memories, after death, everything of his thought in the world, of his intention, of his will, of his speech, and of his action; for nothing is obliterated. . . (Therefore) it cannot but be that . . . the evils and falsities from the life in the world adhere. . . Therefore . . . it is necessary that these evils and falsities should be revealed, in order that he may see them, and know them, and thus learn what truth and what good are. This cannot possibly be effected without combat with the evils and falsities appertaining to himself; which combat takes place actually; the evil Spirits excite the evils and falsities, and the Angels excuse if the end has been good. . .

7155. 'The directors of the Sons of Israel saw themselves in evil' (Ex.v.19)=near damnation. . . 'Evil'=damnation; for, regarded in itself, evil is Hell, thus damnation.

7161³. All who are in falsities and evils have an aversion for goods; and truths stink to them.

—⁴. That those who are in evils and falsities have a stink. . .

7178. No one can know what evil is, unless he knows what the love of self and the love of the world are. . . Nor can he ever know what falsity is, unless he knows what evil is. . .

7250. When (these inhabitants of the planet Venus) come into the other life, they are infested to the greatest degree by evils and falsities. . . The Hells which are from them. . . do not communicate with the Hells of the evil of our Earth, because they are of a totally different genius. . . and hence their evils and falsities are of a totally different kind. . .

7255. As. . . evil makes Hell with man, it is of the first importance to know. . . what evil is. . . That is evil which is of the love of self and of the love of the world: hence it follows, that it can only be known from the loves. . . what evil is.

7256. All things in the universe which are against Divine order have relation to evil and falsity. . .

7272. Obstnacy from the evil of falsity. Sig.

— . The evil of falsity is that which has its origin in principles of falsity. Examps.

—³. They who act the evil of falsity all believe that falsity is truth, and consequently either that evil is not evil, or is not worthy of condemnation.

—^e. In a word, the evils of falsity are as many as the falsities of faith and of worship. These evils condemn, but not to such a degree as evils from an origin of evil: evils from an origin of evil are those which are from cupidity which arises from the love of self and of the world.

7301. That those who are in evils from falsities did not receive. Sig.

— . In proportion as they infest, they are in evil from falsities; for infestation is from evil, and is effected by means of falsities.

7317. They who infest are those within the Church who have professed faith, and have also persuaded themselves that faith saves, and yet have lived contrary to the precepts of faith; in a word, they who have been in persuasive faith, and in a life of evil. . . When these come into the other life. . . they say that because they have had faith all the evils of life have been washed away by the blood of the Lamb. . .

7319. Falsity has no stench unless it is applied to truth, nor evil unless it is applied to good. . .

7327. Falsification becomes total when falsity begins to reign; for the man then lives according to the evil innate and acquired, and feels delight therein. . .

7332. The reason (the infesters) are permitted to falsify truths, is to prevent them from having communication, by means of the truths of faith, with those who are in Heaven, and by means of the evils which are of life with those who are in Hell; and thus, by means of truths, acquiring something of light from Heaven. . . and causing it to be of service to the evils which are of life; for they would apply the things which are of intelligence in favour of evil.

—^e. Moreover, truths with the evil effect nothing whatever towards the amendment of their life, but the evil merely use them as a means to do evil. . .

7344². This truth is falsified by the fallacies that the Lord can take away evil if He wants. . . and that as He does not take it away, He is the cause of it, and therefore evil too is from the Lord. . . that the Lord is said 'to punish,' etc.; when yet it is they who are in evil who do this to themselves, and thus bring upon themselves the evil of penalty; for in the other life the evil of penalty and the evil of fault are conjoined together.

7376. (Thus) these two loves are the origins of all evils. . .

7378. The fourth degree (of the vastation of the infesters) is that they were in evils ('lice') which destroyed all good with them, and also whatever they had from natural good. 7419, Ex.

7424. 'The louse was in man and in beast'=that the interior and exterior evils of cupidities were thence.

—². They are called the evils of cupidities because all evils are of cupidities, because cupidities are of loves.

— . Interior evils are distinguished from exterior evils by this: that interior evils are those which are of thought and will, and exterior evils are those which are of act. That there are interior evils which are not exterior ones, is evident from the fact, that a man can be evil, and still in external form appear as if he were an upright man. . .

7436. The appearance of the Divine to those who are in evils. Sig.

7437. That from these evils they again think falsities. Sig.

—¹. 'To go forth'=thought from evils to falsities; for when they who are in evils think from them to falsities, they are said 'to go forth,' because evil, being of the will, is inmost, and falsity is outside of it, because falsity is of the understanding and therefore of the thought. . . Moreover, evil action is from evil will. Sig.

—². As to thought from evils to falsities, it is to be known that those who are in evils cannot do otherwise than think from them to falsities; for evils are of their will and thence of their love, and falsities are of their thought and thence of their faith; for what a man wills he loves, and what he loves he confirms and defends; and evils can only be confirmed and defended by means of falsities. Hence in the Word, where evil is compared to a city, falsities are compared to the fortifications around a city. The reason they who are in evils think to the falsities by means of which they defend the evils, is that evils are the very delights of their life, inasmuch that they are their very life; wherefore, when they apprehend from others that they are evils, in order to prevent their appearing as such, they excogitate falsities, by means of which they cause evils not to be believed to be evils. If, however, the evils dare not appear by means of falsities, they are concealed in the interiors, nor do they manifest themselves except when the fear of the law, and of the loss of reputation, etc., ceases; then the evils break forth, either by means of arts, or by means of open hostilities.

—³. Evil and falsity are conjoined together, inasmuch that he who knows that anyone . . . is in evil, may know that he is in the falsity of his evil; and that he is in falsity in the proportion that he excels in the gift of ratiocinating and perverting; and, further, in proportion as he is in fear of the loss of reputation . . . and in proportion as he wants to be in freedom to do evil. Wonderful to say, after such persons have for some time defended evils by means of falsities, they persuade themselves that evils are goods, and that falsities are truths.

7439³. Not knowing that if the life of evil were taken away from the evil, they would have no life at all . . .

7448^e. That falsities entered where evils were, and that they conjoined themselves with evils. Sig. But when falsities have been conjoined with evils, then evils break forth by means of falsities. Sig.

7488. As all evils come forth from the loves of self and of the world, all falsities come forth thence.

7493. As man appropriates evils to himself, so the Lord separates the good of innocence and charity . . .

7519². So long as evil or infernal Spirits are separated from Heaven . . . they do not know that they are in evils and falsities; for they then believe falsities to be truths, and evils to be goods; but as soon as Heaven approaches nearer to them . . . they apperceive the falsities and evils . . .

7523. 'It shall be upon man and upon beast'=the things which are from interior and exterior evil. . . The interior . . . evil which is signified by 'man,' is that which is of the intention or end; but the exterior

. . . evil which is signified by 'beast,' is that which is of the thought, and thence, when nothing stands in the way, of the action.

7533. It is the evil with man which hardens him against the Divine; and evil comes from man, and flows in from Hell.

7541². With the good (there) evil is successively separated . . . But the evil . . . are infilled successively with evils . . .

7542. The inmost with the evil is the love of self and of the world . . . the things which are around, and which constitute as it were the circumferences, are the evils together with falsities which favour (these loves); and these are disposed in the order in which they favour. In the other life these things are unfolded according to the order in which they are disposed . . .

7577. 'There was hail, and fire walking together in the midst of the hail, very grievous'=the persuasions of falsity together with the cupidities of evil . . . 'To walk in the midst'=to be together, in fact, the cupidity of evil inmost, because the falsity was from it.

—². The persuasions of falsity and the cupidities of evil are inseparable; for he who is in evil as to life is in falsity as to doctrine. It may seem otherwise to those who are in the life of evil . . . (but) they either profess these truths with the mouth and think differently, or they think that it is so from persuasive faith, which faith is for the sake of gain or honours, and therefore when honour and gain are no longer objects of pursuit, this faith falls to the ground, and then they seize upon the falsities which agree with the evils of their cupidities. Falsities which agree with the cupidities of evil exist interiorly with those who live evilly, however much they may believe that they do not. That this is the case, manifests itself clearly in the other life. When external things are there taken away, and such persons are left to their interiors, then the falsities break forth, both those which they have thought in the world, and those which they have not manifestly thought; for they break forth from the evils which have been of their life; for falsities are nothing but evils ratiocinating and supporting themselves.

7599^e. The evil turn themselves away from the Lord . . . hence comes all evil.

7604². All evils and falsities look downwards . . .

7627. Every man can see . . . that truth and evil disagree, and that they cannot be conjoined together. . . Experience testifies the same; he who is in evil as to life, is either in falsity as to faith, or in no faith, or is altogether against faith. And, what is an arcanum, he who is in evil as to life, is in the falsity of his evil . . . 7689. 7790. 7950.

7643. The reason that evil is not from the Lord, but that it comes forth from man, is that man turns to himself that good which flows in from the Lord; and instead of viewing the Lord . . . in everything, he views himself. Hence comes the concupiscence of domineering over all, of possessing all things which belong to others; and hence come contempt for others, and hatreds, revenges, and cruelties against those who do not favour and study him; hence also comes contempt for all things which are of faith and charity, because when these things flow in from the Lord they are turned to himself. . . From these things it may be seen that man turns into evil the good itself which flows in from the Lord. Hence also it is that the evil in the other life remove themselves from Heaven as much as possible; for . . . when good and truth flow in more strongly, they rush the more strongly into the contrary, that is, into evil and falsity; and in the degree in which evil and falsity increase . . . they rush into the evils of penalty; for in the other life evils and penalties are conjoined together.

[A.7643]². From these things it may be evident . . . that evil is from those who are in evil.

—⁵. 'The bruchus' = evil, and 'the locust,' falsity; both in the extremes of the Natural. But when 'the locust' alone is mentioned, there is signified both falsity and evil together; for 'the locust' = falsity from evil.

—⁶. Falsity and evil are especially multiplied in the extremes of the Natural . . .

7711. 'Darkness' is predicated of falsity, and 'thick darkness' of evil together with it; but the word by which 'thick darkness' is here expressed, means the densest darkness, by which are signified such falsities as spring from evil: such falsities come forth with those who have been of the Church, and have lived a life of evil contrary to the precepts of faith which they knew. The evil from which these falsities spring is against the Church, against Heaven, and against the Lord, thus is diametrically contrary to good and truth.

7795. That it may be confirmed that they were in no faith, but in evil. Sig.

— The reason there are so many degrees (of vastation) is that the evil may be confirmed that they are in evil . . .

—². Justice reigns there, and no one is damned, until he himself knows and is interiorly convicted that he is in evil . . . His evils are opened to him. Sig. . . And, what is more, he is also admonished to desist from evil, but when, on account of the dominion of evil, he cannot do so, all the power of doing evil by means of falsifications of truth and simulations of good is taken away from him, which is effected successively, from one degree to another, and at last damnation follows . . . This takes place when he comes into the evil of his life.

—³. The evil of life is the evil of will and of thought thence . . .

7902². Innocence is to acknowledge that with one's self there is nothing but evil . . .

8087. They who separate faith from charity in both doctrine and life cannot be otherwise than in falsity, because evil of life is continually operating, and persuades of falsity conformable to itself; and if truth is offered, by a wrong application it causes it to conform itself, and thus falsifies it.

8094. Evil of life is attended by its own falsity; this falsity lies stored away with the man who is in evil of life, and sometimes he is unaware that it is with him; but as soon as he thinks about the truths of the Church, and especially when he thinks about salvation, this falsity comes forth—prodit—and manifests itself, and if it cannot deny the truth itself as to its own general, it explains it in favour of its own evil, and thus falsifies it. Examp.

8137². There are as many Hells as there are genera and species of evil; every Hell is separated from the others as by mists, clouds, or waters; in the other life evils and falsities appear before the eyes of Spirits as mists and clouds, and also as waters; the falsities from the evils of those who had been of the Spiritual Church and had lived evilly, as waters; but the falsities from the evils of those who had been of the Celestial Church, as mists . . .

8143. A change of state into evil with those who are in falsities from evil. Sig.

8148². Persuasive faith exists with those who are in evil of life, but not saving faith . . .

—⁴. For falsities then break forth from evil; for all evil is attended by its own falsity, for they are conjoined together; and these falsities appear when they are left to the evil of their life; for the evil is then as it were fire, and the falsities are as the lumen thence. This kind of evil and of the falsity thence derived is entirely different from the other kinds of evils and of the falsities thence derived, being more detestable than all the others, because it is against the goods and truths of faith, and therefore there is profanation in this evil.

8206. When a man is kept by the Lord in good and truth, then falsities and evils are removed, and when removed they stand round like a wall; for they cannot enter into the sphere where good and truth is. The reason is that the Lord is present in good and truth, and the Lord's presence moves evil and falsity away on every side; for good and truth are completely opposite to evil and falsity, wherefore they cannot be together without the one destroying the other; but good with truth destroys, that is, removes, evil with falsity, because the former is Divine, and therefore has all power; whereas the latter is infernal, and therefore has no power; the former acts from internals, but the latter from externals. When evils and falsities . . . stand round like a wall (they are) in the perpetual endeavour to rush in, but cannot do so . . . Sig.

—^e. No one can be withheld from evil, and kept in good, unless by means of the exercise of charity in the world he has received this capacity . . . He who, from life, has the love . . . of good, can be in the sphere of good and truth; but not he who by means of life has put on the nature of evil.

820^g. When man is being reformed, he is kept in equilibrium, that is, in freedom, between willing good and willing evil . . . When, therefore, man has been so far reformed that he wills good . . . then good removes evil . . .

821⁴. For the evil, who by means of injections of falsity and evil, want to inflict violence on the good, cast themselves into the penalty of retaliation, which is, that the falsities and evils that they intend to inflict, relapse upon themselves. Sig. . . Wherefore, they who . . . do evil from evil or from the heart, receive evil from others. . . Hence it is . . . that to every evil there is adjoined its punishment. Sig. 823³.

822⁶. In the Hells there is consociation by means of evils, as in the Heavens by means of goods . . .

—^e. 'Nations'=evils; and 'kingdoms,' falsities.

—². It is believed that evils, too, are from the Divine, because the Divine permits, and does not take them away, and he who permits and does not take away when he can, appears as if he willed, and thus that he is the cause. But the Divine permits because He cannot prevent or take away; for the Divine wills nothing but good; and if He prevented and took away evils, namely, those of punishments, of temptations, and the like, He would will evil, because then they could not be amended; and then evil would receive increase until it would have dominion over good. This is like a king who absolves the guilty; he is the cause of the subsequent evil from them in his kingdom, and is also the cause of the consequent license with others; besides the fact that the evil person is confirmed in evil . . .

823². They are then in Hell: the falsities and evils themselves in which they are torment them; the torment . . . comes from the fact that they cannot do evil; for this is the delight of their life; for when, there, they do evil to others, they are punished and tormented by those to whom they do it . . .

823⁷. Hence it is, that evils can be seen from good, but not goods from evil; for good is higher, and evil is lower.

826⁵. The reason is, that in the Divine there is omnipotence, which destroys and extinguishes that which is opposite, thus falsity and evil. Hence the life of those who are in falsity and evil labours at the Divine presence . . . But to prevent those who are in falsities and evils from being utterly destroyed and tormented, they are veiled over by their own falsities and evils, as by mists, which are of such a nature that they either break, repel, or suffocate the influx of the Divine . . . Sig.

827⁹. 'Depths'=the Hells relatively to evils; and 'abysses,' the Hells relatively to the falsities which are from them.

—^e. For evil corresponds to what is heavy on earth, which sinks by its own weight; thus also to the heaviness of a stone, when by a stone is signified falsity.

829⁸. 'They sought the deep as lead'=that evils dragged them down to lower things, as weights do in the world. . . The evil by their own evils sink down to the Hells . . . By 'lead' is signified evil; but it was said above, that 'they went down into the depths of the sea like a stone,' because 'a stone,' there,=falsity. Both are heavy, both falsity and evil, and therefore both sink down, but still it is evil which makes the weight in the spiritual sense . . . and not the falsity per se; but [it does so] from the evil which is in it; for, of itself, falsity has no weight, but derives from evil its tendency to sink.

—². Lead, being the most ignoble of all metals,=the evil which is lowest, such as is the evil of the exterior Natural.

830⁷. 'Thou hast led Thy people in Thy mercy'=the Divine influx with those who have abstained from evils, and have thus received good.

— . The Lord's mercy is perpetual with every man . . . but this mercy cannot flow in until evils have been removed; for evils and the falsities thence stand in the way and prevent it; but as soon as evils are removed, mercy flows in . . .

—². Man can abstain from evils of himself, but he cannot receive good of himself. The reason man can abstain from evils of himself, is that the Lord continually inflows into the will of man with this endeavour, and thereby places in his freedom the desisting from evils . . . The Lord also gives him the capacity to understand truth, but the reason he does not understand it is that he does not want to do so, and this on account of the evil which is of life; for falsity defends evil, and truth condemns it. Hence it is that man cannot be endowed with spiritual good by the Lord . . . unless he desists from evils.

[A.] 8311². There are very many kinds of evil, and therefore also of falsity ; for every kind of evil has its own falsity adjoined to it ; for falsity is produced from evil, and is evil in form . . .

8314. Those who are in a life of evil from the love of self. Sig.

8318². Evils are from a twofold origin ; namely, from the love of self, and from the love of the world ; they who are in evils from the love of self, love themselves alone, and despise all others . . . The evils from this origin are the worst of all. Ex.

—³. But they who are in evil from the love of the world . . . are also in the Hells, but not in such deep ones . . .

—⁴. Besides these two origins of evil, there exists a third, which is to do evil from the principles of a false religion ; but this evil is styled evil with those who are in the love of self and of the world, but not with those who are in love towards the neighbour and to their God ; for the end is good . . .

8232. 'Pharaoh and the Egyptians'=those who are in faith separated from charity and in a life of evil. Refs.

8343. That at His mere presence the falsities of faith and the evils of life have cast themselves into Hell. Sig.

— It is said that falsities and evils have cast themselves into Hell, because the falsities and evils themselves which are cast into Hell are what drag with them those to whom they adhere ; for men, by means of evil of life, become forms of falsities from evil ; wherefore, when the evils themselves together with the falsities are cast down, the forms also to which they adhere are dragged down with them ; for falsities and evils are exhalations from the Hells, and inflow with those who, by means of evils of life, have made their interiors into forms of reception. . . Therefore, when the Angels think and speak about the Hells, they think and speak about falsities and evils abstractedly from those who are there . . .

8349². There are indeed those who live evilly, and still want to be instructed in truths, but . . . it is only the affection of confirming the doctrinal things of the Church for the sake of self-glory . . .

8351². For in temptations, man is in combat against falsity and evil ; these, namely, falsity and evil, inflow into the external man from the Hells . . .

8356². But as soon as evil begins to predominate, and to prevent the influx of good, there is a sensation of undelight for truth ; for truth and evil mutually reject and are averse to each other.

8364. 'Every disease that I have put upon the Egyptians, I will not put upon thee'=that they are to be withheld from the evils which exist with those who are in faith separated and in a life of evil.

— For the Lord does not take evil away, but withholds man from it. (See DISEASE, HEFC.) 8365. 'Because I am Jehovah thy Healer'=that the Lord alone preserves from evils. Ill.

8388. To confess sins is to Know evils, to see them with one's self, to acknowledge them, to make one's self guilty of them, and to condemn one's self on account of them . . .

8391. He who lives a life of faith, performs repentance daily ; for he reflects upon the evils which are with himself, acknowledges them, is on his guard against them, and supplicates the Lord for help ; for, of himself, man is continually falling, but is continually set up again by the Lord ; from himself, he falls when he thinks to will evil, and is set up by the Lord when he resists evil, and thence does not do it. Such is the state with all who are in good. But they who are in evil are continually falling, and also are continually being elevated by the Lord ; but only to prevent them from falling into a Hell the most grievous of all . . .

8393². For man is withheld from evil by the Lord . . . and in the other life he can be withheld from evil in the proportion that he has resisted evil in the life of the body.

8394. If, however, a man afterwards relapses into his former life of evil, and embraces it, he then commits profanation ; for he then conjoins evil with good . . .

8403². Man is not regenerated by one temptation, but by many ; for there are very many kinds of evil which have made the delight of the former life ; these evils cannot be mastered all together and at once ; for they inhere with pertinacity, being inrooted from the parents of many ages back, and thus being innate to man, and being also confirmed by means of actual evils from himself ever since his infancy. All these evils are diametrically opposite to the heavenly good which is to be insinuated, and which makes the new life.

8408. 'A pot,' in the opposite sense, = evil . . . because 'flesh,' in the opposite sense, = the proprium of man, thus evil . . . Thus 'a pot' = the Corporeal or Natural of man, because these are the containants of either good or evil. Ill.

8409. 'To feed with flesh' = to gorge with their own evil.

8410². 'Bread,' in the opposite sense, = the primary thing which nourishes those who are in Hell and supports their life ; and that this is the evil of the love of self and of the world, is evident from the life of Hell, which consists solely therein ; this evil to them is good ; for nothing is more delightful and sweet to them. . . It is the will which is satisfied . . . with evil . . .

8432². For the good which flows in from the Lord is not given as much as they want, but as much as they can receive ; whereas evil is allowed as much as they want. Sig.

8455². All evil, especially self-confidence, takes away the state of peace.

8480. The good which is from man is not good, because, of himself, man is nothing but evil ; hence the good which is from him is in its first essence evil. Ex.

—^e. They who trust in themselves continually bring evil upon themselves ; for whatever befalls them, even if it appears prosperous and happy, is nevertheless evil. Sig.

8481. There are (also) two things which make Hell . . .

(which) are evil and falsity . . . consequently, there are two things which make the torment there ; the torment in Hell from falsity is compared to 'the worm ;' and the torment from the evil there is compared to 'fire.' III.

8482. 'To become putrid' is here predicated of evil ; and 'worms,' of falsity ; for when good becomes evil, it is like flesh or bread when it becomes putrid ; and the falsity from evil there, is like a worm which is produced there from the putridity.

8540³. 'Then he said, This [woman] is evil' (Zech. v.8) . . . 'The woman'=evil, as is openly said ; 'a stone of lead upon the mouth'=evil in good closed up by falsity . . .

8551. Man continually inclines and falls into that which he derives hereditarily ; hence he confirms with himself that evil, and also superadds to it many things from himself.

8552. These evils are entirely contrary to spiritual life ; they destroy it . . .

8593. 'Amalek'=the falsity from interior evil . . . Interior evil is that which lies inwardly hidden with man, stored away in his will, and thence in the thought, nor does any trace of it appear in externals . . . They who are in such evil, study by every method and art to hide it under the appearance of what is honest and just, and under the appearance of love to the neighbour ; and still think within themselves of nothing else than to inflict evil ; and, so far as they can, they inflict it by means of others, taking care that it does not appear to be from them. They also give a colour to the evil itself, so that it does not appear to be evil. The greatest delight of their life is to meditate such things, and to secretly attempt them ; and this is called interior evil. They who are in this evil are called evil Genii ; and in the other life are completely separated from those who are in exterior evil . . . As to the falsity from this evil, it is not like the falsity from the evil of evil Spirits ; for, in itself, it is evil. They who are in this evil do not attack the truths of faith, but the goods of faith . . .

8622³. If they were permitted to flow in, these Genii would completely destroy this (new) will ; for they would enter into the hereditary evils of the old will, which are closed up, and would unclothe them. . . Their falsity, which is the falsity from interior evil, is evil, and in fact such evil, that it cannot flow into the intellectual part, but into the voluntary part . . .

—^e. Those men become such Genii after death who have continually meditated evil against the neighbour, and who have delighted their thought with such things ; and who have also inflicted evil, but clandestinely, and by means of others . . .

8626³. Their evil can be turned by the Lord into good . . .

8628. They see . . . falsity as truth, and evil as good.

8694². Why those who are in evil have no revelation.

8700³. Consequently, it is impossible for man to be saved, unless it is allowed him who is born in evil, to do evil, and to desist from evil. When, of himself, from this freedom, he desists from evil, the affection of truth and good is insinuated into him by the Lord . . .

—⁴. Nor is it possible for those who are evil to be in good ; for good and evil are opposites, and the one destroys the other . . .

8701². They who are evil are not sent into Hell until they are in the evil of their life ; for when they are in this, they are in the falsity of their evil.

—^e. In this world, however, a man . . . can understand good although he wills evil . . .

8765^e. If (those in faith alone) are told that evil cannot be turned into good, thus not Hell into Heaven with a man . . . they say that such things are reasonings about salvation . . .

8794⁵. They who are in evil have an extension into infernal Societies according to the quality and quantity of their evil.

8806². They who live a life of truth and thence a life of good are withheld from evils . . . Then, too, the evils with them are separated, so as not at all to appear . . . Sig.

8815^e. The walls of Jericho = the falsities which defended evils.

—^e. Those in evils and thence in falsities. Sig.

8816^e. They who are in evil are in terror at the presence of the Divine . . .

8869⁵. All things which go forth from man's Own intelligence, are inwardly . . . falsities and evils . . .

8870^e. They are then let into the evil itself of their own will.

8875. 'A jealous God' = that thence is falsity and evil. Ex. . . For they who are in the opposite perceive Divine truth as falsity, and Divine good as evil.

8876. For the evil with such continually increases. Sig.

—^e. Evil increases with the fathers, and is thus transmitted to the children. Sig.

—^e. But, in the spiritual sense, 'fathers'=evils ; and 'sons,' falsities.

8878. 'They that hate God' = those who are in evil and thence in falsity ; (for) in proportion as they are in evil and thence in falsity, they not only reject, but also hate the Divine of the Lord. Why.

8880. Those love (the Lord) who desist from evil ; for evil stands in the way, and rejects the influx of good from the Lord ; wherefore, when evil is removed, the good is received which is continually endeavouring to enter from Him.

8881^e. The truths of faith . . . also flow in from the Lord . . . for when they are taken from the memory, and . . . insinuated into the will . . . they become alive . . . This is effected by the Lord when man desists from evils.

8882. 'To take the name of God in vain' = to turn truth into evil ; that is, to believe that it is truth, and still to live in evil ; and it is also to turn good into falsity, that is, to live holly, and still not to believe. Both are profanation. Ex.

[A.] 8885. The things which are not in that plane, but which verge downwards, are such things as the man rejects and is averse to ; such are evils and falsities with the good, and goods and truths with the evil.

—⁴. With the evil (also), the thought and will inmosty agree ; for the evil which the will wills the understanding thinks as falsity which agrees with the evil . . . but they learn . . . to form a different will and thought from that which is in the interior. . .

8888². Before man . . . is being regenerated, he is in combat against the evils and falsities with himself ; for these must be removed before the truth and good which are from the Lord can be received. Evils and falsities are removed by means of the truths of faith . . .

8902¹⁶. Purification from that evil because done from the immoderate zeal of one who is ignorant of what truth is. Sig.

8904^e. (Thus) adulteries are so wicked . . . because they correspond to the marriage of falsity and evil, which is the infernal marriage . . . Nay, the love of adultery descends from the marriage of falsity and evil, thus from Hell. 10175.

8908. That good is not to be called evil, nor truth falsity ; thus, neither, on the other hand, is evil to be called good, and falsity truth. Sig. and Ex.

—³. For falsity is from evil, as a son is from his father . . .

8910. That care is to be taken lest the evils which are contained in the preceding commandments become of the will, and thus go forth ; (for) 'to covet'=to will from an evil love. Ex.

—³. 'Everything which enters into the mouth goes away into the belly, and is cast out into draught'=the evil and falsity which is injected by Hell into man's thought, and which is again sent back to Hell ; and which cannot render the man unclean . . . For man cannot desist from thinking evil, but from doing it. Whereas, as soon as he receives evil from the thought into the will, it . . . enters into him, and this is said 'to enter into the heart' . . .

—⁵. The concupiscence of evil is meant by 'the right eye offending ;' and the concupiscence of falsity, by 'the right hand offending.'

8925. 'To sin'=to do and think evil and falsity studiously, and from the will . . .

8932. That they should altogether abstain from such things as in the external form appear to be truths and goods, but in the internal are falsities and evils. Sig.

—⁷. 'Wood'=evil ; 'stone,' falsity.

8945². If (anyone is elevated any higher in Heaven than to the degree of good in which he is), his filthy things are manifested, that is, the evils of his loves, and the falsities thence. Sig.

8960. Temptation is induced by evil Spirits, who dwell with man in his evils and falsities ; these excite his evils, and accuse him.

8961. In temptations, the question is concerning the dominion of the evil which is with man from Hell, and of the good which is with him from the Lord. The evil which wants to have the dominion is in the external man . . . If (therefore) the evil conquers, the natural man has dominion over the spiritual.

8964. If man yields (in combat) . . . evil acquires for itself power over good, and falsity over truth.

8995. 'If she be evil in the eyes of her lord' (Ex. xxi.8)=if (this affection) does not agree with spiritual truth.

9009. For the evil which the lie-in-wait is about to do, he foresees in his mind ; and as he does such evil from foresight, he does it from the will . . . There are evils which come forth from man's will, but not from foresight ; and there are evils which come forth from the will and from foresight ; (the latter) are much worse than (the former) ; because the man sees that they are evils, and therefore is able to desist from them, but does not want to do so, and thereby confirms them with himself, and evils which are confirmed imbue nature, so that they can scarcely be afterwards extirpated ; for he then summons Spirits from Hell, who afterwards recede with difficulty.

—². The evils which proceed from one part of the mind, and not from the other . . . are not inrooted and appropriated to man . . . The evils which proceed only from the will, thus not from previous thought, are such as the man inclines to hereditarily, or from some actuality thence previously ; these are not imputed to the man, unless he has confirmed them in his intellectual part. But when they have been confirmed in this, they are inscribed on the man, and become his Own, and are imputed to him. But these evils cannot be confirmed . . . in the intellectual part, except in adult age . . .

9010. For, when a man does evils, and thereby turns himself away from the Lord, it appears as if the Lord turned Himself away ; because He then appears to him behind him.

9012. For he who proposes evil to himself, does it from previous thought ; and as it is evil, and he does it, it is from the will ; for to do evil is originally thence ; but the falsity by which the evil is affirmed, defended, and thus advanced, is of the thought. That man is guilty when he does evil from both . . . Sig.

9013. (See important passage under DECEIT.)

—⁷. In the other life, an evil person is allowed to speak evil and also falsity, but not good and truth . . .

9014². Sins are not remitted, unless the man . . . desists from evils . . . and this to the end of his life. When he does this, he receives spiritual life ; and when, from this life, he looks at the evils of his former life, and feels aversion and horror for them, then first are the evils remitted ; for then the man is kept in goods and truths by the Lord, and is withheld from evils.

9018. The application of the truth of faith to evil. Sig. 9020.

9033². Hence evil has punishment, thus Hell, in it.

9049. Hence he who does evil to another from the heart, receives the like evil. . . Evil from the heart is conjoined with its own punishment . . . It is the same with evil; there inflows from Hell evil from every side into the heart of him who does evil to another from the heart . . . The punishers are at once present (and thus) evil with its delight is restrained.

—². Everyone carries with him (there) that which he has implanted in his own heart, namely, evil with the evil . . .

—⁶. The reason 'evil is not to be resisted,' is that evil does not at all injure those who are in truth and good . . .

9065. If the affection of evil in the Natural shall injure the truth or good of faith. Sig.

9068. That this evil is in no wise to be appropriated. Sig.

9069. That the evil is not from the internal man, because from the Voluntary and not from the Intellectual. Sig.

— . Evil from the Voluntary and not at the same time from the Intellectual does not condemn; for the man does not see it, thus does not consider whether it is evil . . . Such evil is the evil from what is hereditary, before the man has been instructed that it is evil; and also after he has been instructed, and is only in external life . . .

—². That no one is punished on account of hereditary evils; but on account of his Own evils. Refs.

—^c. In the following verse, it treats of the evil of which a man is conscious . . .

9070. If the affection of evil has existed for a long time. Sig.

9071. And this evil has passed into the Intellectual. Sig. . . For the evil which is known passes into the Intellectual . . . Wherefore, when the evil which is of the Voluntary passes into the Intellectual, it passes from thick darkness into light.

9075. The man who knows that it is evil, and does not repress it, is guilty. Sig. 9132.

9077. Man can only be delivered from damnation by the removal of evil; and the removal of evil can only be effected by actual repentance . . .

9079. A reviling of truths and goods by the affection of evil . . . Sig.

9081. If the affection of evil shall destroy truth or good in the Natural. Sig.

9088². For truth teaches what evil is and what falsity is . . . and when the man sees and acknowledges them he can be amended; for the Lord flows (only) into those things which a man knows . . . wherefore He does not amend evil or falsity until the man has been instructed that it is evil and falsity. Hence it is that they who perform repentance must see and acknowledge their evils . . .

9093². 'To serve two masters' = . . . to acknowledge truth, and do evil.

9094. For evil injures through falsity.

9096. It is the Intellectual which sees evil; and what is seen can be restrained . . . If affections of evil lead him, there must be affections of truth from good to restrain him . . .

—². He who acts from the affection of . . . evil, appears to himself to act from freedom . . .

—^c. The Lord implants . . . aversion for evil . . . Hence man is a complete slave in doing evil.

9103². The taking away (of interior and exterior good) is effected through evil; and the estrangement (of them), through falsity.

9125. The perpetration of evil in secret. Sig.

9128². Hence it is that man sees the good and evil which are in himself. . . These, being from faith in truth, and from charity in good, can see the evils and falsities in themselves; for evil can be seen from good, and falsity from truth; but not the reverse. The reason is, that good and truth is in Heaven and its light, and evil and falsity is in Hell and its darkness. (Thus) they who are in evil and falsity cannot see good and truth, and not even the evil and falsity which are with them . . . N.19.

—³. Whereas, evil and falsity do not come forth from what is higher than themselves, but from what is lower . . . Wherefore, the internal man with those who are in evil and falsity is closed above and open below . . .

9144. So long as the fires of evil are kept enclosed in the will, the understanding is in light . . . But when these fires pour forth their light into the understanding, the former light is dissipated . . . and the Intellectual is opened below . . . Hence there then inflow evils and falsities . . .

9156. Evils are sometimes called 'sins,' sometimes 'iniquities,' and sometimes 'transgressions.' Ex. and Ill.

9166^c. The reason 'conversation more than these is from evil' (Matt.v.37) is that what is more is not from the Lord, but from the proprium of man, thus from evil; for the proprium of man is nothing but evil. Refs.

9167^e. 'Two lords' = good and evil; for man must be either in good, or in evil; he cannot be in both at once . . .

9188. There are two things which make Hell . . . with man; the falsity of faith, and the evil of the love of self; these two are conjoined together with those who are in Hell, and make the infernal marriage.

—². So far as possible, the Lord withhold man from the conjunction of truth and good with falsity and evil, which is profanation; but there are a number in the Church who cannot be withheld from it. Ex. and Sig.

— . The reason these falsities (which such conjoin with truths) are falsities of the evil of the love of self, is that all evil springs chiefly from this love; and with evil falsity too, because they cohere together.

9192. Truths have . . . their death from evil.

—³. The reason they were in Hell, was that they had indeed been in truths as to doctrine, but in evils as to life. —⁴, Sig.

—⁶. Falsities from evil are evils in form; for when evil shows itself in the light, and forms itself, it is called falsity. Hence it is that they who are in evils as to life, although in truths as to doctrine, are still in the falsities of their evil. . . In the other life, when they are left to themselves, they think from evil against the truths which they have known and professed, thus they think falsities. They do in like manner in the world, when they are thinking by themselves . . .

[A.9192]^e. Truths from evil may be compared to meats which are clean to the sight, but which are inwardly malignant . . .

9196. That those who want to be instructed . . . are not to be infested by falsities of faith and evils of life. Sig.

9204^e. The evil which is attributed to the Lord in the Word is with those who are in evil. Refs.

9224^t. The error that man can will evil and believe truth; consequently, that truth agrees with evil.

9229. That which is of man, and is called his proprium, is evil.

9246. In (Ex.xxiii.) it treats of the avoidance of falsities of doctrine and evils of life; and that then are implanted the truth of doctrine and the goods of life.

9251. 'Thou shalt not be after many to evils' (ver.2) = non-consociation with such things . . .

9262. Innocence is to acknowledge . . . that of himself man wills nothing but evil, and perceives nothing but falsity . . . —².

9272^t. 'The wound of a plague' = the evil of life thence.

9296^t. This influx of the Lord operates with man in so far as he desists from evils . . .

9297^t. All (there) are reduced to the state of their good, or evil; thus to the use of their life . . . Hence evil Spirits are forms of the use of evil.

9298^t. If truths are falsified to favour evil . . . they are commingled together . . .

9301^t. Innocence is to know . . . that whatever he supposes himself to understand from himself is falsity; and that whatever he supposes himself to will from himself is evil.

9314. 'I will act the enemy against thy enemies' = that He averts all evils from which are falsities.

9320. 'Destroying thou shalt destroy them' = that evils are to be utterly removed; because it is said of the evils and falsities which are signified by the nations of Canaan and their gods; (for) they who are in good and truth never destroy those who are in evil and falsity, but only remove them . . . Whereas, they who are in evil and thence in falsity endeavour to destroy . . . those who are in good, because they act from evil; but as they then rush against the . . . Divine, they destroy themselves.

9325⁹. 'Evil waters' (2 Kings ii.19) = truths without good.

9331. 'Terror' is predicated of those who are in evils; and 'dread,' of those who are in falsities.

9333. 'I will not drive him out from before thee in one year' = no hasty flight or removal of evils and falsities. . . For they who are in evils and falsities (there), are not driven out, but flee of themselves.

—². The reason 'to drive out,' when predicated of evils and falsities, = removal, is that falsities and evils are not driven out by man, but are removed . . .

—³. They who in the world have lived a life of faith and charity, can be withheld from evils . . . But they who have not . . . as they cannot be withheld from evils . . .

9334². As to there being a deficiency . . . of spiritual life if evils and falsities were hastily removed, the case is this. . . All things a man has thought, intended, and done . . . have added themselves to his life . . . and have formed such a connection together, that one cannot be removed unless they all are; for an evil man is an image of Hell . . . and the evils and falsities with an evil man have a connection together such as the infernal Societies have. Hence it is evident, that the evils and falsities with a man (can only be removed) in proportion as goods and truths, in their order, and more interiorly, are implanted. If this were done suddenly, the man would be lacking . . . 9335.

9335². The reason falsities from these loves flow to man by a hasty removal of evils and falsities, is that goods and truths must remove them by a successive implantation; for falsities are removed only by truths; and evils only by goods; and if this is not done successively and according to order, the falsities which favour those loves flow in . . . and then truths are no longer acknowledged.

9336. 'A little, a little I will drive him out from before thee' = the removal (of evils and falsities) by degrees according to order . . . thus slowly . . .

—². Man, when born, as to hereditary evils is a Hell in the least form; and he also becomes a Hell in proportion as he takes from hereditary evils, and super-adds to them his own . . . Hence it is evident, that . . . evils and falsities must be removed, for the new life . . . to be implanted; and this cannot possibly be done hastily; for every evil inrooted with its falsities has a connection with all other evils and their falsities; and such evils and falsities are innumerable; and their connection is so manifold that it can be comprehended . . . by the Lord alone. Hence it is evident, that . . . if the life of Hell were suddenly destroyed, the man would completely expire . . .

9337. That the removal from evils and falsities is effected according to the increase of good. Sig. and Ex.

9342. Command over evils. Sig.

9344. No communication with evils and falsities. Sig.

9345. That evils shall not be together with the goods of the Church. Sig.

9346. Lest evils turn away the goods (which are) from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

— (For) evils and goods are opposites or contraries; and two opposites or contraries cannot be together. Ex. and Sig.

—^e. They who are in evils not only do not receive the goods which flow in from the Lord, but turn them completely away; wherefore, man can never receive the good of Heaven, until he abstains from evils.

9348. The enticement and deception of evils. Sig.

— The reason evils entice and deceive, is that all evils spring from the loves of self and of the world; and (these loves) are born with man; and thence he feels the delight of his life from his birth; nay, thence has his life . . .

9378³. The Lord must approach to and be conjoined with man . . . This takes place when a man desists from evils; for to desist from evils is left to the freedom of man: then the good from the Lord flows in . . . for it is in the very life which man has from the Lord; but with that life only so much of good is received, as there are evils removed.

9399. They who do not receive (Divine truth) are they who are in evil of life; but still these . . . are in the capacity of receiving, in so far as they desist from evils. Sig. —³, From experience.

9449. The signs that sins are remitted, are . . . they shun and are averse to evils; as enmities, hatreds, revenges, unmercifulnesses, adulteries; in a word, all things which are against God and the neighbour.

9450. The signs that sins are not remitted, are . . . they perceive delight in evils. Enum.

9473³. Unless the internal of good is (from the Lord) it is not good, but evil; for it is from the man himself; and that which proceeds from man is evil; for man regards himself in all the good that he does . . . 10272.

9506. 'The mercy-seat' = cleansing from evils and the remission of sins . . . They who are propitiated or expiated, that is, cleansed from evils, are alone heard . . .

9534². By means of this (sphere) those in Hell are guarded, lest the one should do evil to the other beyond measure.

9586. To do evil from the delight of love appears free, but is slavery, because from Hell.

9587. Through freedom, the Lord bends man away from evil . . .

9670⁶. The purification of good from the evils in the external and in the internal man. Sig.

— The complete separation and casting out of evil from good. Sig. (by the scape-goat).

9709^e. They who are illuminated by self . . . see falsity as truth, and evil as good.

9809⁴. 'Until I make thine enemies thy footstool' = even until the evils which are in the Hells and from the Hells, are subjugated.

— 'To have dominion in the midst of thine enemies' = that celestial good has dominion over evils; evils are 'enemies' because they are against the Divinc.

—⁵. 'The day of anger' was when He fought against evils and destroyed them.

— 'He hath judged among the nations' = the disposition of evils.

—¹⁰. Good is such that evil cannot be adjoined to it; for good shuns evil, and evil feels horror at good . . .

9818². 'A clean heart' = a will averse to evils, which are unclean things.

9937. 'Aaron shall carry the iniquity of the holy things' = the removal of falsities and evils with those who are in good from the Lord.

—³. The Lord removes the Hells in so far as man desists from evils . . . and in so far as the Hells are removed from man, evils and falsities are removed; for both the latter and the former are from the Hells. Evils and falsities are 'sins and iniquities.'

—⁴. It is said to remove evils and falsities, because deliverance from or remission of sins is nothing else than their removal; for they remain with man; but in so far as the good of love and the truth of faith is implanted, evil and falsity are removed. . . It is the general opinion, that evils, that is, sins . . . are completely separated; but these persons do not know that of himself man is nothing but evil, and that the evils which belong to him appear to be extirpated in proportion as he is kept in good by the Lord; for when man is kept in good, he is withheld from evil. But no one can be withheld from evil and kept in good, but he who is in the good of faith and of charity from the Lord . . .

—⁵. Thus, to remove evils is what not any man can do; of himself, man cannot remove even the least of evil . . .

9980. Of himself, man is nothing but evil, thus to do good from himself is to do good from evil.

9990. The sacrifices = purification from evils and falsities . . . here, from those in the external man . . .

—². Before man can be regenerated, he is to be purified from evils and falsities . . .

10022. The application of the external man, such as he is in his infancy, to his purification from evils and falsities, and thus to the reception of truth from Heaven, and his conjunction with good. Sig.

—². By the burnt-offerings and sacrifices in general, there was represented purification from evils and falsities, and (therefore) the implantation of good and truth from the Lord . . . For when man is purified from evils and falsities, which is effected by means of their removal, there flows in good and truth from the Lord . . . For the Lord is constantly present with good and truth . . . but it is not received, except in proportion as evils and falsities are removed.

—^e. For all worship has as an end that man may be purified from evils and falsities . . .

10035. 'The flesh of the bullock' = the evil of the former loves there.

— Falsities of faith and evils are of love with those who are in falsities and in evils.

10038². The love of self produces all evils, which are, contempt for others in comparison with ourselves, enmity against those who do not favour us, at last, hatreds, revenges, fiercenesses, cruelties; which evils entirely resist the Divine influx, consequently extinguish the truths and goods of faith and of charity.

10047³. The Lord flows in with good through the soul . . . and with truth through the hearing and sight . . . and in proportion as man desists from evils, the Lord conjoins the good with the truth . . . thus He regenerates man . . .

10049. Lowest and natural things are defiled with evils and falsities more than interior ones. Why.

10109. The appropriation of good with those who have been purified from evils and the falsities thence. Sig.

[A. 10109.] It is said purified from evils and the falsities thence, because there exist falsities and truths with those who are in evil, and also falsities and truths with those who are in good; the falsities with those who are in evil are the falsities of evil; and the truths with them are truths falsified, which are dead . . .

—². So long as a man is in evils and the falsities thence, good cannot possibly be appropriated to him; for evil ascends from Hell, and good descends from Heaven . . . In order, therefore, that . . . good from Heaven may have a place, evil from Hell . . . must be removed . . . Sig.

— . The good with man is . . . of the Lord with him, and he is kept in it in proportion as he suffers himself to be withheld from evils.

—³. All these external uncleannesses represented the internal uncleannesses, which are the evils with man; and such evils as are of his will, appropriated through actual life.

10122. The continual removal of evils and the falsities thence in the natural man through the good of innocence from the Lord. Sig.

— . The evils and falsities with man are not cast out, but are only removed.

—². All falsities are from evil; wherefore, in proportion as evil is removed, falsities are removed.

— . All things in Hell have relation to evil and the falsity thence; hence it is the same in man . . . all things which are with him from Hell have relation to evil and falsity; or, what is the same . . . all things which are from man himself have relation to evil and falsity.

— . The . . . old will is the receptacle of evil; and the . . . old understanding is the receptacle of falsity.

—³. Hence the will and understanding really make one; although it appears otherwise . . . when a man understands truth, and yet wills evil; nevertheless, that same man, when left to himself . . . understands altogether as he wills. (From experience.)

10134. The removal of evils through the good of innocence from the Lord in a state of love and thence of light in the internal man. Sig. 10135.

—⁹. (In the night of the Church) evils increase daily, and, in proportion as they increase, the one infects the other as with a contagion, especially parents their children; besides the fact that hereditary evils are successively made dense . . .

10156⁴. Hell is then removed from him; and then for the first time the man knows what good is and what evil is.

10187. A termination from good to prevent their being approached and injured by evils. Sig.

— . For good cannot be approached by evils; for evils cannot in any manner endure the sphere of good . . .

—². Truth can be approached by evils, by reason that the evil pervert truths . . .

10208. Purification from evils through the truths of faith which are from the good of love. Sig.

10210^e. He who is led by himself, is led by Hell; for the proprium of man is nothing but evil; and all evil is of Hell.

10211. The perpetual removal of evils. Sig.

— . Purification from evils is nothing but being withheld from them, that is, their removal.

10218. Purification or deliverance from evil through the acknowledgment and faith that all the truths and goods of faith and of love, and their ordination and disposition, are from the Lord, and nothing from man. Sig.

10219. Lest there be the penalty of evil in doing good as from themselves. Sig.

—³. So long as a man believes that he does all things from himself, both goods and evils, so long goods do not affect him, and evils adhere to him; but as soon as he acknowledges and believes . . . that evils flow in from Hell . . . evils do not adhere to him; and, further, in proportion as goods affect him, evils are removed; thus he is purified and delivered from them . . .

—⁴. There are three plagues which follow those who attribute to themselves the truths and goods of faith and love . . . (The second is) that evils and falsities constantly pursue them. Sig. . . For they who (do this) cannot fight against the evils and falsities which are from Hell; and which . . . are 'the enemies' before whom they flee.

10225⁹. 'An army'=truths disposed in such an order that they do not fear evils and falsities, but repel them if they assault.

—^e. They who are in such a state of intelligence that they can discriminate, conclude, and judge from themselves, are in the blame of their evil; not they who are not as yet in that state.

10229. All purification from evils is effected by means of truths. Refs.

—². Of himself, man thinks nothing but evil . . . When these truths enter, the interiors are elevated above self, and are thus withdrawn from those things which are below self; thus from evils.

10232. Since thus evils are removed. Sig.

— . For the reason the Church is preserved with man, is that evils do not impede; for the Lord flows in constantly . . . but so long as evils reign, the truths and goods of the Church flowing in from the Lord are either rejected, suffocated, or perverted by the man; whereas, on the removal of evils they are accepted and acknowledged.

10272. The things which have as an end man and the world are in themselves evils; for the end is the inmost of the man . . .

10300⁵. The longing of falsity to evil disjoins; and that which disjoins, destroys.

10318. Man is born hereditarily into all evil, which is of the love of self and the world.

10336^e. For whatever is from man for the sake of himself as an end is from evil . . . The end is that which determines whether it is from good or from evil.

10367^g. Man is born into evils of every kind, and thence into falsities of every kind . . . (Therefore) he must first learn truths . . . (for) truth and good teach what falsity and evil are. Unless a man knows these things, he cannot be regenerated; for he remains in his evils and the falsities thence; and calls the former goods, and the latter truths.

—⁵. But they who love their evils . . . can indeed apprehend truths from the Word, but still cannot be regenerated . . . (For) when a man loves his evils, the Intellectual of his internal man is not imbued with these truths, but only that of his external man . . .

10378. The Spirits from (the Third) Earth . . . are withheld from evils by this, that they do not love to think about earthly and bodily things . . . for in proportion as anyone is in these things, he is removed from Heaven, thus from the Lord, and is therefore in the same proportion in evils.

10381^e. It is not angelic to seek out the evils with a man, unless the goods [are sought for] at the same time.

10406². The joining together of these (falsities) in favour of external loves, that evils may appear as goods, is signified by a molten thing. Ill.

—¹⁰. As the falsities and evils of doctrine, which are signified by graven and molten things . . .

10452^e. On the removal of Providence, all things rush into evil, and thus into devastation.

10455. An assault on the truth and good which are of Heaven and the Church by the falsities and evils which are from Hell. Sig.

10472. 'Thou knowest the people that they are in evil' (Ex. xxxii. 22) = that that nation is in an external separated from a holy internal. 'Evil,' and 'sin' = disjunction, separation, and turning away from the Divine. Refs.

10492². Evils and falsities are what close up the internal man; or, what is the same, worldly, earthly, and corporeal loves when they prevail; for thence are all evils and falsities. The reason the internal man is closed up by them . . . is that evils and falsities are opposite to goods and truths; and when opposites act against each other, that which is injured contracts itself. So it is with the internal man, when evils and falsities enter into the thought and into the will . . .

10503. Idols of wood = worship from evils of doctrine. . . . Idols of gold = the worship of evil in both doctrine and life . . . which was the worst worship of all . . . for they called evils goods, and therefore falsities truths. All are in this worship who are in the love of self, and still believe the Word . . .

10529. 'I will drive out the Canaanite,' etc. = the casting out thence of all evils and falsities . . . 10638.

10579^o. It follows, that where evil is in falsity, the Divine does not appear. Sig.

10618. 'Long-suffering to angers' = that He long endures the evils of man. Ex.

—². All evil has in it enmity, hatred, revenge, and fierceness; in these things and from these things evil has its delight. Moreover, evil hates good, because good is opposed to its delight; hence when evil cannot injure good—for to injure good is always in the endeavour of evil—it is first indignant, and afterwards is angry. Whether you say evil, or an evil man, is the same thing; for evil is in a man, as in its own subject. And as such evil is against good, such evil is against the Divine . . . Hence it is that an evil man is always angry with the Divine . . .

10621. 'Bearing iniquity, transgression, and sin' = the removal of evil and of its falsity so that it does not appear. . . 'Iniquity, transgression, and sin' = evils; and, as they = evils, they also = their falsities; for every evil is conjoined with its own falsity . . .

— The reason 'to bear and take away evil' = to remove it so that it does not appear, is that the evils with man cannot be taken away, but only removed so as not to appear. 10674.

10622. Evil is tolerated by the Lord until it is consummated or fulfilled. Sig.

—². Everyone is (there, at first) tolerated among the good, although he be evil; but after some time his interiors are opened, and if these are evil, he is carried by degrees into his evil, until he becomes his own evil as to the will, and the falsity of his evil as to the understanding; when this is done, evil is said to be consummated with him, and he is then cast into Hell. Sig.

10623. 'Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the sons, and upon the sons' sons' = the rejection and damnation of evils and of the falsities thence in a long series.

—². For evil is the father of falsity.

10624. 'Upon the thirds and upon the fourths' = the damnation of falsities and of the evils thence.

—². Something shall be said about evils and the falsities thence, and about falsities and the evils thence. Evils are the source of all falsities; because falsities are what confirm evils; and they act as one with man like the will and the understanding; for what a man wills to do, he also wills to understand; for, by means of the understanding, he forms his evil in thought to himself, and in speech to others; hence it is evident what is evil and the falsity thence, that is, the falsity of evil. But the evil of falsity exists when a man has confirmed evil with himself, and has concluded that it is not evil, and thence does it; then, from falsity, he makes evil. Examp. The evils of falsity exist chiefly in religiosities; for, from falsities of doctrine, a man persuades himself that that is good which yet is evil; and, sometimes, that that is evil which yet is good.

[A.] 10638². That if they did the primary precepts which are of eternal truth, evils and falsities would be removed. Sig. and Ex.

10640. That no religiosity whatever is to be adhered to in which is evil. Sig. and Ex. 10647.

—². See DOCTRINE.

10642. That the evil of that religiosity and of the worship thence is to be rejected. Sig.

10648². The falsification of truth is effected in three ways. First: if a man is in evil of life, and acknowledges the truths of doctrine; for then evil is within the truths, and evil falsifies truth; for evil dissipates what is celestial and Divine from truths, and implants what is infernal . . .

—³. Evil has an appetite for falsity, and eagerly seizes upon it as truth.

10652². Profanation takes place when evil is applied to truth, and truth to evil . . .

10675. In proportion as evil and the falsities of evil are removed, truths from good are multiplied. Sig.

10777^c. Wherefore, unless man is kept in freedom to do evil also, good from the Lord cannot be provided for him.

10781. Good is what is provided by the Lord, but evil is what is foreseen by the Lord; there must be the one together with the other; for that which comes from man is nothing but evil, and that which comes from the Lord is nothing but good.

10808. They said that there was nothing but evil with me . . . It was given to answer, that with them in like manner there is nothing but evil, by reason that every man is born into evil; and therefore whatever comes from man, Spirit, or Angel, as from proprium, is nothing but evil.

—². They then showed me their idea concerning evil with man, and concerning good from the Lord; and how they are separated from each other. They set the one near the other, almost touching, but still separate, yet as it were bound in an indescribable manner, so that good led evil, and bridled it . . . and thus good bent evil to what it wanted, without evil knowing anything about it. Thus they presented the dominion of good over evil; and at the same time the free state in which evil is led by good to good, thus to the Lord.

10814². As (the love of self) increased, so increased evils of every kind; as enmities, envies, hatreds, revenges, deceits, fiercenesses against all who set themselves in opposition. U.174.

H. 54^c. They who live evilly, and come into Heaven . . .

113. All things which correspond to Hell, have relation to evil and falsity.

153^c. If a man is in evil as to life, he at once turns himself backwards, and confirms with himself the falsities of his evil against the truths which he has understood . . .

290². But with those who are in evil, peace does not exist . . .

293. As man is born into evils of every kind, and thus his first life is from them alone, unless evil Spirits were adjoined to him . . . he could not live; nay, he could not even be withdrawn from his evils. . . (But) being in equilibrium, he is in his freedom, and can be withdrawn from evils. —².

342. No one is punished (there) on account of hereditary evil . . .

(s). All men whatever are born into evils of every kind, so that their proprium is nothing but evil. Refs. N.83, Refs.

— . All evils are from the loves of self and of the world, when they predominate. Refs.

359^c. The reason the Lord's yoke is easy, and His burden light, is that in proportion as a man resists the evils springing from the love of self and of the world, he is led by the Lord, and not by himself; and because the Lord then resists them with the man, and removes them.

375^c. Falsity and evil also love each other; but this love is afterwards turned into Hell.

422. The state of Hell with a man is the conjunction of evil and falsity with him . . . When, with a man Spirit, evil is conjoined with falsity, he comes into Hell . . .

424. Man is born into all evil as to the will . . .

425. In proportion as falsities, which are of the understanding, are conjoined with the evils which are of the will, man has Hell in himself; because the conjunction of evil and falsity is Hell.

—². In the World of Spirits is effected the conjunction of evil and falsity in those who are to be cast into Hell; for no one (there) is allowed to have a divided mind . . . Wherefore . . . in Hell, he who wills evil, understands falsity; therefore . . . with the evil there, truths are removed, and falsities are given which are in agreement . . . with their evil.

429². As in the world everyone is delighted with his own evil, so after death he is delighted with the stench to which his evil corresponds.

472. Actions which appear good, but are evil. Enum.

484^c. The things which take place from man himself are all in themselves evil . . .

487². But they who are in heavenly love . . . from truths, see their evils, into which they have been born, when they are carried into them; for truths manifest evils. For, from the truth which is from good, everyone can see evil and its falsity; but no one can see good and truth from evil. Ex. . . The Angels . . . see and perceive the evils and falsities which sometimes arise in themselves, and also the evils and falsities in which Spirits are . . . but the Spirits themselves cannot see their own evils and falsities.

488. All those who are in evil, and have confirmed themselves in falsities . . . flee from the light of Heaven . . .

490². With those who are in evil . . . good is without, and evil within ; hence it is that evil has dominion over good . . . (and that the latter) is infected with evil.

505. He who has lived in evil in the world . . .

506². All who live in evil, interiorly deny the Divine . . .

—². But good Spirits are never punished, although they have done evil in the world ; for their evils do not return ; and . . . their evils have been of a different kind or nature ; not from a set purpose against the truth ; and not from an evil heart other than what they had . . . from their parents ; into which, when they had been in externals separated from internals, they had been carried from blind delight.

512. When (those who go to Hell are completely turned to their own love) they will nothing but evil, and think nothing but falsity.

522². In proportion, therefore, as a man abstains from evil, the Lord leads him . . .

532³. The man whose interiors are open . . . can see the evils and falsities which are with him ; for these are below the spiritual mind ; (but) the man whose interiors are not open cannot see his evils and falsities, because he is in them . . .

533. For no evil can be dispersed until after it has been seen.

— . When a man has been initiated (into this state), the Lord . . . causes him not only to see evils, but also not to want them, and finally to feel aversion for them.

—². But the difficulty . . . of resisting evils increases in proportion as a man, from the will, does evils ; for he so accustoms himself to them, that at last he does not see them ; and then he loves them, and from the delight of love excuses them, and confirms them by means of fallacies of every kind, and calls them allowable and good. But this takes place with those who in adolescent age rush into evils in an unbridled manner, and at the same time, from the heart, reject Divine things.

541. The Societies of Hell are distinguished according to evils and the falsities thence. . . That to every good there is the opposite evil, and to every truth the opposite falsity, may be known from the fact, that there exists nothing without relation to its opposite . . .

546. Good and evil are two opposites, and they are opposites as Heaven and Hell are ; and all good is from Heaven, and all evil from Hell ; and thus the Lord continually withdraws man from evil . . . and Hell continually leads man into evil. Unless man were between the two, he would have no thought, will, and still less any freedom or choice ; for man has all these from the equilibrium between good and evil : wherefore, if the Lord were to turn Himself away, and man were left to evil alone, he would be man no longer. (Thus) the Lord flows in with good with every man, equally with an evil one as with a good one ; but with this difference, that He continually withdraws an evil man from evil, and continually leads a good man to good.

547. (Thus) man does evil from Hell . . . but as he believes that whatever he does he does from himself, the evil which he does adheres to him as his own. Hence man is the cause of his own evil . . . The evil with man is Hell with him ; for whether you say evil or Hell is the same . . .

—². He who wills and loves evil in the world, wills and loves evil in the other life ; and he then no longer suffers himself to be withdrawn from it. Hence it is that the man who is in evil is bound to Hell . . . and after death desires nothing more than to be where his evil is.

548. He is at last associated with those who are in a like evil to himself . . .

—². (Thus) the Lord withdraws every Spirit to Himself . . . but the Spirits who are in evil . . . are drawn by their evil as by a rope . . . and as they are drawn, and, from the love of evil, want to follow, it is evident that, from freedom, they cast themselves into Hell.

549. Evils and the falsities thence stand in the way, and . . . reject His Divine influx : evils and the falsities thence are like black clouds . . . between the sun and the eye . . .

550. Evil Spirits in the World of Spirits are . . . by penalties, deterred from doing evils . . . but none of the penalty there is from the Lord, but from the evil itself ; for evil is so conjoined with its penalty that they cannot be separated ; for the infernal crew desires nothing more than to transact what is evil, especially to inflict penalties . . . Wherefore, when evil is done from an evil heart, then, as this rejects from itself all protection by the Lord, they rush at him who does such evil . . . (It is similar in this world, except that) in the world evil can be hidden, but not in the other life. (Thus) the Lord does evil to no one . . . (just as a king) is not the cause of a guilty person being punished, because he is not the cause of the evil in the evildoer.

551. All in the Hells are in evils and the falsities thence, and no one there is in evils and at the same time in truths . . .

— . Those who have abstained from doing evils according to their thoughts merely (for external reasons) are all at heart evil ; wherefore, when external things are (there) taken away . . . they are completely in evils and falsities, and not in any truths and goods . . . When such are let into their internals, consequently into their evils, they can no longer speak truths, but only falsities, because they speak from evils—for to speak truths from evils is impossible—since then the Spirit is nothing but his own evil, and falsity proceeds from evil.

(f). All evil has falsity in itself ; wherefore, they who are in evil are also in falsity, although they are not aware of it. Refs.

[H.] 553. All Spirits in the Hells, viewed in any light of Heaven, appear in the form of their own evil; for every one is the effigy of his own evil . . .

—². For every one speaks from his own falsity, and sounds from his own evil.

561. The interiors . . . of those who love themselves above all things are turned to self and the world; thus are turned away from the Lord and Heaven; hence it is that they are obsessed by evils of every kind . . .

562. The evils which are with those who are in the love of self are, in general, contempt for others, envy, enmity against all who do not favour them, hostility thence, hatreds of various kinds, revenges, cunning, deceits, unmercifulness, and cruelty; and, as to religious things, there is not only contempt for the Divine, and for Divine things . . . but also anger against them . . . 570. N.75.

577. The spirit of man, when loosed from the body, is in its own good or its own evil . . . an infernal Spirit, in his own evil; for every Spirit is his own good or his own evil; wherefore . . . an infernal Spirit (thinks, wills, speaks, and acts) from his own evil; and to think, will, speak, and act from evil itself, is to do so from all things together which are in evil. (Whereas) in the body . . . the evil of the man's spirit was in bonds . . . and so the evil of his spirit could not then burst forth . . . Besides, at that time, the evil of the spirit of man lay wrapped up and veiled in external probity, etc. . . under which semblances the evil lay so concealed . . . that he scarcely knew himself that his spirit contained so much wickedness . . . (But, after death) such wickedness manifests itself as exceeds all belief. There are thousands of evils which then burst forth from evil itself, among which are such as cannot be expressed in . . . any language . . .

—⁴. Nevertheless, man is continually withdrawn by the Lord from the evils which, from consociation with these Spirits, he applies and as it were attracts to himself, if not by internal bonds . . . still by external ones . . . Such a man may indeed be withdrawn from evils through the delights of his love . . . but he cannot be brought into spiritual goods; for he so far . . . meditates cunning and deceit . . . and this cunning adds itself to the evil of his spirit, and forms that evil, and gives it a quality according to its own nature.

588². Every evil is of infinite variety, like every good. . . . Every evil; as contempt, enmity, hatred, revenge, deceit, and other such evils . . . contains so many specific differences, and so many differences still more specific or particular, that a volume would not suffice to enumerate them. (See HELL, here.)

589. See EQUILIBRIUM; important passage. 590. 591².

592². (As) the proprium of everyone is nothing but evil . . . no Angels and Spirits can in any wise resist the evils continually exhaled from the Hells . . . moreover, all the Hells act as one; for the evils in the Hells are connected together . . .

598. The reason man cannot be reformed unless he has freedom, is that he is born into evils of every kind; which, however, must be removed in order that he may be saved; nor can they be removed, unless he sees them in himself and acknowledges them, and afterwards ceases to will them, and at last holds them in aversion; then, for the first time, are they removed. This cannot be effected unless man is in both good and evil; for from good he can see evils; but he cannot from evils see goods.

N. 17. All things which are contrary to Divine order have relation to evil and falsity. . . Evil loves to be conjoined with falsity, and vice versa. . . All insanity and folly is born from the conjunction of evil and falsity, (which) is called the infernal marriage.

18. As evil and falsity are opposites to good and truth, it is evident that truth cannot be conjoined with evil, nor good with the falsity of evil . . .

33. Those in evil and falsity have no will and understanding; but instead of will they have lust; and instead of understanding they have knowledge. . . Will cannot be said of evil, nor understanding of falsity . . . Hence the man who is in evil and falsity cannot be called rational, wise, and intelligent; moreover, with the evil the interiors of the mind, where the will and understanding chiefly reside, are closed.

58^e. What is undelightful to man's love is what is evil to him.

59. There are two loves from which are all evils and falsities . . . these are the love of self and the love of the world. 79. W.254².

75^e. As there are (all these) evils from the love of self, there are also the like falsities; for falsities are from evils.

79^e. (Thus) as man is born into these two loves, he is born into evils of every kind.

So. For man to know what evils are, he must know their origins; and unless he knows evils, he cannot know goods.

S3². Therefore, hereditary evils are now more malignant than formerly. Ref.

— . Everyone has interior evils from the father, and exterior ones from the mother. Ref.

115. Wherefore, true confidence is not possible with those who lead an evil life.

164. The evils of man are in (his thoughts and intentions); the evils which a man does in the body are all thence. They who do not explore the evils of their thought and will cannot perform repentance; for they think and will afterwards as before; and yet to will evils is to do them.

170. (Refs. to passages on sin or evil.)

J. 34. When few men come into Heaven, and many into Hell, the evil on the one side increases over the good on the other; for in proportion as Hell increases, evil increases; and all man's evil is from Hell . . . As evil increases over good at the end of the Church, all are then judged . . . and the evil are separated from the good . . .

C. J. 16^e. Of 'the goats' it is not said that they had done evils, but that they had omitted to do goods; and all such omit to do goods . . . because they do not shun evils as sins; and even if they do not do them, still they account them allowable, and thus do them in spirit . . .

62^e. This worst evil is meant by 'the head of the serpent.'

63. To prevent this worst root of evils from being excited with them . . .

S. 12². 'The pale horse' = no understanding of the Word from evils of life and the falsities thence in the fourth or last state of the Church.

49. Combat against falsities and evils must be waged by means of truths from the sense of the letter.

Life 18. In proportion as man shuns evils as sins, he does good not from himself, but from the Lord. Gen. art. 21.

— . It is evils which impede the Lord's entrance to man; for evil is Hell . . .

19^e. Man . . . is in the midst between evil and good; and is kept free to turn himself to either . . . and if he turns to evil he turns from good, and vice versa. 69^e.

24. That if man wills and does goods before he shuns evils as sins, the goods are not goods. 25, Ex. 27, Ex. 30, Ill.

28. No one can be in good and at the same time in evil. Ill.

31^e. Every man is able, by the Lord's power, to shun evils as of himself . . .

32. So far as anyone shuns evils as sins, he loves truths. Gen. art.

33. (So) evil loves falsity, and falsity evil, and they want to be one.

42. So far as anyone shuns evils as sins, he has faith, and is spiritual. Gen. art.

53. The Decalogue teaches what evils are sins. Gen. art.

62. Murders, adulteries, thefts, false witness of all kinds, with the concupiscence to them, are the evils which are to be shunned as sins. Gen. art.

63². From this religion, man is in the concupiscence to all these evils . . .

70. As evil and good are opposites . . . if man shuns evil as sin, he comes into the good opposite to the evil.

81. The evil of theft enters more deeply with man than any other evil. Ex.

86². Man cannot be with the will in the spiritual mind, and thence in Heaven, unless he shuns evils as sins . . .

—⁴. So long as man does not shun evils as sins, the concupiscences of evils block up the interiors of the natural mind on the side of the will . . . But as soon as man shuns evils as sins, the Lord flows in out of Heaven . . . and opens the spiritual mind, and thus intromits the man into Heaven.

92. No one can shun evils as sins, so as to be inwardly averse to them, except through combats against them. Gen. art.

93. This root (of proprium) is not removed . . . unless the man regards the evils which constitute the root as the injuries of the soul . . .

94. He who combats, acts . . . against the concupiscence itself which constitutes the root of evil . . . (thus) the root of evil can be removed only through combat.

95. In proportion, therefore, as anyone combats, and thus removes evil, good succeeds in its place, and, from good, he sees evil in the face, that it is infernal and horrible; and being such, he not only shuns it, but is averse to it, and at last abominates it.

97. Let men resist evils in intention only once a week, or twice a month, and they will perceive a change.

101. Man must shun evils as sins, and fight against them, as of himself. Gen. art. P. 116^e.

108. If anyone shuns evils from any other reason than because they are sins, he does not shun them, but only causes them not to appear before the world. Gen. art.

—^e. But if they shun these evils only because they are evils, and not at the same time because they are sins, they are still merely natural; and with the merely natural the root of evil remains implanted . . .

111^e. (Thus) a wicked man can shun evils as injurious things, but only a Christian can shun evils as sins.

F. 12. If anyone thinks, Who can have the internal acknowledgment of truth which is faith? I say to him, Shun evils as sins, and go to the Lord, and you will have as much as you desire.

W. 246. This spiritual heat is procured no otherwise than by shunning evils as sins . . . For so long as man is in evils, he is also in the love of them; for he is in concupiscence to them . . . and this concupiscence can be removed only through shunning evils as sins; and as man cannot shun them from himself, but only from the Lord, he must look to Him. When . . . he shuns them from the Lord, the love of evil and its heat is removed . . .

254. The spiritual degree is closed up with those who are in evils as to life, and still more in those who from evils are in falsities. For just as the fibril of a nerve shrinks from the least touch of anything heterogeneous . . . so the substances or forms of the spiritual degree in man shrink from evils and the falsities thence . . . (For) evils and the falsities of evil are heterogeneous to it.

262. Then he feels delight in evils of every kind . . .

264. The origin of evil is from the abuse of the faculties . . . called rationality and freedom. Gen. art.

268. Confirmed evils and falsities are permanent with man, and become of his love and life. Gen. art. (See CONFIRM, here.)

—^e. (Thus) it may be seen whence is the origin of evil.

269². Evils are derived successively from parents, and they increase by the accumulations of one after another, until man by birth is nothing but evil. The malignity of evil increases also according to the degree of the closing up of the spiritual mind . . . And in the descendants this is not retrieved, except by shunning evils as sins . . .

270. All evils and the falsities thence, both ingenerate and superinduced, reside in the natural mind. Gen. art.

—². A sign that evil resides in the natural mind, and that of itself it acts against the spiritual mind . . .

[W.] 271. Evils and falsities are in all opposition to goods and truths, because evils and falsities are diabolical and infernal, and goods and truths are Divine and heavenly. Gen.art.

— As they who are in evil do not feel and therefore do not perceive otherwise than that evil is good,—for evil delights their senses, especially the sight and hearing, and therefore also delights the thoughts and thus the perceptions,—therefore they indeed acknowledge that evil and good are opposites; but when they are in evil, from its delight they say that evil is good, and good evil. Examps.

—^c. No one can see good while he is in evil; but he who is in good can see evil. Evil is below as in a den; good is above as on a mountain.

275^d. How the goods and truths of Heaven are turned into evils and falsities . . . in the Hells . . . (Thus) goods and truths become evils and falsities through influx into forms turned the wrong way.

276. Then the natural mind perceives evil as good, and falsity as truth; and conversely.

336. Evil uses have not been created by the Lord, but arose together with Hell. Gen.art.

— All the evils which come forth into act are also called uses, but . . . evil uses. 338. 339. 341. 348.

419^o. Through the understanding, the love . . . sees what the evils are which pollute . . . the love; and also, that if he shuns and abhors those evils as sins, he then loves the things which are opposite to those evils . . . He also sees the means through which he is able to shun and abhor those evils as sins. 426.

427^o. Abhorring evils as infernal . . .

432^d. The exterior degree (of the brain) . . . is the receptacle of infernal love and insanity; because man by hereditary corruption is born into evils of every kind; and these evils reside in the extremes there.

P. 11^e. (Thus) evil with falsity and falsity with evil are not anything.

16. The Lord does not suffer anything to be divided; therefore, it must be in good and at the same time in truth, or it must be in evil and at the same time in falsity. Gen.art.

— It is better for a man to be in evil and at the same time in falsity, than to be in good and at the same time in evil.

—². The reason a man can be in evil and at the same time in truth . . .

18. Good and evil cannot be conjoined, nor good and the falsity of evil, nor evil and the truth of good; for they are opposites . . . They who are in evil and at the same time in good. Sig.

19. What is in evil and at the same time in falsity is not anything. Gen.art.

— They who are in evil and at the same time in falsity . . . have power with one another . . .

20. They who are in evil and at the same time in truths. Des.

21. The Divine Providence . . . causes evil together with falsity to serve for equilibrium, relation, and purification, and thus for the conjunction of good and truth with others. Gen.art.

24. The quality of good is known only through . . . opposition to evil . . .

—^e. But . . . the Lord exquisitely separates the good and evil in man lest they be commingled . . .

33. In general, there is the love of evil, and the love of good. The love of evil is the love of committing adultery, of taking revenge, of defrauding, of blaspheming, of depriving others of their goods; the love of evil feels pleasure and delight in thinking and doing these things. The derivations of this love, which are its affections, are as many as are the evils to which it has determined itself; and the perceptions and thoughts of this love are as many as are the falsities which favour the evils, and confirm them. These falsities make one with the evils . . . And as the Lord flows into the life's love, and through its affections into the perceptions and thoughts . . . He can conjoin Himself closely only in proportion as the love of evil with its affections . . . has been removed. And as these reside in the natural man, and man feels as if he does from himself whatever he does from the natural man, therefore man must as of himself remove the evils of that love; and then, so far as he removes them, the Lord . . . conjoins Himself with him . . . Sig. 38.

—³. The influx of Hell . . . is into the love of evil and its affections . . . and through these into the perceptions and thoughts; all of which derive from the evil in which the man is, that they are falsities.

—⁴. The more fully the evils in the natural man are removed by shunning and abhorring them, the more closely is the man conjoined with the Lord.

42. These can see no otherwise than that not to be allowed to think and will evil . . . is not to be one's own . . .

43. It is from infernal freedom to think and will evil, and, so far as civil and moral laws do not prevent, to speak and do it . . .

73⁶. Into the love (of eternal life) and its delight no one comes but he who thinks evils to be sins, and therefore does not will them . . . As soon as a man does this, he is in spiritual freedom; for no one is able not to will evils because they are sins, and therefore not to do them, except from interior freedom . . .

77. Who cannot . . . understand . . . that these evils are hurtful in themselves? . . . From these a man . . . may afterwards conclude . . . in relation to the evils which are hurtful in the Spiritual World; provided that instead of evils he perceives sins . . .

79. Nothing which a man has appropriated can be eradicated . . . It can be removed, but not cast out . . . For example: if in youth and adolescence a man has appropriated some evil by doing it from the delight of his love . . . but if he afterwards performs repentance, shuns them, and looks at them as sins which are to be held in aversion . . . there are then appropriated to him the goods to which these evils are opposite; these goods then make the centre, and remove the evil towards the circumferences, further and further according to his aversion for them. Still, they cannot be so cast out that they can be said to be extirpated; although, by this removal, they can appear as if they were extirpated; which is effected by the man's being withheld from evils by the Lord . . . It is so done with all hereditary evil, and in like manner with all the actual evil of man. (From experience.)

81. The evils which a man believes to be allowable are also appropriated to him, even though he does not do them. Ex. 278.

83². Man is born into the love of self and the love of the world, and from these as fountains into evils of every kind: it is the delights of these loves by which he is led, and the delights cause him not to know that he is in evils . . .

—⁴. So long as their delights remain, the evils also remain . . .

—⁶. Man's state . . . of regeneration . . . begins when a man desists from evils as sins; and advances as he shuns them; and is perfected as he fights against them . . .

85. By rationality, man can understand . . . what is evil . . . and thereby what is false . . . But so long as the delight of the love of evil reigns, he cannot freely will good and truth . . . and therefore cannot appropriate them . . . He for the first time acts from the delight of the love of good and truth when the delight of the love of evil and falsity has been removed . . .

86. For with the evil, evils with their falsities are as in the centre, and goods with truths in the circumferences; but with the good, goods with truths are in the centre, and evils with falsities in the circumferences; and in both cases the things which are in the centre diffuse themselves to the circumferences; thus, with the evil, the goods in the circumferences are defiled by the evils in the centre; and with the good, the evils in the circumferences become mild from the goods of the centre; which is the reason evils do not damn a regenerate man, and goods do not save an unregenerate one.

87^e. An evil man can from freedom will only evil, and do it according to the thought which he makes as of reason by confirmations; for evil, as well as good, can be confirmed; but evil by fallacies and appearances, which when confirmed become falsities; and when it has been confirmed, it appears as if it were of reason.

93. As they regard self, they can perceive only the delight of their own good, which is not the delight of good, but the delight of evil; for the proprium of man is evil; and the delight of evil perceived as good is Hell.

97. For the man who does evil from the love of evil, and confirms it with himself, does indeed act from freedom according to reason . . .

100. It is a law of the Divine Providence, that a man as of himself should remove evils as sins in the external man; and that thus and no otherwise the Lord can remove evils in the internal man, and then at the same time in the external. Gen.art. 123.

101. Many do not know that they are in Hell when they are in evils; nor do they even know what evils are, because they think nothing about them; saying that they are not under the yoke of the law . . . These are they who neglect to think concerning evil; and (therefore) they are continually in it.

102. (Thus) it is a law of the Divine Providence, that evils are to be removed by man . . .

108. They are then simultaneously in the body, and dwell there with his life's love . . . such are the concupiscences of evil, and the evils themselves, with those who in their spirit make evils allowable.

114. The evils in the external man cannot be removed by the Lord except by the means of the man. Gen.art. 116.

117. There are many who do not know that they are in evils, because they do not commit them in externals . . .

120^e. It is evils by which a man keeps his external closed; each of which appears to him as a one, although there are infinite things in each of them. When a man removes an evil as one, the Lord removes the infinite things in it.

121. (Various prevalent ideas as to what it is that purifies man from evils.)

133. By miracles the evil may be driven to faith . . . but only for a little while; for their evils are shut in . . . Thus they return into their evils; and he who after worship returns into his evils profanes the goods and truths of worship . . . 136^d, Ex.

147². This is what appears to man as combat; and with those who have indulged much in the delights of evil, it appears as temptation . . .

152. He thus explores the evils of his body, and not the evils of his spirit; and yet the evils of the spirit must be explored in order for anyone to be reformed; for after death man lives as a Spirit, and all the evils in it remain . . . Evils are there, in their origin and in their root . . . and unless they are seen and acknowledged, the man is still in evils, however little he may have committed them in externals. Sig.

154. They who confirm the appearance (that man is led and taught by himself) cannot remove from themselves evils as sins; but they who confirm the appearance and at the same time the truth, can; for evils as sins are removed in appearance by man, and in truth by the Lord.

177. The operation of the Divine Providence to withdraw man from evils, is continual . . .

—². For the evil which is of man does not receive the good from the Lord in a moment, nor does the good from the Lord cast out the evil from man in a moment; if either were done in a moment, there would be no life left to the man. 183².

183². Evil cannot be taken away from anyone, unless it appears, is seen, and is acknowledged; it is like a wound, which is not healed unless it is opened. 184.

195³. That is evil to a man which destroys the delight of his affection, and that is falsity which destroys the pleasantness of his thought thence. (Thus) evil from its delight, and falsity from its pleasantness, may be called and may be believed to be good and truth.

205. All who lead an evil life, interiorly acknowledge nature and mere human prudence; the acknowledgment of these lies inwardly concealed in all evil . . .

215⁷. The proprium of man is all evil; hence it is said that man is born into all evil, and that his Hereditary is nothing but evil . . .

[P. 215]⁹. I was permitted to feel, that from the delight (of the love of dominion from the love of self) as from their fountain, sprang the delights of all evils, as that of adultery, revenge, fraud, blasphemy, and of evil-doing in general . . .

227². The Lord . . . continually provides and disposes that evil may be by itself, and good by itself . . . Ex.

— . Every man is in both evil and good ; for he is in evil from himself, and in good from the Lord ; and man cannot live unless he is in both ; for if he were in self alone and thus in evil alone, he would have no life ; nor if he were in the Lord alone and thus in good alone, would he have any life . . . Wherefore everyone is in both ; but the difference is . . .

—³. With these, however, good and evil are not commingled, but are separated, like internal and external . . . The case is the reverse with the evil who in external form have appeared like the good . . . With these, also, evil is separated from good. But with those who have first acknowledged (and lived) the truths of faith, and have afterwards gone into what is contrary . . . goods and evils are no longer separate, but are commingled ; for such a one has appropriated good, and has also appropriated evil . . .

—⁴. He then so commingles good and evil that they cannot be separated. Ex.

228⁸. If a man is (first) in evil . . . and afterwards acknowledges (and lives) the truths of faith . . . he does not commingle them . . .

231². See CONFIRM.

—⁸. The return of a man to his former evils. Sig.

233. Evil and good cannot be in man's interiors both at once ; nor, therefore, the falsity of evil and the truth of good. Ex.

— . Evil cannot exist without its falsity . . . for (the life of evil is from its falsity, and the life of falsity is from its evil).

—². For evil is opposite to good, and good is opposite to evil, and two opposites cannot be together. There is also implanted in all evil hatred of good, and in all good the love of protecting itself against evil and of removing it from itself ; (so that) if they were together, there would first arise conflict, and then destruction. Sig. and Ex. . . So it is with the evils and goods in a hypocrite ; he is in both ; but the evil is within and the good without ; thus the two are . . . not commingled.

—³. Good and the truth of good cannot be introduced . . . into man's interiors, except in so far as the evil and falsity of evil there have been removed. Ex.

— . The 'door' is opened by a man's removing evil . . .

— . The devil is within all evil.

—⁴. If good with its truth were introduced before or more than evil with its falsity is removed, the man would recede from his good and return to his evil. Ex.

— . For evil would be the stronger . . . While evil is still the stronger, good cannot be introduced into the inmost chambers . . . and what is only in the courts is removed by its enemy in the chambers ; hence comes recession from good and return to evil, which is the worst kind of profanation.

—⁵. In proportion as the delight (of the two evil loves) remains with a man, evil prevails there ; and this evil can be removed only by the love of self becoming the love of uses . . .

— . If evil constitutes the head, the devil is there . . . and then good is in the feet and soles, and is trampled upon.

—⁷. When a man is in evil, many truths may be introduced into his understanding . . . and yet not be profaned. Ex.

—⁹. But the Lord (most carefully provides) that the will shall not receive therefrom before or more than in the proportion that the man . . . removes evil in the external man. Ex.

— . In the life itself which man has from the will, evil and good cannot be both at once, for so he would perish ; but in the understanding there can be both . . . yet not at once, otherwise the man could not see evil from good, and know good from evil ; but they are there separated like a house, into interiors and exteriors. When an evil man thinks and speaks goods, he does so exteriorly ; but when evils, interiorly . . .

—¹⁰. (Otherwise) the will would adulterate the good, and the understanding would falsify the truth, by commingling them with the evils and the falsities thence. Ex.

— . When the will is in evil, it adulterates the good in the understanding ; and good adulterated in the understanding is in the will evil ; for it confirms that evil is good, and the reverse ; evil does this with all good . . . evil also falsifies truth, because the truth of good is opposed to the falsity of evil . . .

—¹¹. The love of self, which is the head of all evils . . . can, by confirmations, make evil appear exactly like good, and falsity like truth.

—^e. On account of the danger (of profanation) the Lord permits evils of life . . . 234.

249². These laws (show) why wickednesses—impietates—are permitted by the Lord, and are not punished while they are only in the thought ; and rarely, too, in intention ; and thus, too, in the will and not in the deed. Nevertheless, every evil is followed by its own penalty ; it is as if its own penalty were inscribed on every evil, which a wicked man suffers after death.

251. Without permissions, man could not be led by the Lord from evil . . . for unless evils were permitted to break out, the man would not see them, thus would not acknowledge them, and thus could not be led to resist them. Hence it is that evils cannot be repressed through any Providence ; for so they would remain shut in, and, like . . . cancer and gangrene, would spread and consume all that is vital in man. Ex.

275. Evils are permitted for the sake of the end, which is salvation. Gen.art.

— . If man were born into the love in which he was created, he would not be in any evil, and would not even know what evil is . . . If he were told that this and that is evil, he would not believe in the possibility of it . . .

276^o. These are the evils in which man is from birth. Enum.

277. Every man is in evil, and is to be withdrawn from evil in order to be reformed. Gen.art.

— . Hence it is, that man cannot do good from himself; for evil does not do good, except such good as has evil within it; the evil which is within, is that he does good for the sake of self.

— . It is known that hereditary evil is from the parents . . . thus it is transferred in succession from one to another, and is thus increased, and grows as it were into a heap . . . Hence it is that with man there is nothing whole, but the evil makes up the entire man. Who feels that it is evil to love himself more than others? . . . when yet it is the head of evils.

277a. He who is in evil in the world is in evil after his departure from the world; wherefore, if evil is not removed in the world, it cannot be removed afterwards.

278. Evils cannot be removed unless they appear. Gen.art. 278a^o, Ex.

— . It is not meant that a man should do evils to the end that they may appear; but that he must explore himself; not only his deeds, but also his thoughts; and what he would do if he did not fear the laws and disgrace; especially what evils he regards in his spirit as allowable, and does not account as sins, for he still does these.

— . When he sees this, and knows what sin is, if he implores the Lord's aid, he is able not to will it, he can shun it, and afterwards act contrary to it; if not freely, still he can by combat coerce it, and at last . . . abominate it; and then for the first time he perceives and also feels that evil is evil, and that good is good.

278a^o. (Such say) Why search whether there is evil or good? Why evil, when it does not damn me . . . I am indeed in evil; but God wipes it away as soon as it is done . . . So he passes all by, until at last he does not know what evil is.

—³. From the good which is not from truth, evil is not known, unless that it, too, may be called good! . . .

—⁴. These are they who . . . confirm that some evil which is a sin is not a sin . . . It is said that they who acknowledge God do this, because others do not account any evil as sin . . . Examp.

—⁵. All evil which does not appear foment itself; it is like fire in wood beneath the ashes; and like matter in a wound which is not opened; for all evil that is blocked up increases, and does not cease until the whole has been consummated; wherefore, to prevent any evil from being blocked up, everyone is permitted to think in favour of or against God . . .

279. In proportion as evils are removed, they are remitted. Gen.art.

— . It is an error of the age to believe that evils are separated from man; nay, are cast out, when they are remitted . . . —², Ex.

— . Such do not know what evil is . . . (But) when these things are known, it can be clearly seen that no evil can be removed except successively; and that the remission of evil is not the removal of it.

—². Every evil into which a man is born, and which he has actually imbued, is not separated from the man, but is so removed that it does not appear. I was once in the belief . . . that evils, when remitted, are cast away, and are washed off like dirt from the face. But it is not so with evils or sins; they all remain; and when, after repentance, they are remitted, they are moved from the centre to the sides . . . and as evils are not separated, but only removed, that is, relegated to the sides . . . it is possible for a man to return into his evils which he has believed to be cast away.

—³. There are some who . . . are elevated into Heaven . . . who (believe) that they are pure from sins . . . They are at first clothed in white . . . for white garments = a state purified from evils. But they afterwards begin to think . . . that they are washed from all evil, and thence to glory . . . Therefore . . . they are sent out of Heaven, and are remitted into their evils which they had contracted in the world; and at the same time are shown that they are also in hereditary evils, of which they before had no knowledge. And after they have been thus driven to acknowledge that their evils are not separated from them, but only removed; and that thus, of themselves . . . they are nothing but evil; and that they are withheld from evils . . . by the Lord . . . they are again elevated into Heaven.

—⁴. It is an error of the age to believe, that the state of man's life can be changed in a moment, and thus that a man from evil can become good . . . Ex.

—⁵. They who so believe do not at all know what evil is. For they do not know that evil is the delight of the concupiscence of acting and thinking contrary to Divine order . . . and that there are myriads of concupiscences which enter into and compose every evil . . . and that these myriads are in such an order and connection in the interiors of man, that one cannot be changed unless all are changed at the same time.

283. The reason a man is permitted to think evils even to the intention of them, is that they may be removed by means of civil, moral, and spiritual things . . . But still evils are not separated and cast out from the man, but are only removed and relegated to the sides; and when they are there, and good is in the midst, the evils do not appear . . . But it is to be known, that . . . still the man is not in good, unless the evils which are at the sides verge downwards or outwards; if they look upwards or inwards they are not removed; for they are still endeavouring to return to the middle. They verge and look downwards or outwards, when the man shuns his evils as sins, and still more when he abhors them; for he then condemns them and curses them to Hell, and causes them to look thither.

284. The understanding is a recipient of both good and evil . . . but not the will; this must be either in evil or in good . . . The good and evil in the understanding are however separated as are what is internal and what is external; thus a man can be interiorly in evil and exteriorly in good. Nevertheless, when a man is being reformed, good and evil are let go together, and there then comes forth a conflict . . . and if good conquers, evil with its falsity is removed to the sides . . . But if evil conquers, good with its truth is removed to the sides . . .

[P.] 286². He confuses himself by the thought, that thus evils also would be from the Lord . . .

287. The Divine Providence is universal . . . with the evil, and still is not in their evils. Gen.art.

— . If it is evil, it is from influx from Hell ; or, what is the same . . . evil is from the proprium of man.

288. The good flowing in is turned into evil, and the truth into falsity. Examp.

— . Good flowing down from Heaven is progressively turned into the evil opposite to it . . . The like takes place with every evil man . . .

289^e. They said that in this case they are not to blame for thinking evil ; and also that it thus seems as if evil were from the Lord.

290. I was told from Heaven . . . that nothing is from myself, but if . . . evil, it was from Hell . . . Afterwards, as soon as any evil slipped into my will, or any falsity into my thought, I searched whence it came . . . and it was granted me to speak with them . . . and thus (make them) take back their evil and falsity, and keep them to themselves . . . This has been done a thousand times . . .

291. That all evil is from Hell, is not unknown in the world . . .

292. That still the Lord is not the cause of man's thinking evil and falsity, may be illustrated by . . .

294². (How it is still man's own fault if he does evil.) Ex.

—³. Nor can he remove blame from himself . . . (until) he releases himself from connection with those others ; this takes place when he knows that it is evil, and therefore wills to shun it and desist from it ; he is then taken out of the Society which is in that evil, and is transferred to a Society in which it does not exist. If, however, he knows evil, and does not shun it, the blame is imputed to him, and he becomes guilty of that evil.

—⁵. It thus seems as if evil were from the Lord. Ex.

295. The evil are continually leading themselves into evils ; but the Lord is continually withdrawing them from evils. Gen.art. 296², Ex.

296. There are innumerable things in every evil. Ex.

— . Every evil appears to man as if it were simple . . . The spirit itself is evil, appearing to itself as one ; but as many as are the innumerable things in it, so many are the concupiscences of that evil ; for every man is his own evil, or his own good, from the head to the sole of the foot. Since, therefore, an evil man is such, it is evident that he is one evil composed of innumerable various ones, each of which is a distinct evil, and which are called the concupiscences of evil . . .

—³. An evil man, from himself, continually leads himself deeper into his evils. Ex.

— . It is said from himself, because all evil is from man, for he turns even the good which is from the Lord into evil. The real cause of an evil man's leading himself deeper into evil, is that he introduces himself more and more interiorly . . . into infernal Societies as he wills and does evil ; hence also, the delight of evil increases, and so takes possession of his thoughts that at last he feels nothing sweeter.

—⁵. He introduces himself into infernal Societies more and more interiorly . . . as, from the will, and at the same time from the thought, he commits evil ; if they are only in the thought, and not in the will, he is not yet, with that evil, in an infernal Society . . . If at the time he also thinks that that evil is contrary to the precepts of the Decalogue . . . he commits it of set purpose, and thus lets himself deeply down, from which he can be brought out only through actual repentance.

—⁷. The Divine Providence with the evil is the continual permission of evil, to the end that there may be a continual withdrawal from it. Gen.art.

— . For nothing but evil can go forth from their life ; for man, whether he is in good, or in evil, cannot be in both at the same time, nor alternately, unless he is lukewarm ; and the evil of life is not introduced by the Lord into the will and through that into the thought, but it is introduced by the man ; and this is called permission.

—⁸. The evils which go forth by permission, (the Divine Providence) continually surveys, separates, and purifies, sending away what are not in agreement . . .

—⁹. The primary reason why a man does not perceive these evils, is that they are the evils of the concupiscences of his life's love ; and these evils he does not feel as evils, but as delights, to which no one attends . . . unless he well knows that they are evils.

—¹⁰. The withdrawal from evil is effected by the Lord by a thousand methods, even the most secret. Gen.art.

—¹². With an evil man there is no other separation, purification, and withdrawal, than that of the more grievous evils from the less grievous ones ; whereas with a good man, there is . . . also that of the less grievous ones ; and this is effected through the delights of the affections of good and truth . . . into which he comes in proportion as he regards evils as sins, and therefore shuns and abhors them ; and still more if he fights against them . . .

—^c. (Therefore) nothing is more incumbent on man, than to remove the evils in the external man. The rest is provided by the Lord, if He is implored.

297. The evil cannot be entirely withdrawn from evils, and led into goods, so long as they believe their Own intelligence to be everything . . . Gen.art.

— . It appears as if a man could withdraw himself from evil . . . But still he cannot withdraw himself from evil . . . for evil is of the will, and the understanding does not flow into the will . . . and if the heat of the will . . . is fervid with the concupiscence of evil . . . it does not receive . . .

298. When the will is in evil, man's Own intelligence sees nothing but falsity . . . Ex.

—³. The voluntary proprium is evil ; and the intellectual proprium is the falsity thence . . . and their marriage is called the marriage of evil and falsity. Every evil Spirit is brought into this marriage . . . and when he is in it, he does not know what good is ; for he calls his evil good, because he feels it as delight . . . (and) the falsity agreeing with his evil he sees as the eye sees beauty . . .

—⁵. Man is thereby withdrawn from evil, not by himself, but by the Lord. Ex.

—⁵. Without truth the will is continually in its evil; and if it consults the understanding it is not instructed, but the evil is confirmed by means of falsities.

—⁶. He who believes in the Divine Providence is withdrawn from evil; but he who does not believe in it is not withdrawn; and he believes who acknowledges evil to be sin, and wills to be withdrawn from it; and he does not believe who does not so acknowledge and will.

305. They were answered that they could have known if they had wanted that evil of life is ungrateful to Heaven and undelightful to God . . . consequently that evil in itself is stinking . . .

308. The Divine Providence appropriates neither evil nor good to anyone, but man's Own prudence appropriates both. Gen.art. 312, Gen.art.

311⁴. Evils and falsities are not alive, but only goods and truths . . .

319. Every man is his own good, or his own evil; for all that is called good which is of the love, and in like manner evil.

320. If a man believed . . . that all evil and falsity is from Hell . . . he would not appropriate to himself evil, and make himself guilty of it. Gen.art. D.4228.

321⁴. To believe and think . . . that all evil and falsity is from Hell appears impossible; when yet it is truly human and thence angelic. Ex.

—⁶. So to believe and think is impossible to those who . . . do not acknowledge evils to be sins . . . Ex.

—⁷. (These) only reflect upon the evils in themselves, and reject them to Hell whence they are, in proportion as they shun and abhor them as sins. Ex.

324⁸. It is granted to everyone to be in the delight of his evil, provided he does not infest those who are in the delight of good; but as evil cannot do otherwise than infest good, for there is in evil hatred against good, . . . they are cast down . . .

326⁷. It is the contrary with evil of life; this rejects the Lord.

—⁹. To acknowledge God, and not do evil because it is contrary to God, are the two things which make religion to be religion . . . To acknowledge God and do evil is contradictory . . . 328⁸.

327. Evil cannot flow from good, nor good from evil, because they are opposites; consequently . . . from evil there flows forth nothing but evil. . . Good can be turned into evil . . . by an evil recipient . . . whose form is a form of evil . . . Evil is indeed from Hell, but as man receives it thence as his own, and thereby appropriates it to himself, it is the same whether it is said that evil is from man, or that evil is from Hell. But whence comes the appropriation of evil, even until at last religion perishes. Ex.

328⁷. When evil thus grows worse among many (by heredity), of itself it spreads evil to many; for in all evil there is a lust of seducing . . . Hence the contagiousness of evil.

R. 78. 'Thou canst not bear them that are evil' (Rev. ii. 2)=that they cannot endure evils to be called goods, and contrariwise, because this is contrary to the truths of doctrine. (=that they reject evils. E.99.)

79. That they scrutinize those things in the Church which are called goods and truths, which nevertheless are evils and falsities. Sig.

97. The Hell which is called 'the devil' means those in Hell who are in evils; properly, those who are in the love of self; and the Hell which is called 'Satan,' means those in Hell who are in falsities; properly, those who are in the pride of their Own intelligence.

—³. This falsity,—that he can do good which is good, without a Knowledge of what is evil in himself; (whereas) without repentance he is in evil.

— He who is in this falsity, that good purifies him from evils, and does not know anything of the evils in which he is, does no other good than spurious good, which is inwardly contaminated by his evils.

147. That they shall overcome in themselves the evils which are from Hell. Sig.

153⁵. For he who loves falsities cannot but love evils.

185. That they have fought against evils, and at the same time—tunc—rejected falsities. Sig.

272. Wherever there is religion, it is taught . . . that the devil is evil itself, and the source of evil; and that as (good and evil) are opposites, evil, being from the devil, is to be shunned . . . Consequently, that in proportion as anyone loves Evil, he loves the devil, and acts against God. . . So that it is only necessary to know what evil is; and this also is known by all who have religion . . .

323. 'With sword, and with hunger . . .'=(destruction) by falsities of doctrine, and by evils of life . . .

338. That now they were in evils and in falsities of evil. Sig.

339. Confirmations of evil by means of falsity, and of falsity from evil. Sig.

— 'Mountains'=evil loves, thus evils; and 'rocks,' the falsities of faith.

— 'To fall upon them, and hide them'=to be protected against influx from Heaven; and this is done through confirmations of evil by falsity, and of falsity from evil.

—². The Lord's Divine sphere fills all things, which they cannot remove from themselves, except through confirmations of evil by means of falsity, and of falsity from evil; the delights of evil effect this.

—³. When the Last Judgment is taking place, they who are in evil and want to be in good suffer hard things at first; whereas they who confirm themselves in the evil by means of falsities suffer less; for the latter cover over their evils by means of falsities; but the former lay bare their evil, and then they cannot endure the Divine influx. Sig.

379. All who have fought against evils in the world, and have believed in the Lord . . . are (there) taught by the Lord . . . The reason is, that they who shun evils as sins are in the good of life; and the good of life longs for truths . . . but never evil of life.

458. As he does not search out any evil in himself which he calls a sin, and consequently has no desire to remove it by repentance, he remains in it ; and as every evil is composed of concupiscences, and is nothing but a bundle of concupiscences, it follows that he who does not search out any evil in himself, and shun it as a sin against God . . . becomes a demon after death.

[R.] 502². That the love of dominion from the love of self, and the love of reigning from the pride of Own intelligence, are the heads of all the loves of Hell, and thus the heads of all the evils and the falsities thence in the Church, is at this day unknown.

527. Thus he who loves the Lord fears to do evils, because evils are contrary to Him ; for they are contrary to His Divine laws . . . nay, they are contrary to His Divine essence . . . and, what is more, he who loves evils, also loves to do harm to the Lord ; nay, to crucify Him ; this lies inmosty concealed in all evil, even with those who in the world confess Him with the mouth.

628. Admonition that they should not do evils, because this is against the Lord. Sig.

— . 'To fear God' = to love Him by fearing to do evil, because this is contrary to Him.

— . The first of reformation is to live according to the precepts of the Decalogue, where the evils are enumerated which are not to be done ; for he who does them does not fear God ; but he who does not do them, by shunning them because they are contrary to the Lord, does fear Him, and also loves the Lord. Sig.

634². To live according to (the doctrine of faith alone) is to make nothing of evil, by thinking that evil does not condemn . . . Thus they are such as only shun evils on account of civil and moral laws . . .

657. The evils and falsities in the Church, such as exist in its last state, universally disclosed by the Lord. Sig.

— . 'Plagues' = evils and falsities.

672. Those truths and goods, taken from the sense of the letter of the Word, by means of which the evils and falsities of the Church are disclosed. Sig. 673, Ex.

678. 'There took place an evil and noxious ulcer' (Rev. xvi. 2) = interior evils and falsities destructive of all good and truth in the Church. 'An ulcer,' here, = the evil originating from a life according to this head of doctrine . . . (See CONCUPISCENCE, here.)

698. That although instructed from the Word, still they do not recede from the falsities of faith and the consequent evils of life. Sig.

710. Reasonings, falsifications of truth, and argumentations . . . with those who . . . refuse to reflect upon the evils in themselves, because they do not want to desist from them even if they know them. Sig.

836. They who do not (shun evils as sins) are in evils of every kind ; for they are beset with them from birth . . . even to the end of life ; and they increase daily if they are not removed through actual repentance. Of these it is said that 'they were slain by the sword of Him who sat upon the horse.'

875¹¹. As all evil also flows in, not from God but from Hell, and is received with delight, because man is born such an organ, therefore no more of good is received from God than the amount of evil which is removed by the man as by himself, which is effected through repentance, and at the same time by faith in the Lord.

—¹². In a word, man is an organ recipient of life from God, consequently he is a recipient of good in proportion as he desists from evil. The power to desist from evil the Lord gives to every man, because He gives to will and understand as if from himself . . .

890. That those who overcome evils in themselves, that is, the devil, and do not yield when tempted by the Babylonians and dragonists, will come into Heaven, and there live in the Lord, and the Lord in them. Sig.

924. That no one is received into the Lord's New Church . . . who does evils from confirmation, and thus also does falsities. Sig.

937. That no evil, or falsity from evil, which separates the Lord, will be in the New Jerusalem. Sig. And as evil and falsity do not exist except in a recipient which is man, it = that none who are separated from the Lord will be there.

— . 'Cursed' = all that evil and falsity which separates and turns man away from the Lord . . .

—³. The Lord loves everyone, and wants to be conjoined with him, but He cannot be conjoined so long as a man is in the delight of evil, thus in the delight of hating and revenging, in the delight of committing adultery and whoredom, in the delight of despoiling or stealing under any pretence, in the delight of reviling and lying, and in the concupiscences of the love of self and of the world . . . and these delights cannot be removed by the Lord unless the man explores himself, in order that he may know his evils, may acknowledge and confess them before the Lord, and will to desist from them, and thus perform repentance . . . In proportion, therefore, as evils with their delights are thus removed, the love of the Lord enters . . . and then the man is withdrawn from Hell, and is led into Heaven. This must be done in the world . . .

948. That from those who are in evils, goods shall be taken away ; and from those who are in falsities, truths shall be taken away ; and, contrariwise, that from those who are in goods, evils shall be taken away ; and from those who are in truths, falsities shall be taken away. Sig.

— . 'He that is unjust, let him be unjust still' = that he who is in evils shall be still more in evils ; and 'he that is filthy let him be filthy still' = that he who is in falsities shall be still more in falsities.

— . In proportion as goods are taken away from anyone who is in evils, so much the more is he in evils ; and in proportion as truths are taken away from anyone who is in falsities, so much the more is he in falsities ; and, on the other hand, in proportion as evils are taken away from anyone who is in goods, so much the more is he in goods ; and in proportion as falsities are taken away from anyone who is in truths, so much the more is he in truths. Either the one or the other happens to everyone after death . . . An evil man cannot carry goods and truths with him into Hell, nor can a good man carry evils and falsities with him into Heaven . . .

—². But it is to be well known that those are meant who are interiorly evil, or interiorly good ; for those who are interiorly evil may be exteriorly good . . . and those who are interiorly good may sometimes be exteriorly evil; for they may exteriorly act evils and speak falsities, but still may perform repentance, and want to be informed of truths. Sig.

M. 147. It is a universal rule, that in proportion as anyone removes evil, there is given an opportunity for good to succeed; and further, that in proportion as evil is hated good is loved; and contrariwise.

240. With such, goods place themselves outside of evils, and veil them over. . . The evils which reside within, and are veiled over, are in general, hatreds, and thence intestine combats against everything spiritual. . .

345². Whatever the natural man acts from himself is evil. . .

— . All the evil into which a man is born from his parents, is implanted in his natural man, and not any of it in the spiritual man, because he is born into this from the Lord.

356⁶. But the Angel replied, You cannot shun adulteries as infernal evils, unless you in like manner shun all other evils, because adulteries are the complex of all.

423⁶. No one knows good from evil, but evil from good; for evil is in thick darkness, but good in light. 439.

427. That scortatory love is opposite to marriage love, as the connubial connection of evil and falsity is opposite to the marriage of good and truth. Gen.art.

—². In internals, the delight of the love of evil consists of mere concupiscences of evil; evil itself is a conglobated congeries or ball of them. T.539. 611.

428. Evil loves falsity, and wants it to be one with itself, and they also conjoin themselves together. . . Thus the spiritual origin of adultery is the connubial connection of evil and falsity. . . It is from this principle (or beginning) that he who is in evil and weds falsity, and he who is in falsity and draws evil into the partnership of his chamber, from the joint covenant confirms adultery, and commits it so far as he dares. . . He confirms it from evil by means of falsity, and commits it from falsity by means of evil.

429. All who are in Hell are in the connubial connection of evil and falsity. . . and as the connubial connection of evil and falsity is also adultery. . . Hell is also that connubial connection.

444³. I said, Do you not know that there exist both good and evil, and that good is from creation, but not evil; and that still evil regarded in itself is not nothing, although it is nothing of good. Good exists from creation, and good, too, in the greatest degree and in the least degree; and when this least becomes nothing, there rises up evil on the other side; wherefore, there exists no relation or progression of good to evil, but a relation and progression of good to a greater and a less good; and of evil to a greater and a less evil; for there are opposites in each and all things. And as good and evil are opposites, there exists an intermediate, and in it an equilibrium, in which evil acts against good; but as it does not prevail, it comes to a stand in an endeavour. (See EQUILIBRIUM, here.)

—⁴. The two Angels (then) asked me, How could evil come forth, when nothing but good had come forth from creation? In order that anything may come forth there must be an origin of it; good could not be the origin of evil, because evil is nothing of good, being privative and destructive of good; yet as it exists and is felt it is not nothing, but is something; tell us therefore whence this something which is beyond nothing came forth. To this I replied. . . No one is good except God only. . . wherefore he who turns himself away from God, and wants to be led by himself is not in good; for the good which he does is either for the sake of self, or for the sake of the world; or it is either meritorious, or pretended, or hypocritical; from which it is evident that man himself is the origin of evil; not that this origin was implanted in man from creation; but that he, by a turning from God to himself, implanted it in himself. This origin of evil was not in Adam and his wife; but when the serpent said, 'In the day ye eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil ye shall be as God;' and then because they turned themselves away from God, and turned themselves to self, as to God, they made in themselves the origin of evil. To eat of that tree signified to believe that one knows good and evil, and is wise, from one's self, and not from God.

—⁵. But the two Angels then asked, How could man turn himself from God, and turn to himself, when yet man is not able to will, think, and thence do anything except from God? I replied, Man was so created that everything he wills, thinks, and does appears to him as in himself, and thus from himself. . . but if from this appearance he induces in himself the belief that he wills, thinks, and thence does good from himself. . . he turns good into evil with himself, and thus makes in himself the origin of evil. This was the sin of Adam. But I will open this matter somewhat more clearly. . . The cerebellum was assigned to love and its goods, and the cerebrum to wisdom and its truths; wherefore, he who looks. . . backwards from the Lord receives love and not wisdom; and love without wisdom is love from man and not from the Lord; and as this love conjoins itself with falsities, it does not acknowledge God, but itself instead. . . Therefore this love is the origin of evil. (Shown by experiment.)

—⁸. Besides. . . I have sometimes heard goods and truths let down from Heaven into Hell, and they were there progressively turned into their opposites; good into evil, and truth into falsity. . . T.492.

452. There are degrees of the qualities of evil. . . wherefore every evil is lighter and more grievous. Examp.

—³. The second cause (which makes fornication light with those who prefer and pre-love the marriage state) is that they separate in themselves evil from good. . . (because they who in perception and intention separate these two. . . are also separated and purified from the evil of that lust when they come into the marriage state.

453. These make one evil out of all evils, and conmingle them together. . .

— . With such, there is no separation of evil from good. . .

—². The Angels charged these things upon some as evils of sin, and upon others as not evils. . . (for) they regard all from purpose, intention, or end . . . 527². B.113².

[M.] 491. Everyone can confirm evil equally as well as good, in like manner falsity as truth; and the confirmation of evil is perceived as more delightful than the confirmation of good, and the confirmation of falsity appears clearer than the confirmation of truth; the reason is, that the confirmation of evil and falsity draws its reasonings from the delights, pleasures, appearances, and fallacies of the senses of the body . . .

510. For no one can be withdrawn from his evil unless he has first been brought into it; otherwise the evil hides itself away, and defiles the interiors of the mind, and spreads like a pestilence, and then bursts the barriers, and ruins the externals which are of the body.

524. To every man after death is imputed the evil in which he is . . . Gen.art. (See IMPUTE, here.)

527. Evil is imputed to everyone according to the quality of his will, and according to the quality of his understanding. Gen.art.

529. If those who are in good from the Lord, from the will and the understanding, or from purpose and confirmation, abstain from one evil because it is a sin, they abstain from all; and still more if they abstain from a number; for as soon as anyone, from purpose or confirmation, abstains from any evil because it is a sin, he is kept by the Lord in the purpose of abstaining from all the rest; wherefore, if he does evil from ignorance or from any prevailing concupiscence of the body, still this evil is not imputed to him, because he has not proposed it to himself, and does not confirm it with himself. A man comes into this purpose if he explores himself once or twice a year, and repents of the evil which he finds in himself . . . B.113.

B. 84^e. It is a general rule of religion, that in proportion as anyone does not will goods, and thence does not do them, he wills evils, and thence does them; and also, contrariwise, that in proportion as anyone does not will evils, and thence does not do them, he wills goods, and thence does them.

T. 3². Evils are not to be done, because they are of the devil and from the devil.

38^e. The mind whose delights are evil, is organized of spiritual substances such as exist in Hell; and the evils of this mind are tied into bundles by means of falsities. Sig.

43². The love of God . . . extends itself . . . also to the evil and to evils . . . But the reason the evil are still evil, and that evils are still evils, is in the subjects and objects themselves . . .

53^e. Evils came forth together with Hell, thus after creation.

56². (Thus) the Divine omnipotence cannot possibly go out of itself into contact with any evil, nor promote it from itself; for evil turns itself away. Hence it comes to pass that evil is entirely removed from Him, and is cast into Hell . . .

61. The reason God perceives, knows, and sees everything . . . which takes place contrary to order, is that God does not keep man in evil, but withholds him from evil; thus does not lead him, but struggles with him. From this perpetual struggling, resistance . . . and reaction of evil and falsity against His good and truth, that is, against Himself, He perceives both their quantity and their quality.

— . It is the same with good and truth when evil and falsity struggle against them, (namely) the latter are perceived distinctly from the former; for everyone who is in good can perceive evil, and everyone who is in truth can perceive falsity. The reason is, that good is in the heat of Heaven, and truth is in its light; whereas evil is in the cold of Hell, and falsity is in its thick darkness . . .

—e. The man who is in some light of truth, and yet in evil of life, when he is in the delight of the love of his evil, at first sees truths no otherwise than as a bat sees clothes hanging up in a garden, to which it flies as a refuge.

68. Man is in power against evil and falsity from the Divine omnipotence . . . in proportion as he lives according to Divine order. Gen.art.

— . (For) no one can resist evils and the falsities thence except God only; for all evils and the falsities thence are from Hell; and in Hell cohere together as one . . . Therefore, to act against a single evil and the falsity thence, is to act against that monstrous giant, or Hell; and this no one can do except God, because He is omnipotent. Hence it is evident, that unless a man approaches the omnipotent God, he has no more power of himself against evil and the falsity thence, than a fish has against the ocean . . . Moreover, man has still less power against evil and the falsity thence, because he is born in evil, and evil cannot act against itself. It follows, that unless a man lives according to order, that is, acknowledges God . . . and unless a man on his own part also fights with the evil in himself, he cannot be otherwise than sunk in Hell, and there be driven by evils, one after another, like a boat in the sea by the tempests. 123^e.

121³. Every Angel is withheld from evil by the Lord . . .

142. According to these, purification from evils . . . Gen.art.

—². According to the progressions and increments of these, he is purified from evils; and purification from these is the remission of sins.

154⁴. The evil from parents which is called hereditary, acts in man and into man . . . (and it does so) below or outside. If evil acted through man, he would not be reformable, nor culpable . . . But as both (good and evil) depend on the free choice of man, he becomes guilty when he acts of himself from evil . . .

281⁵. For falsities attend upon evils, and evils adhere to falsities . . .

309. That no deadly evil be done to his reputation . . .

322. In the spiritual sense, 'to bear false witness' = to persuade (of set purpose) that the falsity of faith is the truth of faith; and that the evil of life is the good of life; and contrariwise.

329. In eight precepts of the Decalogue . . . it is said, in general, that evil is not to be willed, thought, and done . . . because, in proportion as man shuns evils as sins, he wills the goods which are of love and charity. The first of love to God and of love towards the neighbour is not to do evil, and the second of them is to do good.

—². There are two loves which are opposite to each other: the love of willing and doing good, and the love of willing and doing evil . . . The whole Hell is in the love of willing and doing evil . . . Now as man is born into evils of every kind . . . it is necessary that the evils which are of Hell shall be first removed, before he can will the goods which are of Heaven.

—³. That evils are first to be removed, before the goods which man does become goods before God. III. 435⁴.

—⁴. That before washing or purification from evils, prayers to God are not heard. III.

— . That love and charity follow, when a man does the precepts of the Decalogue, by shunning evils. III.

331. The reason evil and good cannot be together, and that in proportion as evil is removed, good is regarded and felt, is that in the Spiritual World there exhales from everyone the sphere of his love . . . By means of these spheres, the good are separated from the evil.

— . That evil must be removed, before good is known, perceived, and felt. (Shown by comparisons.)

—⁴. The reason man must purify himself from evils, and not wait for the Lord to do it immediately. (Shown by comparisons.)

383. The evil have no faith, because evil is of Hell, and faith is of Heaven. Gen.art.

— . The reason evil is of Hell, is that all evil is thence . . . Whatever ascends from Hell is evil and falsity, and whatever descends from Heaven is good and truth; and as man is in the midst between these two opposites . . . he can, from freedom, choose, adopt, and appropriate to himself either the one or the other; if evil and falsity, he conjoins himself with Hell . . .

—². That where there is evil there is not faith. (Shown by comparisons.)

— . Evil dwells in thick darkness, and faith in light; and, by means of falsities, evil extinguishes faith . . . Evil is as black as ink, and faith is as white as snow . . . and evil blackens faith, as ink does snow.

398⁷. As all things in the universe which are according to Divine order relate to good and truth, so all things which are contrary to Divine order relate to evil and falsity; also, as good loves to be conjoined with truth, so evil loves to be conjoined with falsity, and contrariwise; and, further, as all intelligence and wisdom is born from the conjunction of good and truth, so all insanity and folly is born from the conjunction of evil and falsity. Interiorly regarded, the conjunction of evil and falsity is not a marriage, but is adultery.

—⁸. From the fact that evil and falsity are opposites to good and truth, it is evident that truth cannot be conjoined with evil, nor good with the falsity of evil; if truth is adjoined to evil, it is no longer truth, but falsity, because it is falsified; and if good is adjoined to the falsity of evil, it is no longer good, but evil, because it is adulterated.

—⁹. No one who, from confirmation and life, is in evil and the falsity thence, can know what good and truth are, because he believes his evil to be good, and his falsity thence he believes to be truth; whereas everyone who, from confirmation and life, is in good and in the truth thence, can know what evil and falsity are; the reason is, that . . . all evil and the falsity thence, in its essence is infernal . . . and everything infernal is in darkness.

405³. The evils which are in those who are in the love of dominion from the love of self are in general these. Enum.

435. The first of charity is to put away evils . . . Gen.art.

— . Evil is seated in the will of every man from his birth; and as all evil regards a man as both near itself and afar from itself, and also society and one's country, it follows that hereditary evil is evil against the neighbour in every degree. A man can see from reason itself, that in proportion as the evil seated in the will is not removed, the good which he does is impregnated with that evil; for then the evil is within the good, like the kernel in the shell . . .

—². To will evil and do good are in themselves two opposite things; for evil is of hatred against the neighbour, and good is of love towards the neighbour . . . These two cannot exist in one mind; that is, evil in the internal man, and good in the external man . . .

437. It is now believed, that . . . when a man is doing good he is not doing evil; consequently, that . . . the second of charity is not to do evil; but . . . the first of charity is to put away evil . . . For it is a universal law, that . . . in proportion as anyone does not will evil, he wills good . . .

438. No one, however, is able, by his own power and forces, to purify himself from evils; and yet it cannot take place without the power and forces of the man, as his Own; for, without this . . . he would relax his mind into evils of every kind . . .

448. Among the Knowledges known in Heaven is this, that evils can be inspired into the good, but not good into the evil; the reason is, that everyone is in evils from birth. Ex.

476. But if he favours evil, and drinks it in, he advances towards the west; for . . . in the west are those who are in evil. —².

479. From the permission of evil, in which is the internal man of everyone, it is evident that man has free-will in spiritual things. Gen.art.

489. Without free-will in spiritual things, God would be the cause of evil. Gen.art.

— . That God is the cause of evil follows from the present faith . . . All these heresies involve that God is the cause of evil; or, that God has created both good and evil.

—². It may be thought, that the free-will given to man in spiritual things has been the mediate cause of evil . . . 490.

490. That evil originated from man, is evident from the second state of Adam after the fall, that he was driven out of paradise.

—². The reason that God has not created evil, but that man has introduced it, is that man turns into evil the good which continually flows in from the Lord, by turning himself away from God, and turning himself to self. When this is done, the delight of good remains, and this then becomes the delight of evil . . .

[T.] 491. That God . . . provides good for all things, but that the objects turn it into evil. (Illustrated by comparisons.)

510. Everyone is regenerated by abstaining from the evils of sin, and by shunning them as he would . . . Acts of repentance are all those which cause a man not to will, and thence not to do, the evils which are sins against God . . .

520. Every man is born to evils of every kind, and unless through repentance he removes them in part, he remains in them, and he who remains in them cannot be saved. Gen.art.

521. Hereditary evil is from no other source than the parents ; not indeed the evil itself which a man actually commits, but the inclination to it.

—². Hence it follows, that man is not born in evils themselves, but only in the inclination to evils ; yet with a greater or less proclivity to particular ones ; and therefore, after death, no one is judged from any hereditary evil ; but from the actual ones which he has himself committed. Ill.

—². The little children who die only incline to evils, thus will them, but still do not commit them . . .

—³. The above-mentioned inclination and proclivity to evils . . . can be broken only by a new birth from the Lord . . . without which that inclination not only remains uninterrupted, but continues to grow from the successive parents, and becomes more prone to evils, and at last to every kind of them.

532. A man can perform repentance for the evils he has committed in the body, and still think and will evil ; but this is like cutting down the trunk of an evil tree, and leaving its root in the earth ; from which the same evil tree grows out, and spreads itself around. Far different is the case when the root also is plucked up ; and this is effected in a man, when he has at the same time explored the intentions of his will, and removes evils by repentance. A man explores the intentions of his will while he explores his thoughts ; for the intentions manifest themselves therein . . . If he . . . examines whether he would commit these (evils) if the fear of the law and of report did not stand in the way . . . (and then) thinks that he does not will them because they are sins, he performs true and interior repentance ; and still more if when he is in the delight of these evils, and is at the same time free to do them, he then resists and abstains. He who practises this repeatedly, perceives the delights of evils, when they return, as undelightful, and at last he condemns them to Hell. Sig.

535. They also perform repentance who do not explore themselves, but still desist from evils because they are sins . . . Gen.art.

— . An easier kind of repentance is this. When anyone is meditating on evil, and intending it, let him say to himself, I think this, and I intend this ; but, as it is a sin, I will not do it. By this means the temptation injected by Hell is broken, and its further entrance is prevented. It is wonderful that everyone can hide another who intends evil, and say, Do not do this because it is a sin ; and yet it is with difficulty he can say the same to himself. The reason is, that in the latter case the will is moved, but in the former only the thought next the hearing.

—². (On inquiry, few were found capable of doing this.) Nevertheless, all those who do good from religion avoid actual evils ; but very rarely reflect upon the interiors of the will, believing that they are not in evils because they are in goods ; nay, that goods cover evils over. But, my friend, the first of charity is to shun evils. This is taught by the Word, by the Decalogue, by baptism, by the Holy Supper, and even by reason ; and how can anyone shun evils, and put them away, unless he looks into himself ? And how can good become good unless it is interiorly purified ? . . . All pious people . . . will assent to these things . . . but few will practise them.

536^o. It is not said that (the 'goats') did evils ; but that they did not do goods ; and they who, from religion, do not do goods, do evils. Ill.

538. Confession ought to be made before the Lord God the Saviour ; and at the same time supplication for aid and power to resist evils. Gen.art.

539. The confession must be, that one sees, Knows, and acknowledges his evils.

564. He who has never performed repentance . . . at last does not know what damnable evil is . . . Gen.art. 568.

— . The evil which a man does not see, Know, and acknowledge, remains ; and that which remains, is rooted more and more, until at last it obstructs the interiors of his mind, thus causing the man to become first natural, afterwards sensual, and at last corporeal, (in all which states) he does not know any damnable evil . . .

—³. A merely natural man can see the evils and goods in others, and can also reprove them ; but . . . he does not see any evil in himself ; and if any is disclosed by another, he covers it over by means of his Rational . . . This is occasioned by the delight of evil, which envelops him as a fog does a marsh . . .

566^e. Therefore, kind reader, look into yourself, and search out one or other evil in yourself ; and, from religion, put it away ; if you do so from any other purpose or end, you put your evils away no otherwise than that they do not appear before the world.

568. Then some say . . . We, from purpose, have not done evil . . . (Then) Angels present themselves, and say . . . Every man from infancy commences life from externals, and learns to act morally . . . Nevertheless, as evils spring up from their native fountain, he harbours them in the bosom of his mind, and also cleverly covers them up by reasonings from fallacies, to such a degree, that he himself does not know that evil is evil ; and then, as the evils are veiled over . . . he no longer thinks about them, merely taking care that they do not appear before the world . . . You have said that you have lived morally . . . but I ask, have you ever explored your internal man and perceived any concupiscences of re-veing to the death, of lusting even to adultery, of defrauding even to theft, of lying even to false witness . . . Do you believe that in these things your internal man has been like your external ; for if you do, you are perhaps mistaken. . . For if these concupiscences remain in the internal man, thus in the will, and thence in the thought . . . then with you evil is above good, and good is below evil ; and therefore, however you may have spoken as from understanding, and have acted as from love, evil is within . . .

587. The evils into which man is born, are ingenerate in the will of the natural man . . .

—². As, therefore, the will itself of man is evil from birth, and as the understanding teaches what is evil and what is good . . . it follows that man is to be reformed by means of the understanding. But so long as anyone sees and acknowledges in his mind that evil is evil, and good good ; and thinks that good is to be chosen, this state is called reformation ; but when he wills to shun evil and do good, the state of regeneration commences.

588. The reason is, that, from birth, the will inclines to evils, even enormous ones ; and therefore, unless these were bridled by means of the understanding, the man . . . would rush into execrable things . . . 612.

596. The internal man is reformed by means of truths, and from these he sees what is evil and false ; and these are as yet in the external man ; and therefore there first arises a dissension . . . But this temptation or combat is not between goods and evils, but between the truths of good and the falsities of evil ; for good cannot fight from itself, but it fights by means of truths ; neither can evil fight from itself, but it fights by means of its own falsities . . .

—^e. If the internal man conquers, he commands and subjugates all the evils of the external man . . .

613². (Thus) the evils in man are removed and separated in like manner as are Heaven and Hell . . . and, as evils are removed, they turn themselves away from the Lord, and successively invert themselves ; and this takes place in the degree in which Heaven is implanted, that is, as the man is made new.

—^e. Every evil in a man has conjunction with such Spirits in Hell as are in the like evil.

614. All evil which a man has actually appropriated to himself remains ; and as the remission of sins is their removal and separation, it follows that a man is withheld from evil by the Lord . . . and that this is what is given to a man through regeneration. (From experience.)

643. See IMPUTATION. 650. 652.

652². All evil is from Hell, and thus evil and Hell are one ; and therefore when an evil man is elevated by the Lord towards Heaven, his evil draws him down ; and, because he loves evil, he follows it of his own accord.

657. Evil and faith in the one and true God cannot be together . . . for evil is contrary to God, and faith is in favour of God ; and evil is of the will and faith of the thought ; and the will inflows into the understanding and causes it to think . . . Wherefore, the good which such a man does is in itself evil. (Shown by comparisons.)

658². (Thus) all good and also all evil is of the will ;

for whatever proceeds from the love is called good, even if it is evil ; for the delight . . . produces this.

713. There are three opposites to these universals ; which are, the devil, evil, and falsity ; the devil, by whom is meant Hell, is the opposite to the Lord ; evil is the opposite to good ; and falsity is the opposite to truth. These three make one . . . and they contain, universally and singularly, all things of Hell, and also all things of the world which are contrary to Heaven and the Church. But, as they are opposites, they are altogether separate ; but still are held in connection by means of a wonderful subjection of the whole Hell under Heaven ; of evil under good ; and of falsity under truth.

763. Who cannot see, that truth receives its quality through the existence of falsity ; and in like manner good through the existence of evil . . .

—². Not that evil and falsity are from the Lord, but from man . . .

767². For every evil is in a certain form the image of his reigning love ; and the falsity therefrom presents that image as in a mirror.

778^e. He who is against the Word . . . is his own evil and his own falsity ; both as to the mind, and as to the effects of the mind from the body . . .

Ad. 952. (Four degrees of evils or unhappinesses.) Enum.

D. 154. How evils can be in man, and yet not injure him . . .

223. That everything which in the inmost and interior Heaven comes to the exterior . . . is turned into evil.

224. That all evil, even accidental, comes from Hell.

556. (The Spirits of Jupiter) will not even mention evil . . .

950. That goods are not imputed when a man is evil ; and that evils are obliterated when a man is good.

1039^e. If evils were merely taken away . . . nothing would remain of man, because there is nothing but evil in man.

[D.] 1043. That evil Spirits . . . are the cause of all evils.

1310. On hereditary and actual evil.

1644. (On those who seek solicitously for evil in others.)

1682. Thus that people is preserved from the contagions of evils . . .

1869. It follows that evil is not imputed to those who are in faith in the Lord ; for they are kept by the Lord in the faith that evil is excited by evil Spirits . . . 2944. 2945.

1944. That the permissions of evils from Spirits are represented by the remission of their endeavours.

1992. How good is turned into evil by Spirits.

1993. Thus there are three general causes . . . by which good is turned into evil . . .

1995. How the Angels feel from those things which are evil . . .

2012½. That evil is attributed to the Lord.

2175. That there are innumerable ; nay, indefinite, diversities of evils.

2292. There are so many evils in the natural mind, that it is nothing but evil. Des.

2299°. There never exists any irremediable disease or evil ; because the power of the Lord is infinite.

2325. That . . . still the Lord is not the cause of evil.

2354. They seek solicitously to find whatever evil they can ; and when they have found evil, they claim their right against it . . . For when the evil is great, there is punishment in the evil ; and therefore the Lord . . . permits the punishment of evil and falsity ; but only for the sake of its amendment . . .

2372. That whatever evil happens, even the least, comes from evil Spirits. (See EVIL SPIRIT, here.)

2425. The inclination of every man is to every genus and to every species of evil . . .

2438. That evil punishes itself.

— (The wonderful circuit and flux of determination of evil back to him who commits it.) 2776.

2443°. When there is a preponderance of evil, the evil is punished . . .

2453. That all men incline to all evil ; but, by actuality, are carried into one more than into another. 2486.

2457. Whatever actuality of evil has been acquired or contracted by a man, sometimes appears as if it could be broken off . . . but the case is otherwise . . . and the reason the man seems to grow better . . . is not because the evil has been obliterated ; but because the Lord is operating good . . . by which the evil is as it were covered over . . .

2458. It is of moral and spiritual evils that we are speaking : the evils of the body are almost like one who cannot walk, and therefore does not desire to do so, because his foot is broken . . .

2460. That there is no life in evil.

2486. That it is the actual and proper evils of a man which torment him in the other life.

2489. (Thus) man cannot do anything but evil . . .

2490. The evils of man are so tempered by goods as to represent a kind of rainbow . . .

2560. The like happened to me : when I was let go, I, also, at once rushed into evil ; so that there is nothing but evil in the nature of man . . .

2713. Why the Lord does not keep . . . man from evils . . .

2776. That evil has the penalty in it ; and, in fact, that of retaliation. 2913. 3037.

2839. As evil is being augmented and has been augmented hitherto . . . there is more need of the immediate aid of the Lord . . .

2874. For evil is cured by evil . . .

3007. That man makes actual evil.

3008. (Spirits who insisted that their evil is from the Lord.)

3021. By the evil, good is turned into evil, and truth into falsity . . .

3024½. The ideas of Spirits cannot then . . . infuse into man things which are evil, beyond those which the man has acquired.

3038. For they fear the answering evil from them . . .

— (Thus) the evil of penalty which they suppose comes from another, is from themselves . . . There is a different reaction in the Heavens ; for there, nothing of evil is inflicted on anyone, but it is turned into good.

3114. Spirits suppose that they could . . . be warded off from actual evils . . .

3115. To lead and bend evil, which continually tends to worse and worst, can be understood . . .

3547. That infants . . . in Heaven . . . are nothing but evil.

3615. What actual evil is. Actual evil is not only that which a man has acquired by means of acts, but also by means of thoughts without act . . .

3622. That the evil cannot even see what evil is, or what good is.

— e. Good cannot be seen from evil ; but from good . . . can be seen what good is and what evil is.

3663°. Nor do they do evil unless an opportunity offers . . .

3680. (These Spirits) suppose that if they detect any evil in a man, they are at liberty to destroy him . . .

3698°. Evil is reflected by the general [body of Spirits around] upon him who intends or does evil.

3708. Thus they add evils to evil . . .

3726. All the good of the Lord, inflowing through Heaven into the World of Spirits, is turned into evil ; and thus evil is that which flows from angelic ideas. It is this evil, with Spirits, through which they excite the evils with man ; and thus it returns into Heaven . . .

—^e. Therefore . . . to every evil there is as it were its own response, that is, hindrance ; and if evil should preponderate, and thus should prevail, the World of Spirits is at once so disposed, that there is equilibration and response.

3756. That evil Spirits do not know what . . . evil is.

3873. Such is the equilibrium, that evil returns upon him who intends and does evil . . .

3920. He is so reformed, that he can subsist in his least evil, or be kept there, by the Lord, and thus be affected with truth and good . . . In proportion, therefore, as he is remitted, he precipitates himself into evil ; and therefore it is only a detention from evil which is induced through vastations . . .

3939. To be nothing means to be nothing but evil ; for in itself evil is death ; and therefore is nothing relatively to life. It is evident that good and truth is everything ; and therefore evil and falsity is nothing.

4039. With the evil, the qualities of evil are there so increased, that they who had been little deceitful (here), in the other life are very deceitful . . . 4057, Ex.

4080. Man should guard against any evil going into actuality ; for as soon as there is actuality, it puts on custom and habit, and finally nature, and thus passes to posterity. 4091.

4109^e. All their evils done and thought, return to the life.

— . Experience that evil was not with me.

4113. On actual evil. I perceived that so long as evil is only in the thought, it does not so recur ; but as soon as actuality comes forth, it passes into the will . . .

4137. Everything that ever flows from the proprium of Angels, Spirits, and men is evil and falsity . . . Hence it is evident what is the source of evils and falsities ; for however the evil will to do goods, they are unable. 4162.

4206. That evil punishes itself . . . and thus evil itself must destroy itself ; such is the order ; and this is called permission . . .

4218². They said that . . . if they lived evilly, provided they had that faith, they are saved ; even if it were in the last hour of death, and they had lived evilly through their whole life.

4224. When he rushes into evil greater than what is actual with him, it punishes itself . . .

4228. If he thinks or speaks evil (he should say), It is not mine, but belongs to evil Spirits ; and therefore it is not appropriated to me. If I were to believe that it is from myself, the evil would be appropriated to me ; and thus to actual evil I should add actual evil . . .

4275. That all evil is from man ; and that evil is foreseen by the Lord, but not provided.

4285. I thought . . . about a certain evil which had happened to me. I thought how could it take place

. . . and that I should be the cause, when yet I know that I am not in the least led by myself . . .

4322. If evil were taken away (from such) perchance but little of life would remain . . .

4324. All external things are abolished in the other life ; also deeds themselves both good and evil . . .

—^e. There are some who have done evils from ignorance, and with a good end . . .

4432. That on account of order they cast the blame of evils upon the Lord.

— . Nothing is more common with Spirits than to think that . . . evil is from the Lord, because He permits it. Ex.

4471. See EVIL SPIRIT, here.

4582^e. Such great delight is there in doing evil, that although they see a gulf of Hell before them, and know that they can never emerge thence, still the delight of evil so carries them away, that they do not desist ; for the delight of doing evil is their life.

4651. That the penalty is conjoined with the evil.

—^e. This comes from the fact, that good has reward and happiness conjoined in itself ; and hence is derived the law into the opposites, that evil has the penalty in itself, and damnation conjoined with itself . . .

4752. For the cupidities of evil reject the truths of faith.

4754^e. At last he confirmed himself in evil ; and was then entirely devoted to evil, so that he could no longer do anything except evil without any conscience. 5509².

4756. Until evil begins to be diminished by means of terrors.

— . But they who have thought of the Divine, and yet have committed evils without conscience, are sent into cities where there are judges, inquisitors, and chastisers . . . and the judges and examiners there at once perceive in what evil they are. (The process described by which they are deterred from that evil.)

4759^e. The Angels can see . . . the evils and falsities in the Hells . . .

4809. They were told, that the truth of faith and the evil of life do not agree ; but this they utterly denied ; saying, that they are living, and (therefore) evil is not evil in them . . . They were told that they who are in evils of life adore malignant Spirits who make themselves Christ.

4824. For if a man lives evilly, and still believes in the Holy Word, he does evil to Heaven.

5003³. In order that he may be let into his evils, lest they should lie dormant, and afterwards break out . . .

5656. They then reveal his evils . . .

5695. All vastations take place by means of the separation of evils from goods, and by means of the separation of goods from evils ; for all the evil with a man has a communication . . .

5744^e. Nor did they abstain from thinking and willing evil ; but only from doing evil . . .

5781^e. For good always rules the evil with a man ; such is the form there . . .

[D.] 593². (The judge) searched whether anyone had done evil . . . He tolerated all things (in the devils) provided they did not do evil to anyone. (How the search for those who have done evil is carried on.)

599⁸. How evils and falsities are removed . . . from the good.

603¹. From this it was evident, that no evil can be removed unless it is first called forth, and the man does not want it ; thus, first, are such Societies removed from him. Also, that a man ought, from himself, to reject evils ; (otherwise) the evils are not removed . . . Without his co-operation nothing of evil is removed ; for wounds cannot be healed unless they are opened. All the penalties in the Hells exist solely that evils may be actually opened and known ; and they are punished until they do not want them.

603². (Thus) a man cannot be introduced into any heavenly Society, unless, from the will, he himself wills good or shuns evil.

608⁵. Spirits not good well understood their own evils ; they reasoned against them, and called themselves fools ; but they were then in the affection of being eminent by means of intelligence ; whereas, the moment they were let into the evils of their will, their understanding was insane . . .

D. Min. 4610. Principles of truth change and break the cupidities or delights of evil . . . When I was in an affection of evil, and principles of truth were inwardly insinuated, those delights began to cease ; and thereby they were also Known to be evils.

461⁸. When there is the idea of evil (in relation to a person) good is removed ; and when there is the idea of good, evil is removed . . .

462⁴. Ideas of falsity and ideas of evil can with difficulty, if ever, be broken or bent, except by means of the good of life.

462⁶. He who believes that all evil is from himself must be in charity ; and thus must know how to distinguish between good and evil. He who is not in charity supposes good to be evil, and evil to be good ; and therefore he has no faith.

468⁵. The good and truth that was with the Angels, by means of a wonderful turning, or gyre, or form, was turned into evil and falsity ; as, by degrees, it flowed down towards Hell.

472¹. How when a man resists evil and falsity only a little, he can be in a state opposite to them, and in delight and pleasantness.

4793⁶. For this Hell excites interior evils.

E. 77. That of himself he is nothing but evil . . . He is then removed from proprium, which in itself is merely evil . . . Because the evil is removed, and in proportion as evil is removed with man, the Divine flows in ; for evil is the only obstacle.

86. But evils stand in the way . . . Wherefore, in proportion as man desists from evils, the Lord flows in . . .

—². The reason 'Hell' = evils of every kind, is that all evils are thence . . . If man thinks and wills evil, it is from Hell . . . And this is the reason the man who thinks and wills evil is actually in Hell . . . Wherefore, when he thinks and wills evil, he is wholly formed and composed of evil, so that he is his own evil in form . . .

—³. This takes place when evils increase with men . . .

120². So all evils and falsities are from the Hells . . . Man is only a receptacle of them . . . If he turns himself to Hell, which is effected by means of evils of love and falsities of faith, he then receives evils and falsities from the Hells . . . It follows, that 'the devil' = all evils ; and 'Satan,' all falsities.

175. The Lord first reveals evils by means of truths, and when man acknowledges them, the Lord disperses them . . .

176. That He will chastise evils by means of the truths which are in the natural man. Sig.

—⁴. Because all evils and the falsities thence reside there, and none in the spiritual man : the latter does not receive evils and falsities ; but is closed against evils and falsities. And as all evils and falsities reside in the natural man, they must be chastised and dispersed by such things as are also there . . .

—⁵. From this illumination, man sees what . . . evil and falsity are ; and when man sees them, the Lord disperses the evils and falsities which are in the natural man by means of the truths and goods which are also there . . .

—⁶. Then the Lord chastises the evils and falsities which are in the natural man ; and this by means of the Knowledges of truth and good. But with these . . . evils and falsities cannot be chastised and dispersed . . .

193⁸. 'The evils of Samaria' (Hos. vii. 1) = the evils of the will.

—⁷. Evil casting out good. Sig.

233². (They say) that when he is thus justified, nothing of evil is imputed to him . . . They do not care about the evils of their thought and will. Enum. . . All who are in the Hells make nothing . . . of evil.

—⁴. (They say) What does it matter if I think and will evil . . .

239³. They who do not know anything about the good of charity, do not know anything about evil ; for good discloses evil ; and therefore they cannot . . . see their own evils, and thus shun and abhor them . . . They merely take care not to do evils (for external reasons).

248². It is from the perpetual will of the Lord to conjoin Himself with man that he is able to abstain from evils ; and in the proportion he abstains, the Lord opens the door and enters . . .

—³. It is given by the Lord to know the evils of thought and will ; also the truths through which they are dispersed . . .

—⁴. In short, the Lord wills that man, from himself, should abstain from evils . . . provided he believes that the capacity of so doing is . . . from the Lord . . .

—⁵. Prayers, etc., have no effect, unless man abstains from thinking and doing evils . . .

250². Man must see and acknowledge his evils, not only of works, but also the evils of the thoughts and intentions ; and must afterwards abstain from them . . .

— (They say) that all are led from evil to good by God, after they have received faith . . .

— He who is conjoined with Heaven through a life of charity, is led by the Lord to see his own evils, evils of both thought and will ; for from good man sees evils ; because evils are opposite to good ; whereas, he who believes in salvation through faith alone . . . can never be led by the Lord to . . . repent of his evils . . .

283⁷. The hiding of evil. Sig. For the evil which man has hereditarily, and afterwards from proprium, is hidden, that is, removed so as not to appear, by means of spiritual truths . . .

328⁵. So that evils can no longer rise up from Hell with those who acknowledge the Lord . . . in faith and life . . .

340¹⁵. The removal of all evils and falsities. Sig.

— 'The evil languors of Egypt' (Deut.vii.15)= falsities originating from evils in the natural man.

— The dissipation of the evils and falsities which are against the truths and goods of the Church. Sig. And the continual avoiding of them. Sig.

349². The reason evil and falsity, or the will and love of evil and the understanding and faith of falsity, are with man, is also from influx ; for man is kept in the choice of receiving . . . evil and falsity from Hell . . .

—³. Those who are in Hell . . . turn good into evil, and truth into falsity ; and this because, through a life of evil, they have inverted their interior recipient forms . . .

356³. That no one can fight against evils and falsities, and dissipate them, without doctrine from the Word. Ex.

— If truths cannot be seen, neither can evils and falsities be seen . . . And yet all combat against evils and falsities is from truths . . . Man is reformed through the dissipation of evils and the falsities thence through truths applied to life.

— 'A bow'=the doctrine of charity and of faith thence, from which combat is waged against evils and falsities, and they are dissipated.

359. The removal of evils and of the falsities thence at the end of life and afterwards to eternity, Sig.

—². 'The world'=all the evils and falsities which are from Hell.

366. Therefore, when the love is evil or the principle false, truths are infected by the evil of the love or the falsity of the principle, and are thus extinguished. Sig.

—².
—^e. That evils will extinguish goods, and falsities truths. Sig.

381. The understanding of the Word none, from evils of life and the falsities thence. Sig.

— It is said evil of life and the falsity thence, because where there is evil of life there also is falsity ; for they make one in the spirit of man . . .

— Then, being in the spirit, they will nothing but evil, and speak nothing but falsity.

—². 'Pale' . . . here, = the absence and deprivation of spiritual life, which exists when in place of good of life there is evil of life ; and in place of truth of faith there is falsity of faith. Ill.

386². The extinction of good by means of falsity, and of truth by means of evil. Tr.

—². 'They shall not be ashamed in the time of evil' (Ps.xxxvii.19)=that they shall conquer when tempted by the evil.

394². Those in the Spiritual World who are interiorly evil . . .

412²⁰. When man from freedom chooses evil, he shuts the door against himself . . .

475¹³. As 'to wash'=to remove falsities and evils, it is said, 'Put away the evil of your works ; cease to do evil' (Is.i.16).

478. For not any evil and falsity can be completely wiped away from any man, Spirit, or Angel ; but only removed ; for they are withheld from their evils and falsities . . .

504. All evils whatever derive their manifestation—existentiam—from the love of self and the love of the world . . .

—¹⁵. When the Divine love descends into the Societies of the evil, it is turned into a love contrary to the Divine love, and thence into various ardours of cupidities and concupiscences, and thus into evils of every kind ; and as evils carry with them the penalties of evil, it is also turned into torments . . .

518². For the Divine truth is turned into falsity such as is the evil in those with whom it flows in . . .

520². Truth is mixed with the falsity of evil, when evils of life, which are adulteries, whoredoms, murders, hatreds of various kinds, enmities, injustices for the sake of gain, thefts and cunning and clandestine robberies, cunning, deceits, and the like, are confirmed by means of the sense of the letter ; and in like manner the falsities of religion by those who are in the love of self, and thence in the pride of their Own intelligence. Ex.

526. For good is turned into evil and the falsity thence ; whereas the truth of faith . . . is turned into falsity and the evil thence.

—¹³. 'The eye evil' (Matt.vi.23)=the understanding of falsity from evil.

543⁴. All evils which . . . are called hereditary evils, are seated in his natural and sensuous man, and not in the spiritual man . . . It follows, that the falsities (are there) also ; because all falsities are of evil ; for when a man desires and wills from evil, he thinks and speaks from falsity ; for when the evil of the will forms itself in the thought . . . it is called falsity ; and therefore falsity is the form of evil . . .

556⁸. Hence, also, all evil has with it a corresponding penalty, which is called the penalty of evil . . .

— Internal men . . . do not want the retribution of evil for evil . . . This is signified by 'evil is not to be resisted' (Matt.v.39) . . . For the Angels do not fight with the evil, still less return evil for evil ; but permit them to do it, because they are safe in the Lord; and therefore no evil from Hell can do them any harm.

[E.] 580³. Man cannot be purified from evils and the falsities thence, unless the unclean things which are in him emerge even into thought; and are there seen, acknowledged, separated, and rejected. Sig.

600⁸. All 'offence' is from evil; and not from falsity, unless the falsity is the falsity of evil.

618³. Good is adulterated when good is called evil, and when evil is called good.

632¹⁰. For the evils which are in man from birth all reside in his Natural and corporeal Sensuous; and therefore unless man suffers himself to be elevated from them by the Lord . . . he remains in his evils . . .

638¹⁷. From the appearance that all evil seems to be from God, because He . . . does not avert it; not knowing that to avert evil is contrary to order; for if it were averted, evil would grow until there was no good remaining.

644². For the evil in man prevents good from entering; and the falsity prevents truth from entering; and good effects the removal of evil; and truth the removal of falsity; for they are opposites like Heaven and Hell; and therefore the one acts against the other with a perpetual endeavour to destroy . . .

650⁶⁰. For if evils and the falsities thence were to be removed from man all at once, he would have scarcely any life . . . Sig.

653². 'Sodom' = the love of self, and thence all evil; for evils of every kind spring from the love of self. Ex.

—¹⁰. To confirm evils, and their consequent power over goods, is signified by, 'to confirm the hands of the evil' (Jer. xxiii. 14).

654. For all falsity is from evil; for falsity is the support of evil; and the evil of the will is formed in the understanding by means of ideas of thought, which ideas are called falsities.

—⁶⁵. Evils and falsities do not infest them, because they are in them; and do not know anything about truths and goods.

—⁷¹. The Sensuous is the spring of all evils and the falsities thence.

693⁴. In all evil there is anger against the Lord, and against the holy things of the Church . . .

725⁸. As falsities fight only against truths and goods, and destroy them, but not evils without falsities, the women, infants, and beasts, by which were signified evils, were not smitten; for evils can be mastered, amended, and reformed by means of truths.

730². For, from the love of the body, which is the love of self; and from the love of the world, which is the love of riches, when they are loved above all things, flow forth all the evils, and, from the evils, the falsities, which are opposite to the goods and truths which come forth from love to the Lord and from love towards the neighbour.

739⁴. The evils into which man is born reside in the natural and sensuous man, nor are they removed [except by] the influx of goods and truths from the Lord, and its reception by man.

740¹⁵. As the Lord fought against the Hells from the Divine love . . . it is said, 'They place upon Me evil for good' (Ps. cix. 5).

753. Because they receive evils from Hell. Sig.

763^e. The reason sensuous men can think, speak, and act cunningly, is that all evil resides in the Sensuous of man . . .

780⁵. That evil cannot change its nature. Sig. 'The Ethiopian' = evil in its form, because he is wholly black.

— . It is said that both are against good, namely, evil and the falsity of evil, because it is evil of the will, and the falsity of the understanding thence; evil of the will is evil from nature; and falsity of the understanding is evil through act; for the will acts through the understanding, and does evil.

790⁶. The spiritual mind is primarily opened by this, that man abstains from doing evils, because they are contrary to the Divine precepts in the Word. If man abstains from evils from any other fear, that mind is not opened. The reasons the spiritual mind is thereby opened are as follows. First: that the evils with man are first to be removed, before it is possible for him to have communication and conjunction with Heaven; for evils—which are all in the natural man—keep Heaven closed. The second reason is, that the Word is from the Lord . . . Hence it follows, that he who abstains from doing evils because they are contrary to the Divine precepts in the Word, abstains from them from the Lord. The third reason is, that in proportion as evils are removed, goods enter. Examps. This is because the Lord, and Heaven with Him, enters, in proportion as man, from the Word, abstains from doing evils; because he then abstains from them from the Lord. 798⁶. —⁷.

797². Where there is not good, there is evil. —⁸.

802⁵. All these things which man does as from himself, after evils are removed, are from God, and are good; whereas all things man does before evils have been removed . . . are not good, because they are from man.

803. iii. When man begins to think from himself . . . the first and primary thing with him must be to desist from doing evils because they are sins, against the Word, thus against God; and if he does them, he has not eternal life, but Hell; and afterwards, when he grows up and grows old [it must be] to shun them as things damned, and to abhor the thoughts about them which are attended with intention. But, in order to desist from them, and to shun and abhor them, he must supplicate the Lord for aid . . .

iv. In proportion, therefore, as the evils which are from Hell are removed, the goods from Heaven enter.

v. (Thus) to shun evils is to do goods.

—³. If evils are not removed because they are sins, all things the man thinks, speaks, wills, and does are not goods or truths before God . . . because they are . . . from man . . . Many (now) believe that they will come into Heaven if they . . . do goods ; and yet do not abhor evils because they are sins ; and therefore either do them, or believe them to be allowable ; and they who believe them to be allowable, do them when there is an opportunity. But let them know that their faith is not faith ; that their pieties are not pieties ; and that their goods are not goods . . .

—⁴. That to abstain from any other reason than the Word, does not purify the internal man, is evident from the origin of evil works . . .

825³. For, when evils are removed, he is continually under the auspices of the Lord, and in enlightenment . . .

—⁴. Very different is the case with man, when he abstains from evils, and shuns them, for the sake of the civil laws, etc. . .

837⁵. He must then learn what evils are sins, first from the Decalogue, and afterwards from the Word everywhere.

—⁶. In proportion as man shuns and abhors evils, because they are sins, and thinks about Heaven . . . he is adopted by the Lord, and conjoined with Heaven . . .

847³. For man must be either in goods or in evils . . . Sig. Hence . . . when good works are removed . . . then follow all evils in the complex. Moreover . . . when faith alone is taught, are not all evils of life permitted, in so far as the civil laws do not forbid them ?

864⁶. Everyone is led by self who does not shun evils because they are sins against the Word . . . because the evil which is in man hereditarily makes his life . . . It is quite otherwise when evils have been removed, which is effected when he shuns them because they are infernal ; then the Lord enters with truths and goods from Heaven, and leads him. The primary reason is, that every man is his own love . . . and all evil is from his love ; hence . . . man's love can be reformed no otherwise than by a spiritual shunning and abhorrence of evils . . .

867². See DOCTRINE.

887. Then in their place evils succeed ; for in proportion as goods recede, evils enter . . .

920. Thus the evil opposite to good produces falsity.

934². That works may be done from the Lord . . . two things are necessary . . . The second is, that man must live according to the precepts of the Decalogue by abstaining from those evils which are there demurred to. Enum.

935². The evils enumerated in the Decalogue contain in themselves all the evils which ever exist ; and they are therefore called 'the ten precepts.'

938². As all the evils into which man is born derive their roots from the love of commanding others, and the love of possessing the goods of others ; and as all the delights of the life which is proper to man spring from these two loves ; and as all evils are from them, hence, also, the loves and delights of evils are proper to man's life. Now, as evils are of man's life thence, it follows that man cannot at all desist from them from himself ; for this would be from his own life to desist from his own life ; and therefore it has been provided, that he can desist from them from the Lord . . . 971², Ex.

—^e. There must be a constant combat against evils, and this as of himself, (otherwise) evils are not separated.

939². See DESIST. 940².

—³. Now as evils must be removed before goods become goods, the first of the Word was the ten commandments . . .

—^e. All things of worship, are evil . . . unless the interior is purified from evils. Sig.

944^e. Into this state comes the man who shuns evils because they are sins . . . and he comes into this state in proportion as he abhors and detests evils as sins . . .

945². Man does not feel that he has been elevated from proprium, except from the fact, that he does not think evils, and that he abhors to think them.

946⁵. Hence it follows again, that when a man shuns and abhors evils, he does goods, not from himself, but from the Lord ; and hence it is, that to shun evils is to do goods . . .

949². With the Papists, evils and the falsities thence devastated the Church ; but with the Reformed, falsities and the evils thence.

—³. In proportion as evils are removed as sins, goods flow in. Examps.

951. The manifestation—manifestatio—of the evils and falsities which have devastated the Church. Sig.

952². He who supposes that he acknowledges and believes that there is a God, before he abstains from the evils enumerated in the Decalogue . . . is mistaken.

956². They who are not purified from evils . . . in their spirit, do not see the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth . . .

969². (Thus) before the Lord from Heaven can flow in with Heaven, and form man in the image of Heaven, the evils must of necessity be removed which reside heaped up in the natural mind. Now, as the primary thing is that evils must be removed, before man can be taught and led by the Lord, the reason is obvious why in eight commandments of the Decalogue there are enumerated the evil works which are not to be done, and not the good works which are to be done. Good does not come forth together with evil ; nor does it come forth until evils have been removed ; before this, there exists no way from Heaven into man . . .

971². In proportion as man desists from evils, and shuns and abhors them as sins, good flows in from the Lord. Ex. 973², Examps.

— . But man cannot (do this) of himself ; for he is in evils from birth, and thence from nature ; and evils cannot from themselves shun evils . . . and therefore it must be the Lord . . . who causes man to shun them ; but still, man ought to shun evils as of himself . . .

— . In proportion, therefore, as man shuns them, the love of truth and good enters from the Lord ; and this love causes man to shun them, and at last to abhor them as sins ; and as the love of truth and good shuns these evils, it follows that the man shuns them . . . from the Lord . . . If man shuns them only from the fear of Hell, the evils are indeed removed, but still goods do not succeed in their place, because when the fear recedes, the evils return.

[E. 971]². See BEAST.

— From the man who is being prepared for Heaven, evils are removed . . . They who do evils are driven by penalties to reject them as of themselves, (otherwise) the penalties conduce to nothing. (Thus) they who . . . await influx . . . remain in the state of their evil . . .

—³. To shun evils as sins, is to shun the infernal Societies which are in them; and man cannot shun them unless he abhors them, and thus turns away from them; and man cannot turn away from them from abhorrence, unless he loves good, and, from this love, does not will evil; for man either wills evil, or he wills good; in proportion as he wills good he does not will evil; and to will good is given by doing the precepts of the Decalogue of his religion.

—⁵. That man thinks to shun evils . . . as of himself, is the Lord's doing . . . for the sake of reciprocity . . .

979^e. Cease, therefore, to ask yourself, What are the good works I must do, or what good must I do, in order to receive eternal life; only abstain from evils as sins, and look to the Lord; and the Lord will teach and lead.

982². For in proportion as heavenly affections and loves flow in with the evil, the evils are inflamed with the heat and cupidity of doing evil, and of speaking falsity. The reason is, that all the good of Heaven is with them turned into evil, and all the truth of Heaven into falsity . . .

989². If the love of the parents is the love of adultery, it is also the love of evil for falsity, and of falsity for evil; from this origin man has all evil; and from evil he has Hell.

—^e. It is of the Divine justice that no one suffers penalties on account of the evils of his parents, but on account of his own; and therefore it is provided by the Lord, that hereditary evils do not recur after death, but one's own evils; and the man is then punished on account of those which recur.

991². On the other hand, the love of adultery, which is natural, comes forth from the love of evil and falsity, which is spiritual . . . From the marriage of evil and falsity through love, therefore, there comes forth the love of fructifying; namely, of evil through falsity, and of falsity from evil; from which love descends the love of prolificating in adulteries, in which is all the delight and pleasure.

997². The reason is, that man is born into evils of every kind; and evils stand in the way; and therefore they must be removed, before the heat which is the Divine good can flow in; and evils are removed through looking at them as sins against God; and shunning them, supplicating the Lord for aid . . .

—³. But when man is not in Divine good, but in evil, he nevertheless is in the capacity of receiving light . . .

999². From love truly conjugal there is power and protection against the Hells, because against the evils and falsities which ascend from the Hells. Ex.

1007². In a word, from all conjunction of evil and falsity in the Spiritual World there flows forth the sphere of adultery . . .

1008². The reason adulteries are less abhorred among Christians . . . is that in the Christian world at this day there is . . . the marriage of evil and falsity . . .

1014². (Thus) all who are in evils as to life, and in the falsities thence, are murderers; because they are haters of good and truth; for evil hates good, and falsity hates truth . . .

1028⁴. The contrary is the case with those who abstain from the evil of one commandment, and who shun and afterwards abhor it as a sin against God. These, as they fear God, come into communion with the Angels of Heaven, and are led by the Lord to abstain from the evils of the rest of the commandments, and to shun them, and at last to abhor them as sins; and if, perchance, they sin against them, still they perform repentance; and thus by degrees are led from them.

1119. All infernal torment or penalty exactly corresponds to the evils in which they are . . .

1141². From freedom to think and speak falsity, and to will and to do evil, is not from man, but from Hell. Ex.

1145¹⁰. An angel man is continually withdrawn from evil by the Lord, and is led to good; and a devil man is also continually withdrawn from evil by the Lord, but only from a more to a less grievous one.

—¹¹. An angel man is in freedom and in the delight of his heart when . . . he is not doing evil; but a devil man is in freedom and in the delight of his heart when he is doing good from evil, and also when he is doing evil.

1147³. I can testify that for fifteen years I have plainly perceived, that . . . all evil and falsity flowed in from infernal Societies . . . (It is) from the Lord I perceive the evils and falsities from Hell; and not only that the evils are thence, but also from whom; and I have also been permitted to speak to them, to reprehend them, and to cast them back with their evils and falsities; and then I was delivered from them . . . By this I am fully convinced, that all evil and falsity is from Hell . . .

—⁴. That all evil and falsity is from Hell, I have also been permitted to see with my eyes. There appear over the Hells as it were fires and smokes; the evils are the fires; and the falsities are the smokes; these continually exhale and rise up thence.

— . It shall also be told in a few words, how evil and falsity can flow forth from Hell, although there exists only one acting force, which is the life which is God . . . A truth from the Word was uttered in a great voice from Heaven ; it flowed down to Hell, and through it down to the bottom ; and I heard that this truth in its descent was by degrees turned into falsity ; and at last into such falsity, that it was exactly opposite to the truth ; and it was then in the lowest Hell . . .

1148⁴. The state of man from creation, is that he knows that evil is from Hell, and that good is from the Lord, and that, as from himself, he perceives them in himself ; and, when he perceives them, that he rejects evil to Hell . . . When he does this, he does not appropriate evil to himself . . .

— See PRAY—orare.

1151². From infernal freedom, man has the will of evil, the love of evil, and the life of evil.

—³. In proportion as man compels himself by resisting evils, the infernal Societies with which he acts as one are removed from him ; and he is introduced by the Lord into heavenly Societies, with which he acts as one. And, on the other hand, if man does not compel himself to resist evils, he remains in them.

—⁶. (But) by the compulsion which is effected by means of penalties, and the subsequent fear of them, evil does not recede.

1152². It is granted to compel one's self from evil ; but not to good which is really good. Ex.

—³. But when man compels himself from evils, he purifies his internal man . . . For in proportion as man compels himself from evil, he comes into heavenly freedom . . . It appears as if compelling one's self from evil and compelling one's self to good cohere together ; but they do not. I know from experience, that many have compelled themselves to goods, but not from evils, and when they were examined, it was found that evils inhered in their goods from within . . .

1153⁵. It is a fifth law of the Divine Providence, that from sense and perception in himself, man does not know how . . . evil and falsity flows in from Hell ; and that he shall not see how the Divine Providence operates in favour of good against evil. Ex.

1153⁸. For these (internal) means enter by an internal way, and cast out the evils and falsities which reside within ; whereas external means enter by an external way, and do not cast out the evils and falsities, but shut them in. Ex.

—⁵. The freedom of man's spirit never has violence done to it even for the sake of the end, that evil, whether hereditary or actual, may be removed . . . These evils are removed by the Lord by means of the affection of truth inspired into the man . . . and by means of the affection of good . . . In proportion as man is in these affections, he compels himself to resist evils and falsities. Miracles and visions close this way of reformation, because they persuade and compel to believe . . . and thus, when freedom is taken away, there is no opportunity to remove evils from within ; for nothing of evil is removed except from within. Thus the evils remain shut in . . .

1159⁷. From this it may be seen why it is from a law of order . . . that man is not let into truths of faith and goods of love, except in proportion as he can be kept from evils and kept in goods even to the end of life ; and that it is better for a man to be constantly evil, than that he should be good and afterwards evil ; for thus he becomes profane.

1162². It is an eighth law of the Divine Providence, that the Lord continually withdraws man from evils, in proportion as man from freedom wants to be withdrawn : that in proportion as he can be withdrawn from evils, he is led by the Lord to good, thus to Heaven ; and that in proportion as a man cannot be withdrawn from evils, he cannot be led by the Lord to good, thus to Heaven ; for in proportion as man is withdrawn from evils, he does good from the Lord, which good is good in itself ; whereas in proportion as he is not withdrawn from evils, he does good from himself, which good has evil in it. Ex.

1164². Evils are removed from man either by means of penalties, by means of temptations and consequent abhorrences, or by means of the affections of good and truth. By means of penalties, evils are removed with those who are not reformed ; by means of temptations and consequent abhorrences, with those who are to be reformed ; and by means of affections of truth and good, with the regenerate . . . When an unreformed or evil man undergoes penalties—which takes place in Hell—he is kept in them until it is perceived that from himself he does not will them ; he is not delivered before ; thus he is compelled, from himself, to remove evils. If he is not punished to this intention and will, he remains in his evil ; but still the evil is not extirpated, because he had not compelled himself ; it remains within, and recurs when the fear ceases. By means of temptations, which are not penalties but combats, evils are removed with those who are to be reformed ; these are not compelled to resist evils, but they compel themselves, and implore the Lord, and are thus delivered from the evils which they have resisted. These afterwards desist from them, not through any fear of penalty, but through abhorrence of evil ; the abhorrence of evil is finally with them the resistance to it. With the regenerate, however, there are no temptations or combats, but there are affections of truth and good, which from afar keep away evils from them ; for they are completely separated from Hell—whence evils come—and are conjoined with the Lord. To be separated and removed from evils is nothing else than to be separated and removed from the infernal Societies. Whenever he wills to do so, the Lord can separate and remove all from the infernal Societies, thus from evils, and can also transmit them into the heavenly Societies, thus into goods, but this lasts only a few hours, and thereafter the evils recur . . . In the whole Spiritual World there does not exist a case of anyone having been removed from evils, except through combat or resistance as of himself . . .

1165. All who come into the Spiritual World from the earth are Known as to their quality from the circumstance, whether they can resist evils as of themselves, or whether they cannot do so ; they who can, are saved ; but they who cannot, are not saved. The reason is, that man cannot resist evils from himself, but from the Lord ; for it is the Lord who resists the evils with man, and who causes the man to feel and perceive as if he did it from himself. They, therefore, who in the world have acknowledged the Lord, and also that all good and truth is from Him . . . and thus that the Lord has power against evils, and not themselves, resist evils as of themselves; whereas they who in the world have not acknowledged these things, cannot resist evils as of themselves; for they are in evils, and from love in the delight of them, and to resist from the delight of love is to do so from self, from their own nature, and from their own life. Trial was made whether they were able to do it when the penalties of Hell were set forth to them; nay, when they were seen and felt; but all in vain; they hardened their minds, saying, Let it be so, and let it happen, provided I am in the delights and joys of my heart so long as I am here; present things I know; future ones I do not think of; there is no more evil in me than in many many others. These, after the time has passed, are cast into Hell, where they are compelled by means of penalties not to do evils; but penalties do not take away the will, the intention, and the consequent thought of evil; they only take away the acts.

[E.] 1166². The reason the Lord alone resists the evils with man, and does not do so through any Angels of Heaven, is that to resist the evils with man is of the Divine omnipotence, of the Divine omniscience, and of the Divine Providence. It is of the Divine omnipotence, because to resist one evil is to resist many, and it is also to resist the Hells; for every evil is conjoined with innumerable evils; they cohere together as the Hells do; for as evils make one so do the Hells; and as the Hells do, so do evils; and to resist the Hells conjoined together thus, is what no one can do except the Lord. It is of the Divine omniscience, because the Lord alone knows the quality of man, and what his evils are, and in what connection they are with all other evils; thus in what order they are to be removed, in order that the man may be healed from within . . . From this it is evident, that no Angel can resist the evils with man, but the Lord alone.

1167. The law of the Divine Providence, that in proportion as he can be withdrawn from evils, a man does good from the Lord which in itself is good; but in proportion as he cannot be withdrawn from evils, he does good from himself, which has evil in it, may be illustrated by the precepts of the Decalogue. Examp.

1168². In proportion as a man is removed from evils, he is removed from Hell, because evils and Hell are one; and in proportion as he is removed from these, he enters into goods, and is conjoined with Heaven; for goods and Heaven are one.

1174³. It is enough for man to learn truths from the Word; and, through truths, what goods are; and, from truths and goods, what evils and falsities are; to the intent that he may be affected with truths and goods, and not be affected with falsities and evils. He is indeed able to know evils and falsities before he knows goods and truths; but he cannot see them and perceive them before . . . J.(Post.)344.

D. Love xvii^e. If by combat against evils as sins, a man acquires something spiritual in the world, although it is very little, he is saved . . . Sig.

D. Wis.xi.6. That uses become uses of charity only with him who fights against the evils which are from Hell. Ex.7.

5a³. Fight against the evils which are from Hell, and you will will and do, not from yourself but from the Lord; for when evils are removed, the Lord does all things.

Ath. 192. But the evil with man cannot be expelled, but is removed; because he is not life in itself . . . and therefore man dies as to the body; but the Lord, from the Divine in Himself, expelled the evil from the mother, and he therefore rose with the whole body.

194. For the evils with man are from no other source than Hell, or from influx thence through evil Spirits; on the removal of whom, man is as it were devoid of evils . . .

202. It is otherwise with men; because their life or soul from the father is an affection which is evil; and therefore evil is removed from them by the Lord, and is not separated.

J. (Post.) 230. They who have led a good life, who are they who have shunned evils because they are sins, and have done their business rightly and sincerely, are not let (after death) into the evils of their will; but are kept in good by the Lord . . . But verily they who have lived evilly are let into the evils of their will, and then they cannot think otherwise than in agreement with these evils. Des.

241. Thus neither could they distinguish good from evil, nor, from judgment, truth from falsity . . .

276. The devil or Hell dwells in the evils with man . . . But the man who excuses his evils, and lives in them, retains with himself the devil with Hell . . . And then the devil says to them, What need is there to know evils in order to fight against them, since the Lord does this . . . What need is there to know evils, since man from himself cannot fight against them . . .

342. That to do goods and not to fight against evils, is to do goods from self and not from the Lord. Ex.

352⁹. No one is received into (the New Church), thus into Heaven henceforth, except him who acknowledges God . . . thus the Lord; and unless, through some combat, he removes and shuns evils as sins against the Divine laws.

C. 2. That in proportion as anyone does not look to the Lord, and shun evils because they are sins, he remains in them.

— Man is born into evils of every kind; his will, which is his proprium, is nothing but evil . . .

— All evils are born delightful; because man is born into the love of self . . . and they are not mastered unless they are regarded as sweet poisons which kill . . .

14. That not to will to do evil to the neighbour is of charity.

18. It is believed by many that good destroys evil; and that so there are no evils with man, or that they are not regarded; but it does not destroy evil if a man does not think about the evils in himself, and perform repentance from them.

20. That a man can do good which he believes to be of charity, and still not shun evil, and yet all evil is against charity.

— There are two distinct things: to shun evils as sins, and to do Christian good; he who shuns evils as sins does Christian goods; but they who do good and do not shun evils as sins, do not do any Christian good; for evil is contrary to charity, and therefore it must first be abolished. . . . No one can do good and at the same time will evil, or will good and also evil.

21. All good which is in itself good proceeds from the interior will; from this will evil must be removed through repentance; there, too, resides the evil into which man is born; and therefore, unless he performs repentance, evil remains in the interior will.

22. Exterior good does not remove the evil of concupiscence, that is, the root of evil.

23. That as man does not will to do evil to the neighbour, so he wills to do good to him; and not the converse.

— Good, before man shuns evils as sins, is civil and moral good; but as man shuns evils as sins, good becomes both civil and moral, and also spiritual; and not before.

24. Therefore, when man thinks from concupiscence and its delight, he either confirms evil and believes that it is allowable, and is thus in evil; or he does not think about any evil in himself. . . .

27. That evil is first to be removed because it is contrary to charity—which is done through repentance—before the good which he does is the good of charity.

— All are initiated into the Church through knowing evil and not doing it because it is against God.

31. So in a thousand other things; when a man does not do evil, he does good.

33. That such as is the Knowledge and the consequent removal of evil through repentance, such is the good which is of charity.

199. That the first of charity is to . . . shun evils as sins.

202. That no one can have charity from the Lord unless he shuns evils as sins.

203. That man ought to shun evils as sins as of himself, but still from the Lord.

204. That in proportion as anyone does not shun evils as sins, he remains in them.

—^e. Nor are evils removed by merely shunning them; for he thus looks to himself, and thereby confirms the origin of evil, which was that man turned back from the Lord and turned to self.

208. Therefore, before the Lord can flow in with good, evil must be removed: it is dangerous to flow in before; for it is turned into evil and augments it.

Conv. 5. He who in his own mind makes any evil allowable, continually does it. And then the endeavour to do it, when possible, is seated not only in the mind, but also in the body.

De Conj. 84. They who confirm themselves in the idea that all evils are remitted by means of the Holy Supper. . . . have adultery with a maternal aunt.

Can. God vi. 10. Evils or evil uses did not come forth until after the creation.

viii. 11. Opposites, which are evils, are not taken away because God is omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent; because evils are outside the subjects and outside created things, and do not penetrate to the Divine things which are within.

12. Of the Divine Providence. . . . evils are more and more removed and cast out from interiors to the outside, and are thus removed and separated, lest they should do any harm to internal things which are Divine.

Redemp. ii. The end of the Church is at hand when the power of evil through falsities begins to prevail over the power of good through truths, in the natural world. . . . 4 7. 8. 10. 13.

iii. 1. In proportion as evil grows in the Church, the man of the Church becomes external.

Inv. 8. There are innumerable evils within man; nay, in each one there are innumerable concupiscences. . . .

Coro. 21. viii. With those who are being regenerated, evils are first separated from goods; and this is like a Judgment. . . .

35³. All evil is conceived from the devil as a father, and is born from an atheistical faith as a mother.

Evil (Man). Malus.

See many passages under EVIL.

A. 2041⁴. With the evil, corporeal and worldly things can be lulled, and then they can be elevated into a certain heavenly [state].

2258⁵. Unless the evil were separated from the good, the evil would inflict injury on the good. . . .

2321. The Holy itself proceeding from the Divine Human is what separates the evil from the good; for the evil so fear and abhor the Holy of the Lord, that they cannot come near it, but flee far away. . . . into their Hells.

2322. 'Sodom' = the evil, especially those who are within the Church. . . .

2324. 'Lot sitting in the gate of Sodom' = those who are in the good of charity. . . . who are among the evil, but separated from them. . . . not as to civil society, but as to spiritual life.

2401². The evil are as far from receiving faith. . . . as Hell is from Heaven. . . . Ex.

2438. That before the Judgment upon the evil, they who are in the affection of truth are to be saved. Sig. and Ex.

2430^e. Children can be loved by the evil (but not a married partner).

3484. There is only one life, which is that of the Lord, and which flows in and causes. . . . both the good and the evil to live.

3539⁶. This capacity of being able to understand what good and truth are. . . . exists with the evil as well as the good; nay, with the evil it is sometimes more acute; but with this difference, that with the evil there is not any affection of truth for the sake of life. . . .

3688⁴. To render aid to the evil is to do evil to many. . . . 4992^e.

3834². The evil can know (these truths); nay, can be in the persuasion that it is so . . .

3894. The evil . . . cannot be in the company of the good (there); but when they approach them seem to themselves not to be able to breathe . . .

4111². Hence it is that the evil cannot stay in the Societies of the good, nor the good in the Societies of the evil.

4167². Through the outermost plane, which appears like conscience, and yet is not, the Lord rules . . . the evil . . .

4211². The evil; nay, the worst, say (that they believe in a Supreme Being).

4281². Hence it was, that the evil as well as the good . . . could represent (Divine things).

4320. That the evil also receive the life which is from the Lord. Ex.

4352². Not knowing that (confidence and trust) are possible also with the evil.

4417. The life of the evil does indeed appear to them as life; but it is the life which is called spiritual death. Ex.

4741². (To confirm any dogma that is once received) is what the evil can do more skilfully than the good.

4882². Every Spirit and Angel sees . . . the evil on the left; and this to whatever quarter he turns . . .

5008². Good is done to (the evil) if they are punished according to the laws, because by punishments they are amended . . . But they who are in (merely) natural truth . . . benefit everyone who excites compassion . . . and for the most part, the evil more than the good . . .

5028². The spiritual man thinks that good is not to be done to . . . the evil.

5028². The spiritual man thinks . . . that to do good to an evil (person) is to do evil to the neighbour . . .

5071². The fiery vitality with the evil is such that . . .

5132². Mercy sometimes appears with the evil who are in no charity . . . but it is the mercy of friendship for the sake of self . . .

5555. They who had benefited the evil equally with the upright . . . 6405².

5664a². These truths have no life; as is evident from the fact, that an evil man, even the worst, is equally well able to know the truths of faith . . .

6481. They saw the evil exalted to honours . . . Wherefore such things are given to the evil . . . Moreover, the Lord provides His ends through the evil equally as through the good; for the Lord moves the evil to do good to the neighbour . . . through their own loves; for the evil want to be in eminence . . . and therefore want to seem upright and zealous; and from this desire . . . are more strongly excited to do such things than the upright. The evil are also permitted to believe that all things are of their own prudence . . . and successes are therefore given to them, which . . . excite them still more.

6564. The Lord continually flows in with good and truth . . . but with the evil this influx . . . is resisted and rejected, or is perverted or suffocated . . .

—^e. From the evil (there), are taken away all their intuitions of what is honest and good for the sake of gain . . .

6600^e. With the evil there is influx from Hell.

6655^e. They know that good and truth . . . have a secret power of attracting minds, even those of the evil.

6681. The evil (there) forming plans. Sig.

7273². The order of truth Divine for the evil who are being damned . . . is that of truth Divine separated from Divine good, because they have not received Divine good . . .

7280. Fear is a common bond, with both those who are upright and with those who are evil. Ex.

—². When the evil come into the other life, and when external bonds are taken away . . . they are like wild beasts . . .

7295². When the evil first come there, they have good Spirits and Angels adjoined to them, as when they lived in the body; for even evil men have Angels with them . . . but the Angels and good Spirits recede from them by degrees; and as they recede they become less and less rational. Sig.

7342. As the non-attention to Divine things with the evil is from the resistance of the will, this also is signified.

7356. Among the more delightful things with the evil is to scatter falsities, to confirm them, to ridicule truths, and especially to seduce others.

7435^e. There is no enlightenment . . . with the evil who are represented by Pharaoh and the Egyptians, but elevation to attention.

7463. Sometimes truth from the Divine appears to the evil, and this by means of the presence of an Angel near them . . . but it affects their exteriors only . . .

7524. There would be (sores) on every evil man, unless, so long as he is in the world, he was in a state of receiving the good and truth of faith . . .

7556. It (here) treats of the good and truth which are reserved by the Lord even with the evil . . .

7560². There is indeed a communication of the evil, even those who are in Hell, with Heaven. Ex.

—^e. The good and truth stored up and reserved in the interiors with the evil effects nothing, except to enable them to reason, and to think and speak from the Sensuous, and thus to confirm falsity, and defend evil.

7633. That the evil may Know that they are in evil; and that the good may be enlightened concerning the state of those who live evilly within the Church. Sig. 7795.

7770. That the scientifics of truth and good taken from the evil who had been of the Church are to be bestowed on the good who are thence. Sig. 7969.

7772. The evil who are in Hell have no respect for the Divine except that of fear.

7786. That the nature of the difference between those who are in evil and those who are in good is known. Sig.

7795². That before they are . . . sent into Hell the evil undergo so many states, is entirely unknown . . .

8813⁶. The penetration of truth Divine with the evil. Sig.

8815². Truth Divine through the Heavens is such that it perfects the good, but destroys the evil . . . The reason it destroys the evil, is that they do not receive the Divine good, which is therein.

8875³. When the Lord protects the good against the evil, it appears like hostility and anger. Ill.

9141². The love of evil, that is, the love of self and the love of the world, constitute the fire of life with an evil man and with a Spirit of Hell; and the love of falsity and the faith of falsity constitute the lumen of life with them. Sig.

9242. The confidence which in an eminent sense is called faith, appears like spiritual confidence even with the evil when they are in dangers and sickness . . .

9298². Truths do indeed exist with the evil . . . but they are not commingled with the falsities from evil with them so long as they are only in the memory, and serve as means to evil; for so long they are devoid of life . . .

9399³. All in the other life, both the evil and the good, can understand what is true and false, and what is good and evil; but the evil, although they understand truth and good, still do not want to understand it . . . and therefore, when they are left to themselves, they relapse into the falsities of their evil, and abhor the truth and good which they had understood. The case is the same with such in the world . . .

9492. Termination from good lest they should be approached and injured by the evil. Sig.

10409⁴. This is the reason why machinations and cunning succeed with the evil . . . 10777.

10810. When they came, the good were separated from the evil . . . The evil to the left . . . who were ordered according to the quality of the evil with them . . . and the evil were cast into Hell.

—². They said that the lower parts of that earth are inhabited by both the good and the evil, but they are carefully separated, in order that the evil may be ruled by the Lord by means of the good.

—^e. In that descent the good were in like manner separated from the evil . . . for by various arts and cunning, the evil had introduced themselves into the abodes of the good, and had infested them; which was the reason of this visitation.

H. 55^e. The evil who are outside of Heaven are tormented at His presence.

131^e. When looked at by the Angels, a man as to his spirit . . . if evil appears as a monster, ugly according to his evil.

295^e. Thus an evil man is conjoined with Hell.

427. After death . . . the evil are at once bound to the infernal Society in which they had been in the world as to their reigning love. . . Yet although thus distinct, still, in the World of Spirits they come together . . . when they desire . . .

508^e. (The nature acquired by the evil cannot be amended after death by means of the understanding of truth.)

534. The evil do not see the stone at the two ways, and fall over it . . .

—². (Thus) the evil equally with the good lead the same life in externals . . .

N. 37. With the evil, the internal is in the world and its light, and the external is also in the same; and therefore they see nothing from the light of Heaven, but only from the light of the world . . . Hence it is that the things of Heaven are in thick darkness with them, and the things of the world are in light. (Thus) . . . the evil have no internal man, but only an external one.

Sr³. The Lord rules the world by means of the evil, leading them by means of their Own loves . . . Refs.

—^e. The evil equally with the good can . . . perform uses, because they regard honours and gains as rewards . . . Refs.

C. J. 28. The Lord does not inflict destruction on anyone; but only protects His own, and withdraws them from communication with the evil; and when they are withdrawn, the evil come into their concupiscences, and, from them, rush into wickednesses of every kind.

W. 240². In these two faculties is the Lord with every man, both good and evil . . . Hence it is that every man, both good and evil, lives to eternity. P.96³. —7.

244. An evil man, although at heart he denies the Divine things of the Church, can still understand them, and can also speak and preach them, and confirm them learnedly in writing; but when he is left to himself, he thinks from his infernal love against them, and denies them.

266. An evil man, equally as a good one, enjoys these two faculties. Gen.art.

267. An evil man abuses these faculties to confirm evils and falsities. Gen.art.

P. 86. As an evil man . . . has rationality and freedom, an evil man . . . can understand truth and do good, but he cannot do so from freedom according to reason . . . because an evil man is in the delight of the love of evil . . . and therefore the truth which an evil man understands, and the good which he does, are not appropriated to him . . . 89^e.

96⁵. Hence it is that an evil man . . . can understand; and hence he has, in potency, the will of good and the understanding of truth.

[P.] 111. See CONCURSANCE.

160. That the life of the evil is also from the same origin . . .

217. It follows, that dignities and riches . . . with the evil are curses.

—³. The reason the evil . . . are exalted to honours and advanced to wealth, is that the evil equally with the good, do uses ; but the evil, for the sake of the honours and gains for their own person. . . The evil regard the honours and gains for the person as the principal causes, and those of the business as the instrumental causes. 250³.

227². It is this good by means of which every man, even an evil one, is led by the Lord.

249^e. By these means the Lord leads the evil ; but only from doing those things ; not from thinking and willing them.

250³. The evil can perform uses . . . from a stronger fire (than the good), because they regard themselves in the uses . . . 252².

285. The Divine Providence is equally with the evil as with the good. Gen.art. 287.

T. 366². The life of God in all fullness is . . . (also) with evil and impious men . . . The difference is, that the evil block up the way and close the door to prevent the Lord from entering into the lower things of their mind . . . The evil block up this influx by means of various concupiscences of the flesh and spiritual defilements . . . but still the Lord resides in their highest things with all His Divine essence, and gives them the faculty of willing good and of understanding truth . . .

382. There is no faith with the evil. Gen.art.

— . All those are evil who deny the creation of the world by God, and thus deny God . . . The reason that all such are evil, is that all good . . . is from God . . . These are theoretically evil ; whereas, those are practically evil who make nothing of the Divine precepts . . .

401². With the evil, the internal is in Hell and its light . . . and their external can be in a like light to that in which the good are . . . Hence it is that the evil can speak and teach about faith, charity, and God ; but not from faith, charity, and God, as the good can.

504¹³. The Divine influx . . . with the evil, with whom there is no spiritual mind, opens the interiors of their natural mind, where evils and falsities reside, whence they then have an aversion for all the good of Heaven, and hatred against truths, and concupiscence for every crime; hence their separation from the good, and speedy damnation.

654⁴⁰. Evil in place of good . . . is signified by, 'I will sell the land into the hand of the evil' (Ezek. xxx. 12).

677². It is from this fact that the evil, when no longer in externals, have no terror for evils and falsities; and not even for Hell.

—³. With the evil, there is disturbance of mind and change of state from imminent and visible danger to the life of the body . . . because the evil regard the life of the body as the principal and final one . . .

768²⁴. The falsity of those who are in evils, is signified by 'the seed of the evil' (Is. i. 4).

832³. Hence it is evident what is the state of those who are evil, and fear neither God nor man; namely, that interiorly with themselves they think evils and falsities, but exteriorly they think and thence speak truths, and also do goods . . .

866⁶. All the evil have the animus and cupidity, and consequently the will, to destroy the truths of Heaven and the Church by means of falsities; the reason is, that they are conjoined with Hell . . .

Life 44. The reason he has no faith, is that he is in evil of life; and evil of life and the truth of faith can never act as one; the evil of life destroys the truth of faith; because the evil of life is of the will . . . and the will leads the understanding . . .

F. 30^e. For the evil of life interiorly hates truths.

W. 68. All the good of life is from the action of God; and all the evil of life is from the reaction of man . . .

D. 4792. Saying, that all things with them are holy from the Lord, and so are the evils of life, by their not being attended to.

E. 388. 'The wild beasts of the earth' = evils of life, which are the cupidities and the falsities thence originating from the love of self and the world . . . (and which) lay waste the Church with man. Ex.

A. 50. So long as man is not regenerate . . . there are evil Spirits with him, who so dominate over him, that the Angels . . . can scarcely do anything . . .

59. Therefore evil Spirits are long left with man, in order to excite his cupidities . . .

—¹². In the time of combat, the evil Spirits, who intensely hate everything that is good and true . . . leave him no meat, except what is compared to 'the green herb' . . . If the Lord did not protect man every instant, he would at once perish; for such deadly hatred reigns in the World of Spirits against the things of love and faith in the Lord, that it can never be described. That the case is so I can assert for certain; because, for some years . . . I have been in the other life with Spirits, and have been encompassed by evil, nay, the worst Spirits; sometimes by thousands of them; who were permitted to pour forth their poison in every way they could; yet they could not hurt a single hair of my head, so protected was I by the Lord . . .

[A.] 63°. At the end of the 'sixth day,' the evil Spirits recede . . .

139. Those were said 'to dwell alone,' who were led by the Lord as celestial men, because evils, or evil Spirits, no longer infested them. III.

150. Evil Spirits, who love nothing but proprium, and who obstinately insist that they live from themselves, were convinced by living experiences, and confessed that they do not live from themselves.

175. When evil Spirits smell this aromatic odour, they cannot approach. 1518.

227. When the evil Spirits begin to have the dominion, the Angels are in labour to avert evils and falsities, wherefore there exists a combat.

233°. Man does not do evil, but the evil Spirits who are with him; nor do the evil Spirits, but the evil itself which they have appropriated.

263. When the Sensuous averts itself . . . the evil Spirits begin to fight strongly . . . Sig.

357. This is manifestly perceived in the World of evil Spirits; for there is a general anger against the Lord . . .

391. That they who are in falsity and evil fear all, may be best known from evil Spirits . . .

454. Nothing is a source of more happiness to the Angels than . . . to serve men, and rule the evil Spirits who are with them so as to prevent them from passing beyond the bounds.

592. It is not the man, but it is the evil Spirits who excite and lead him.

—°. In like manner the evil Spirits who are in the World of evil Spirits, who make their highest delight to consist in hurting and punishing others . . .

641°. When evil Spirits flow in, there is as it were an inundation; into the left part of the brain, with phantasies and direful persuasions; into the right part with cupidities . . .

653. When man is being reformed, which is effected by means of combats and temptations, such evil Spirits are associated with him as excite nothing but his scientifics and rational things; and the Spirits who excite cupidities are entirely warded off from him. For there are two kinds of evil Spirits; namely, those who act into man's reasonings, and those who act into his cupidities. The evil Spirits who excite man's reasonings bring out all his falsities, and endeavour to persuade him that falsities are truths; nay, they even turn truths into falsities: with these, man, while in combat, ought to fight . . .

660. When the way for remains is closed up, man . . . is completely possessed by evil Spirits, who study and desire nothing else than to extinguish man . . . The influx of phantasies and cupidities from evil Spirits is not unlike some flood . . .

681. From the Lord come each and all things which . . . even evil Spirits think, speak, and do. The reason they speak and do evils, is that they so receive and pervert all the goods and truths which are the Lord's.

—°. The evil Spirits in the World of Spirits do not want to believe that the case is so . . .

697. With every man there are at least two evil Spirits . . . Through the evil Spirits man has communication with Hell . . . Without communication with both Heaven and Hell, man could not possibly live a moment. Thus every man is in some Society of the infernals . . . but their torment is not communicated to him; because he is in preparation for eternal life . . . Thus the man who does not live in the good of charity . . . is one of the infernals . . . 2354.

741. Temptations are nothing else than combats of the evil Spirits with the Angels who are with man; the evil Spirits excite all the depraved deeds of the man, and even the thoughts which he has had from infancy, thus both the evils and falsities, and condemn him; than which nothing is more delightful to them; the very delight of their life consists therein; but the Lord, by means of the Angels, protects the man; and prevents the evil Spirits and Genii from roving about and inundating beyond the limits, and further than the man can endure. 751.

751°. When a man is being tempted as to intellectual things, the evil Spirits excite only his evil deeds which he has perpetrated . . . and accuse and condemn him; and also in fact his good deeds . . . but these they pervert in a thousand ways; at the same time they also excite his thoughts . . . Sig. But this temptation is light; and is perceived only by the recalling of such things into the memory, and a certain anxiety thence . . .

756°. Through evil Spirits, man is conjoined with Hell.

787. A temptation which is an inundation of the falsities which evil Spirits then excite with man.

790. Desolations and temptations are nothing but inundations of the falsities which are excited by evil Spirits. 842.

842°. Evil Spirits in the World of Spirits sometimes consociate themselves into cohorts, and thus excite disturbances; (but are dispersed by other cohorts of Spirits called the east wind).

904. There are with every man at least two evil Spirits . . . (who) excite his evils.

—°. With those who suffer themselves to be led away by evil Spirits, the Lord speaks as if He were absent . . .

—°. That which is evil and false, man has through evil Spirits from Hell.

905. The influx of Hell through evil Spirits is forcible, and is attended with a violent attempt to domineer; for they breathe nothing but the subjugation of man, so that he shall be nothing, and they everything; and when they are everything, the man is as one of them, and scarcely that, for he is as nobody in their eyes; and therefore when the Lord is delivering man from their dominion and yoke, a combat arises . . . The Lord says, 'My yoke is easy . . .' but it is the very opposite with evil Spirits, who . . . if they could, would torment man every moment . . .

968°. While they live in the body, men have with them at least two Spirits from Hell, besides two Angels from Heaven, who govern the infernal Spirits with the evil; but with the good they are subjugated, and are compelled to serve.

986². With every man there are at least . . . two evil Spirits, through whom he has communication with Hell . . . When the Angels have the dominion . . . the evil Spirits . . . dare not attempt anything against good and truth, because they are then in bonds; and when they attempt to do anything evil, or to speak falsity, that is, to excite them, they are at once in a certain infernal fear and terror: it is this fear and dread which is perceived in the man for those things which are contrary to conscience.

—³. The Spirits with man do not so much fear to do evils, as to speak falsities; for man is born again and receives conscience by means of the truths of faith; and therefore the Spirits are not allowed to excite falsities. With every one of them there is nothing but evil, so that they are in evil; their very nature and thence all their endeavour is evil; and as they are in evil, and their proper life consists in evil, they are excused when they do evil while they are in any use; but to speak falsity is not permitted; and the reason is, that they may learn what is true, and thus, so far as possible, may be amended, in order to be of service for some vile use.

1088². The former are like the evil Spirits . . . who are with man; the evil Spirits never excite anything but the evils and falsities of man, and condemn him . . . (Thus) with those who are in no charity, evil Spirits have the dominion, through whom the man communicates with Hell.

1276. To the left of the Lord are evil Spirits.

1308. A man who is not such, is under the dominion of infernal Spirits.

1320. The execution of Judgment is effected by Spirits, in fact, by evil ones.

1322. It is the same with evil Spirits in the other life, who, like the good, are distinguished into Societies; but are kept conjoined together by being bound by the like phantasies and cupidities, so that they act as one in persecuting truths and goods; thus there is a certain common tie by which they are kept together; but the moment this common tie is loosed, the one rushes at the other, and their delight then consists in the tormenting of their companions.

1397. As perceptions are so exquisite, evil Spirits cannot approach a sphere or a Society where there are good Spirits who are in mutual love; when they merely approach, they begin to be tortured . . .

1398. One Angel can drive away myriads of evil Spirits; for they cannot endure the sphere of mutual love.

1444. Evil is what infernal Spirits excite.

1527. When the Lord pleases . . . evil Spirits appear like little globes of coal fire.

1528. The life of cupidities and of the pleasures thence with evil Spirits sometimes appears like a coal fire; into such a fieriness is the life of the Lord's love and mercy turned which flows in with them; their life of phantasies appears like the lumen thence, which is dim and does not extend far. But on the approach of the life of mutual love, that fieriness is extinguished, and is turned into cold, and this dim lumen is turned into darkness; for evil Spirits pass the time in darkness; and . . . some of them even love darkness, and hate light.

1573⁶. Evil Spirits cannot approach an Angel even afar; they are at once seized with horror and terror.

1644. There are very many interior evil Spirits, who do not speak as Spirits do; but are in the beginnings of ideas; thus are more subtle than Spirits . . . They are completely separated from Angelic Spirits . . . These more subtle evil Spirits attach their ideas to objects and things abstractedly, but to filthy ones; and involve their ideas in such things; they are like fools . . .

1658. That the conquered evil and infernal Spirits sought life; and cared not for other things; but that nothing was taken from them by the Lord, because He has no strength from their evils and falsities; but that they were given into the power of good Spirits and Angels. Tr.

1661³. For he does not know that evil Spirits excite and infuse evils and falsities; still less that through evil Spirits he communicates with Hell . . .

1664⁸. For not the least evil can be inflicted on man by evil Spirits which is not from permission.

1667³. So long as there is such (apparent) good and truth with a man . . . evil Spirits do not dare to do anything . . . For evil Spirits and Genii are allowed to operate only into those things which a man acquires actually; not into those things which are from what is hereditary; and therefore before a man has acquired such spheres, the evil Spirits serve; but as soon as he acquires them, they infuse themselves with him, and endeavour to domineer; for they are then in their own peculiar sphere, and there find a certain delight, that is, their life itself. Where the carcase is, there are the eagles.

1683. Evil Spirits are they who attack . . .

[A.] 169². From his own power man can effect nothing against evil, that is, infernal Spirits; for they so cohere with the Hells, that if one is overcome, another rushes in, and so on to eternity . . .

169⁵. The food of evil and infernal Spirits is that which is contrary to wisdom, intelligence, and the truths of knowledge, which is all falsity; by this food evil Spirits are supported . . . because it is their life. Unless they have an opportunity of vituperating, nay, of blaspheming the truth, they cannot live; but still no liberty is given them to think and speak falsity, except that which is from their evil; but not that which is contrary to their Own evil, because this is deceit; for in proportion as they speak falsity from their evil, they speak from their life; and in this case they are excused, because they are such that otherwise they cannot live.

—². As to their being deprived of the power of committing evil and thinking falsity, the case is this. In the combats of temptations, evil Spirits are permitted to bring out all the evil and falsity there is in a man, and to fight from the evil and falsity of the man; but when they have been conquered, they are no longer allowed to do so; for they at once perceive in the man that good and truth is confirmed. Such is the perception of Spirits . . . From the very sphere of a man who is confirmed in truth and good, they at once know how the case is, what answer they will receive, and many other things. This is plainly evident with a regenerate spiritual man, with whom evil Spirits are equally present as with an unregenerate one; but they are subjugated, and serve.

1701^e. The Lord could not but know . . . what evil Spirits excited these things; and how they excited them . . .

1717². He who is in the combats of temptations, and conquers, acquires more and more power over evil Spirits or the diabolical crew, until at last they dare not attempt anything.

1740². For there are evil Spirits who excite evils and falsities . . .

—³. The more horror there is for evils and falsities, the less dare evil Spirits approach; because they cannot endure aversion and horror for the evils and falsities in which their life consists; and sometimes they are seized with terror at the first approach.

1742². The life which evil Spirits have, and desperately love, is the life of the cupidities of the love of self and of the world; hence the life of hatreds, of revenges, and of cruelties; in no other life do they suppose there is any delight . . . This life is there turned into what is fetid and excrementitious, and . . . they perceive that fetor as most delightful . . .

1749². With evil and infernal Spirits there reigns the love of self and of the world; hence they suppose themselves to be the gods of the universe, and to have mighty power. When they are conquered, although they perceive that they have no power whatever, there still remains the opinion of Power and dominion, and they suppose that they can contribute much to the Power and dominion of the Lord; and therefore, in order to reign together with them, they offer good Spirits their services . . . Therefore, the answer is here made to the king of Sodom, by whom such are represented, that . . . the Lord has no power from evil and falsity.

1755. Angels have dominion over evil and infernal Spirits. Sig. —^e.

1808. When 'stars' = evil Spirits and their companies, they are wandering stars.

1820. The end is the love, against which evil Spirits and evil Genii fight.

—². Evil Spirits never fight against anything but that which the man loves; and the more ardently he loves, the more sharply they fight; it is evil Genii who fight against the things of the affection of good; and evil Spirits against the things of the affection of truth; the moment they notice the smallest thing that the man loves, or perceive as it were by the smell what is delightful and dear to him, they at once attack and endeavour to destroy it, thus the whole man . . . Nothing is more delightful to them than thus to destroy a man; nor do they desist even to eternity, unless they are repelled by the Lord. Those who are malignant and cunning, insinuate themselves into the very loves, flattering them; and thus they lead on the man; and (then) they destroy the loves, and thus attempt to murder the man; and this by a thousand methods which are incomprehensible. They do not fight by reasoning against goods and truths,—such combats are of no account, because, if overcome a thousand times, they still press on, because reasonings against goods and truths can never be wanting,—but they pervert goods and truths, and inflame a kind of fire of cupidity and persuasion, so that the man does not know otherwise than that he is in the like cupidity and persuasion; and they kindle these together with a delight which they seize from some other delight of the man; and thus most deceitfully infect and infest; and this so skilfully . . . that unless the Lord rendered aid, the man would never know but that such was the case. They proceed in like manner against the affections of truth, which make conscience. The moment they perceive anything of conscience . . . they form for themselves an affection from the falsities and infirm things in the man; and, by means of this, they darken the light of truth, and thus pervert it; or else they induce anxiety, and inflict torment. Moreover, they keep the thought persistently on one subject, and thus fill it with phantasies; and at the same time clandestinely enwrap cupidities in the phantasies; besides innumerable other arts, which can never be described to the apprehension. The things are few, and only most general, which can come to the man's conscience, which they are delighted to destroy more than with anything else. From these very few things, it may be evident what is the nature of temptations . . .

—^e. Victory is attended with this: that the malignant Genii and Spirits dare afterwards do nothing; their life consists in their being able to destroy; but when they perceive a man to be such that he can resist, they flee away at their first assault; as they are wont to do when they approach the first threshold of Heaven, being at once seized with horror and terror, and precipitate themselves backwards.

1868². In the other life, evil and diabolical Spirits desire nothing more than to get into the World of Spirits, and to infest good Spirits; but as often as they do so they are cast out.

1877. The Spirits who are in the World of Spirits, especially the evil ones, at first retain the things which they had in the life of the body, that is, earthly, corporeal, and worldly things; and, with them, the principles which they had laid hold of . . .

1879. When I was in bed, I was told that evil Spirits had conspired against me, with the intention to suffocate me . . .

1917. According to the states of evil and falsity which are excited by evil Genii and Spirits . . . diabolical Spirits desire nothing more than to find something false; nay, it is a general thing with them to induce falsity from themselves, and then at the same time to accuse.

1937². In the other life these cannot be led by evil Spirits.

1944². This is most clearly evident from evil Spirits in the other life; who, although while they lived in the body, they had been held to be pre-eminently rational; yet, when external bonds are taken away . . . they are more insane than those who in the world had been openly insane; for they rush into every crime without shame, fear, or horror.

1947². They receive this slavish freedom from the infernal Spirits who are with them; who infuse it . . .

1969. The evil Spirits in the other life are scarcely anything but cupidities and phantasies; they have acquired no other life. Their phantasies are such that they cannot at all perceive but that it is so. The phantasies of men cannot be compared with their phantasies; for they are in a more excellent state even as to such things as these. With the infernals such phantasies are perpetual; and there, by means of phantasies, one miserably torments another.

1974². See ENVY.

1983. Evil Spirits most ardently desire to infest and attack man while he is asleep; but . . . are miserably punished. Des.

2057. That the love of self is diametrically opposite to mutual love . . . may be evident from the evil Spirits and Genii in the other life . . .

2121. The World of Spirits is at this day full of evil Genii and evil Spirits, chiefly from the Christian world; and among them there reigns nothing but hatreds, revenges, cruelties, obscenities, and also deceitful machinations: and not only the World of Spirits where Souls recently from the World first gather, but also the interior sphere of that World, where they are who had been interiorly evil as to the intentions and ends . . . For all are not cast into Hell in a moment . . . Moreover, the Spirits who are with man—for every man is ruled by the Lord through Spirits and Angels—are excited more than before to inflict malignant things on man . . .

2126. On seeing the little child, the external bonds by which evil Genii and Spirits are kept from infamous things, were a little relaxed; and then they began to treat the little child in the worst possible way . . .

2183². The Angels with man rule his Rational, but the evil Spirits who are with the same man rule his Natural; hence there is a combat . . . If the Rational conquers . . . the evil Spirits remove to a distance; but if the Natural conquers . . . the evil Spirits approach nearer to the Rational, and continually assault it, and fill the lower part of it with hatreds, revenges, deceits, and the like.

2338. The evil Spirits who are then with the man, and induce the temptation, strongly inspire a negative . . .

2851². The enemies, that is, evil Genii and Spirits besiege that city . . . The infernal Genii and Spirits . . . cannot come further than the lower or external gate; and never into the city; if they could come into the city, that is, into the rational mind, it would be all over with the man; but when they come so far that they seem to themselves to have taken the city, it is closed . . .

—4. But when the man becomes spiritual . . . the evils and falsities, or, what is the same, the evil Genii and Spirits, are driven out from that gate . . .

2871. Infernal Spirits do not know that there is any other freedom than that which is of the love of self and the love of the world . . . When they are in these and the like things, they are in their freedom, because in their delight. In this freedom consists their life, so that if it were taken away from them, they would have no more life left than a new-born infant. (Shown by experiment.)

2873. When evil Spirits merely think of the freedom which is from the affection of good and truth . . . they at once come into tortures . . . The freedom of love to the Lord and of mutual love is Hell to evil Spirits.

2887. Evil Spirits are constantly with man . . . by whom he communicates with the Hells . . . If these Spirits and Angels were taken away, he would instantly be devoid of will and thought . . .

2889. Evil Spirits cannot possibly apprehend that they do not live from themselves . . . still less that they do not begin to live until the life of the cupidities of evil and of the persuasions of falsity in which they are, is extinguished . . .

2890. The evil Spirits who are with man, and through whom he communicates with Hell, consider him as nothing but a vile slave; for they infuse into him their cupidities and persuasions, and thus lead him wherever they want.

3187². Before man is regenerated . . . infernal and diabolical Spirits have possession of that which is called the gate; but when . . . he is being regenerated, the . . . infernal and diabolical Spirits are driven out thence . . .

3195². The evil Spirits in the other life also see each other . . . and this indeed from the light of Heaven; but it is a lumen like that from a coal fire; for into such a lumen is turned the light of Heaven when it comes to them.

[A.] 3255². A man who is evil is in a Society of infernal Spirits . . .

3484^e. Evil and infernal Spirits appear as forms of hatred.

3796^e. In proportion as a man is in an end of self . . . evil Spirits from Hell approach him . . .

3927³. In temptations . . . the external man is ruled by means of infernal Spirits . . .

3928². He who believes that . . . before regeneration . . . he is not possessed by diabolical Spirits, is much deceived ; and does not know . . . that before regeneration, as to his natural man, man is possessed by infernal Genii and Spirits . . .

4067³. Such as is the evil with a man, such is the Society of evil Spirits with him . . . Examp.

4249. Temptation is from this : that the Angels keep the man in goods and truths ; and the evil Spirits keep him in evils and falsities ; for the things which exist with the Spirits and Angels who are with the man, are perceived no otherwise by the man than that they are in himself . . .

4274. In temptation . . . truth is assaulted by the evil Spirits, and is defended by the Angels, who are with the man.

—². The reason the first of combat is as to truth . . . is that the man principally loves this ; and that which is of anyone's love is attacked by evil Spirits . . .

—^e. They who yield in temptation, come into the confirmation of evil and the persuasion of falsity ; for then the evil Spirits with them conquer ; and they are thus associated with them.

4290². Evil Spirits cannot possibly approach any heavenly Society without beginning to be tortured ; also, evil Spirits cannot endure that Angels should look at them ; for they are at once tormented and fall into a swoon. D.1966.

4307. 'Jacob . . . said, Tell me thy name' = evil Spirits . . . for no temptation ever takes place through good Spirits ; but through evil ones.

— The presence of Spirits with men is according to their loves . . . evil Spirits are with those who are in corporeal and worldly love only . . .

4311². The man who is in corporeal and worldly love, and not at the same time in spiritual or celestial love, has none but evil Spirits with him, even when he is in a holy external . . . —³.

—³. That evil Spirits can be in such a state ; and that they are so, when in externals . . .

4319². The same Spirits, being evil, insisted that now they believed, because they saw . . .

4533. When Angels look at evil Spirits, the latter appear quite different from what they do among themselves. When evil Spirits and Genii are among themselves, and in their own fatuous lumen . . . they appear to each other in the human form ; and, according to their phantasies, not unbeautiful ; whereas, when they are looked at by the Angels of Heaven, that lumen is at once dissipated, and they acquire a totally different face, every one according to his genius ; some dusky and black, like devils ; some with a ghastly face like that of a corpse ; some almost devoid of a face, and instead thereof something hairy ; some like a wicker-work of teeth ; some like skeletons ; and . . . some as monsters ; the deceitful as serpents ; and the most deceitful as vipers ; and others differently. But the moment the Angels remove their sight from them, they appear in their previous form . . . The Angels look at the evil whenever they notice that they are striving to get out of their Hells into the World of Spirits ; and intend evil to others : thus are they detected and repelled.

4555². Evil Spirits can never approach any heavenly Society, because they are in 'the terror of God' ; for when evil Spirits approach any heavenly Society, they suddenly fall into anxieties and torments . . .

4674³. Evil Spirits who are recently from the world, before they cast themselves into Hell, above all others conceive that they should be received into Heaven . . . and are sometimes told . . . that they can be admitted if they are able to be there ; and some of them are elevated into the first Societies . . . but when they come thither they begin to be tortured, and almost to be suffocated . . . and when they look at themselves in the light there, they appear to themselves as devils ; some as corpses ; some as monsters ; and therefore they cast themselves headlong down from that Society . . . into some infernal mist, where they receive their former respiration ; and where, from phantasy, they appear to themselves as Spirits not evil. Thus they know of what quality they are.

4798. Evil Spirits may also be Known from their faces ; for all their cupidities . . . are inscribed on their faces ; and it may also be Known from their faces with what Hells they communicate . . . In general, when their faces appear in the light of Heaven, they are almost devoid of life, ghastly as if they were those of corpses ; some of them black, and some of them monstrous ; for they are forms of hatred, of cruelty, of deceit, of hypocrisy. But in their own lumen among themselves, from phantasy, they appear different.

4803. There are also Spirits who in a certain way admit the light of Heaven, and receive the truths of faith, and yet are evil ; so that they have some perception of truth. Ex.

4839². Hence it is, that . . . the evil Spirits who are in Hell, among themselves, from phantasy, do indeed appear as men ; but in the light of Heaven, as monsters, more direful and horrible according to the evil in which they are . . .

5032³. For evil Spirits and Genii are in their life, or the delight of their life, when they can enter into anyone's cupidities ; and, when they have entered into them, they allure to some evil ; for they then persuade that falsity is truth ; and this they easily do with those who are in natural good not spiritual ; but with those who are in spiritual good, they cannot do it ; for these know from within what evil and falsity is . . .

5035. Temptations as to truths are effected by Spirits ; but temptations as to goods, by Genii. Spirits and Genii are thus distinguished : Spirits act into the Intellectual, thus into the things of faith ; but Genii into the Voluntary, thus into the things of love. Spirits present themselves to view, and also manifest themselves by speech ; but Genii make themselves invisible, and manifest themselves only by an influx into the desires and cupidities. They are separated . . . evil or infernal Spirits appear in front and at both sides under the earth of lower things ; but evil or infernal Genii appear under the posterior part and behind the back deep under the earth there. Temptations as to truths are effected by evil Spirits ; and temptations as to goods, by evil Genii. In what follows, it treats of the temptations . . . which are effected by evil Spirits ; thus of those which are effected as to false speaking against good. These temptations are milder than those which are effected by evil Genii ; and also come forth before them. 8593.

5036. He is quite unaware that (temptations) take place through the evil Spirits who are with him.

—². Temptations then come forth through the evil Spirits who are around him ; for the man is then led into the state of the evil in which he is . . . and when he comes into this state, the evil or infernal Spirits encompass him ; and when they perceive that he is interiorly guarded by Angels, the evil Spirits excite the falsities which he had thought, and the evils which he had committed . . .

—⁴. Therefore, when the ultimate truth is withdrawn . . . he comes into temptations, and is accused by evil Spirits, who are all merely natural . . . Examps.

5280³. Hence a combat between the evil Spirits and the Angels . . .

—⁴. As soon as they come to the age of adolescence, (most) suffer themselves to be led away by the world, and thus go over to the side of infernal Spirits, by whom they are by degrees so completely estranged from Heaven, that they scarcely believe any longer that there is a Heaven . . .

5376⁶. They who are in desolation there, are troubled by evil Spirits and Genii ; for these infuse persuasions of evil and falsity . . . so that truths do not appear ; but, as the time of desolation is finished, they are enlightened by light from Heaven, and so the evil Spirits and Genii are driven away, each one into his own Hell, where they undergo penalties. Sig.

5433². The Angels cannot be with man in earthly things, and therefore they recede ; and then evil Spirits approach, who cannot be with man in heavenly things ; thus heavenly things become naught to him, and earthly things everything . . .

5628^e. When anyone suffers hard things there from evil Spirits, through infestations, excitations to evils, and persuasions to falsity ; afterwards, when the evil Spirits are removed, he is received by Angels, and is brought into a state of comfort . . .

5852. The evil Spirits who are with man are indeed from the Hells, but at the time they are with him are not in Hell, but are taken out thence. The place where they then are . . . is called the World of Spirits . . . When the evil Spirits who are with man are in that World, they are not in any infernal torment, but are in the delights of the love of self and of the world, and of all the pleasures in which is the man himself ; for they are in the whole thought and in the whole affection of the man ; but when they are sent back into their Hell, they return into their former state.

5854. When the Angels cannot (turn away evil ends) they remove themselves . . . and then evil Spirits approach nearer.

—^e. Man's life is from cupidities and phantasies . . . and unless this life were supported by means of evil Spirits, and thus amended . . . he would not survive a minute . . .

5857^e. Evil Spirits cannot approach little children ; because they have not as yet anything in the memory which they put on.

5863. If evil Spirits were to perceive that they are with man, and that they are separate Spirits from him ; and if they could inflow into the things of his body, they would endeavour by a thousand methods to destroy him ; for they hate man with deadly hatred. As they knew that I was a man in the body, they were in the continual endeavour to destroy me, not only as to the body, but especially as to the soul ; for to destroy a man or any Spirit, is the delight itself of the life of those who are in Hell . . .

5893². When evil Spirits poured in evils and falsities, Angels from the Lord kept me in truths . . .

5954⁸. As he has no truths . . . he suffers himself to be led by reasonings equally by evil Spirits as by good ones ; and thus cannot be defended by the Angels. Sig.

5979. The man who is faith, believes that . . . diabolical Spirits are entirely removed by him ; but I can assert that with the man who is in the concupiscences and delights of the love of self and of the world, and who has these as the end, they are so near him, that they are in him, and rule both his thoughts and his affections. The Angels cannot possibly be within the sphere of such . . . and therefore the Angels recede as the infernal Spirits approach nearer . . .

—². That infernal Spirits . . . are with man, is . . . from the doctrine . . . of Christian Churches . . .

5989². Moreover, evil Spirits do not always send forth Subjects ; but observe what Spirits are with others, and also the places where the simple and obedient are ; and make these into Subjects for themselves ; which is done by directing their thoughts into him, and by infusing their affections and persuasions into him ; whence he is no longer master of himself, but serves as a Subject for them ; and this sometimes without knowing it.

[A.] 5992. The office (of the Angels) also is to rule the evil Spirits who are from Hell, which they do in innumerable ways ; of which it is allowable to mention only these : When the evil Spirits pour in evils and falsities, the Angels insinuate truths and goods . . . infernal Spirits continually attack, and Angels protect . . .

6097. (In temptations) man is let into the state of his evils, consequently, among evil Spirits, who accuse and thus torment the conscience.

6159². The Spirits who are evil, or with whom evil has the dominion, are evil in each and all things ; even when they are speaking truth and acting good ; for by these things they intend nothing except to deceive others . . .

6193². The things which flow in from the Angels, being more through the interiors, do not appear so much to the external sense, as those which are from evil Spirits.

— . On the other hand, evil Spirits are angry if they are told that they do not think and will from themselves ; because this is contrary to the delight of their loves ; and still more, when they are told, that life is not in them, but that it flows in. When this is shown them by living experience . . . they indeed confess that it is so . . . but still after a little while they deny it, and then do not want to have it confirmed any more by experience.

6205. Evil Spirits especially put on the persuasions and cupidities of man ; and when they put them on, they rule the man with command ; for he who introduces himself into the cupidities and persuasions of a man, subjects the man to himself . . .

6206. If he believed as the case is . . . the moment evil flowed in, he would think that it was from the evil Spirits with him ; and (then) the Angels would avert and reject it . . .

—². When a man thus appropriates evil, he acquires the sphere of that evil, and it is to this sphere that Spirits from Hell adjoint themselves who are in a sphere of the like evil . . .

6308. The order of influx is such, that evil Spirits flow in first, and then Angels dissipate it . . . But the evil which inflows from evil Spirits into the thought does not at all injure the man if he does not receive it. But if he receives it, and carries it from the thought into the will, he makes it his own ; and then he accedes to the side of the infernal Spirits . . . Sig.

6373. The Divine which transflowed through the Celestial Kingdom could not be pure . . . and therefore at that time infernal and diabolical Spirits issued from the Hells, and exercised dominion over the Souls who came from the world . . .

6391³. This it has been given to know from the evil

Spirits in the other life, who, when they lived, did nothing of good to others . . . except for the sake of self ; (for) they do not believe that there can be any delight in doing goods without the end of recompense . . .

6423². A certain person who had been in natural truth . . . was in such power, that infernal Spirits could not at all infest him . . .

6475. I heard it said to certain evil Spirits who were in the World of Spirits, and who were continually thinking against the Lord, that . . . they should point out a single one in Heaven who does not acknowledge the Lord . . . but they were silent, because they were not able to do so. Some of the evil Spirits, who believed that Heavens exist where the Lord is not acknowledged, wandered about, and made inquiry ; but as the endeavour was vain, they returned.

6484. He was one of the subtle evil Spirits, because he had indulged in thought more than in discourse and converse . . . He was at this time in the World of Spirits ; and when they are there, they are in the delights of the loves in which they had been in this world. It then came to pass that Heaven inflowed into his delights ; and he then suddenly felt Hell . . .

6493. When an accident befel me . . . I was told by the Angels, that it happened because such Spirits were present . . . Moreover, evil Spirits, by their arts, have found out how to produce a sphere which is the source of misfortunes . . .

6559. If evil Spirits do any evil in the World of Spirits beyond that which they have imbued from their life in the world, the punishers are at once present, and chastise them . . . For it is a law in the other life, that no one must become worse than he has been in the world . . . This takes place when the evil Spirits in the World of Spirits do evil ; but in their own Hell, one chastises another, according to the evil which they had actually imbued in the world . . .

6574². With those who are in temptation, the Lord is present, and resists, refuting the falsities of the evil Spirits, and dissipating their evil . . .

—³. For it is to be known, that the infernal Spirits, who are thus permitted to harass the good, intend nothing but evil ; for they want to forcibly drag them down from Heaven, and to cast them into Hell ; for to destroy anyone as to the soul . . . is the delight itself of their life ; but not one whit is permitted them by the Lord, except to the end that good may come out of it.

6657². In this combat (of temptation) it sometimes appears to the Spirits from Hell that they are conquering, and then they rise up ; sometimes that they are being conquered, and then they draw back ; and therefore they are then afraid that more from Heaven will join themselves against them, and that thus they will be cast into Hell, from which they will go no more out ; as also takes place when they are conquered. Sig.

—³. When Spirits from Hell are fighting against the Angels, they are in the World of Spirits ; and are in a free state there.

6677. Hence it is, that the Angels, being in good, have such Power over infernal Spirits, that one of them can master a thousand of the infernals.

6692. Those (of the Ancient Church) who did not live in the good of charity, but in things contrary thereto, sometimes had open communication with evil Spirits, who perverted all the truths of the Church . . . Hence magic.

6724². When man is being reformed . . . he, as to his external, is let into his evils and falsities, consequently among the infernal Spirits who are in these evils and falsities; these flit about him, and strive by every method to destroy him . . . but the good and truth which flow in through the internal render him so safe, that the infernal Spirits cannot inflict on him the least injury . . .

6757^e. In the other life, when they who are in truths are being infested by falsities, they are held in them by evil Spirits as it were bound . . .

6762^e. The infernal Spirits who are in falsities, when they have been in the World of Spirits, and have there endeavoured to destroy truths with those who are in temptation, are afterwards relegated into the Hells, whence they can go no more out. Sig.

6769. The reason they who are not as yet in truths are not in safety, is that non-truths communicate with evil Spirits. Sig.

6828². (In temptations) evil Spirits are present, who inflict pain, and despair concerning salvation.

6858. Before the Advent of the Lord into the world, evil Genii and Spirits occupied all that region of Heaven to which the spiritual were afterwards elevated . . . But after the Lord's Advent, they were all thrust down into their Hells . . . I have often observed, that the moment any place is left by good Spirits, it is occupied by evil Spirits; and that the latter are driven out thence, on which the place is again given to those who are in good. The reason is, that the infernals continually burn to destroy the things of Heaven; in special, those to which they are opposite . . .

6914². The more deceitful (evil Spirits) . . . are under the view of the celestial; and for so long are withheld from their wicked deceits. They are directly over the head; and the celestial Angels, under whose view they are, are still higher up. From this it has been given to know what was the nature of the state of the evil Genii and Spirits, who, before the Lord's Advent, occupied the lower region of Heaven. (How they were withheld from the open commission of evils.)

—³. There are evil Spirits with these (priests) who are in the like love and thence in the like thought; and who lead them; and to whom are adjoined simple good Spirits . . .

7418. The places where evil Spirits are, at the sides under the soles of the feet, appear as earth, and in fact as earth uncultivated and arid; under which earth there are certain Hells. (See DUST, here.)

7454³. (Thus) if infernal Spirits were near those who are in Divine worship, they would infest them by means of their sphere . . . 7474².

7479. They wondered that there were so many evil Spirits around me; and that they also spoke to me. Ex.

7501. As to those who are infested being held back by evil Spirits, the case is this: when evil Spirits attack anyone, they know how to insinuate themselves into his delights which are of cupidities, and also into his pleasantnesses which are of principles, thus into the things of his love; and so long as they are in such insinuation, they hold him whom they are infesting as it were bound; nor can he be loosed . . . except with the Lord's aid; for love and insinuation into the delight of love conjoins. Such is the art used by evil Spirits and Genii in the other life.

7502². As to the infernal Spirits who infest the upright in the other life being vastated as to the truths of faith . . . it is to be known that those who (do this) are those who, when they lived in the world, had been of the Church; for they who have not been of the Church cannot infest those who are of the Church. Ex.

7519². Evil or infernal Spirits, so long as they are removed and separated from Heaven . . . do not know that they are in evils and falsities; for they then believe falsities to be truths, and evils goods; but the moment Heaven approaches nearer to them . . . they perceive the falsities and evils; and also the nearer that Heaven approaches, that is, the more presently its good of love and truth of faith flows in, as they cannot endure them, the more grievously they are seized by their evils and falsities. Sig.

7645². Hence it is, that infernal Spirits, when devastated, are in the extremes of the Natural; their lumen, which is called intellectual lumen, is not unlike the lumen of this world . . .

7766². If an evil Spirit approaches a heavenly Society, where there is charity, a stench is plainly felt from him.

8054³. These regions are occupied when the evil are increased in the world, and the good are diminished; for then evil Spirits approach man, and good Spirits recede from him; and in proportion as the latter recede, the regions nearest to man are occupied by the evil . . .

8131. (In temptations) the evil Spirits accuse and attack, but the good excuse and defend.

8722^e. The reason is, that evil Spirits cannot attack good, but flee away at the first perception of it; whereas they can attack truth.

8870^e. In the other life, evil Spirits make a resemblance of the things which are from the Divine . . .

8960. Temptation is induced by evil Spirits, who dwell with a man in his evils and falsities: they excite his evils and accuse him . . .

9009. Man then summons Spirits from Hell, who afterwards recede with difficulty.

[A.]9141². The love of evil, that is, the love of self and the love of the world, make the fire of life with an evil man, and with a Spirit of Hell; and the love of falsity and the faith of falsity make the lumen of life with them.

9284^e. Spirits from the Hells were present, who wanted to be worshipped as gods; this is continually sought for by those who are in the Hells.

9297^e. Evil Spirits are forms of evil use; these are in Hell.

9438². When a man is conjoined with the Lord, he is safe from the attack of the evil Spirits who are from Hell.

9993⁶. See GENII.

10483². For every man has with him Spirits from Hell. . . The Spirits from Hell are in his corporeal and worldly loves . . .

10608². Infernal Spirits dwell under the mountains and rocks.

10642². If anyone is worshipped who has been a man, the Spirits from Hell (who are with men) suppose that it is themselves who are being worshipped; for everyone in Hell wants to be a god; and these Spirits communicate that worship with the infernal Society from which they are . . .

H. 152. When any evil Spirit comes among the good, the quarters are wont to be confounded thereby . . .

153. Evil Spirits sometimes appear turned to the quarters of Heaven; and they then have intelligence and perception of truth, but no affection of good; and therefore the moment they turn themselves back to their own quarters, they are in no intelligence and perception of truth; saying then, that the truths which they had heard and perceived are . . . falsities; they also want falsities to be truths. Ex.

229. I have seen hundreds of thousands of evil Spirits dispersed and cast into Hell by the Angels . . .

232². When an evil Spirit is merely looked at by the Angels he falls into a swoon, and does not appear as a man; and this until the Angel averts his eyes.

233. The nature of the power of evil Spirits before they are cast into Hell, shall be told in what follows.

245. The speech of evil and infernal Spirits is in like manner natural, because from affections, but from evil affections, and the filthy ideas thence . . .

249. To speak with Spirits is at this day rarely granted . . . because then the Spirits know that they are with man . . . and evil Spirits are such that they hate man with deadly hatred, and desire nothing more than to destroy him as to both soul and body; as also takes place with those who have indulged much in phantasies, and have thus removed from themselves the delights suitable to the natural man.

292. With every man there are good Spirits and evil Spirits; through the good Spirits man has conjunction with Heaven, and through the evil Spirits with Hell. These Spirits are in the World of Spirits. . . When these Spirits come to a man, they enter into all his memory and thence into all his thought; the evil Spirits into those things of the memory and thought which are evil. . . The Spirits do not at all know that they are with man; but while with him, believe that all things of the man's memory and thought are their own; nor do they see man. . . The greatest care is taken by the Lord to prevent the Spirits from knowing that they are with man; for, if they knew it they would speak with him; and then the evil Spirits would destroy him; for evil Spirits, being conjoined with Hell, desire nothing more than to destroy man, not only as to the soul, that is, as to faith and love, but also as to the body. It is otherwise when they do not speak with man; they then do not know that the things they are thinking, and about which they are speaking together—for they also speak together from man—are from him; but believe that they are their own; and as everyone esteems and loves what is his own, the Spirits are kept so as to love and esteem man, without knowing it.

293. The reason why Spirits who communicate with Hell are also adjoined to man, is that man is born into evils of every kind; and therefore his first life is entirely from them; so that unless such Spirits were adjoined to man as he is himself, he could not live; nay, he could not be withdrawn from his evils, and reformed; and therefore he is kept in his own life by means of evil Spirits, and is withheld from it by means of good Spirits; and by means of both he is in equilibrium . . . and thus in freedom; and can be withdrawn from evils, and bent to good; and good can also be implanted in him, which cannot possibly be done unless he is in freedom; nor can freedom be given him, unless Spirits from Hell act on the one side, and Spirits from Heaven on the other. . . 599.

295. Such Spirits are adjoined to man as he himself is as to affection. . . but good Spirits are adjoined to him by the Lord, and evil ones are summoned by the man himself. . .

—². With those also who cannot be reformed, there are good Spirits adjoined. . . but their immediate conjunction is with evil Spirits who communicate with Hell; whence the men have such as they themselves are; if they are lovers of self, of gain, of revenge, of adultery, the like Spirits are present, and dwell as it were in their evil affections; and, in proportion as the man cannot be kept from evil by good Spirits, these evil Spirits inflame him; and in proportion as the affection reigns, they cleave to him, and do not recede.

311². The Hell which is in front, where those are who are called evil Spirits, is called Satan. 544.

399². Whenever Spirits approached who, when men in the world, had been in the loves (of self and the world) my delight vanished; and I have been told, that if such merely approach a heavenly Society, the delight of those who are in the Society is diminished precisely according to the degree of their presence; and, what is wonderful, those evil Spirits are then in their own delight. 400, Ex.

400^e. So that a Spirit who is in Hell dare not even put forth a finger, or raise thence the crown of his head; for in proportion as he does so, he is in torture.

429. Through these caverns are exhaled stenches which . . . evil Spirits eagerly seek after, because they are delighted with them. . .

455. Evil Spirits have often been turned by Divine force towards those who were in the light of truth ; and they then comprehended all things, as the Angels do ; and confessed that they are truths . . . But the moment they relapsed into themselves, and were turned to the love which was of their will, they comprehended nothing, and spoke contrary things. I have also heard infernal Spirits saying that they know and perceive that what they do is evil, and that what they think is falsity ; but that they could not resist the delight of their love, thus their will ; and that this bears along their thoughts to see evil as good, and falsity as truth. Ex.

479⁶. But evil Spirits go in no other ways than those which lead to Hell ; and to that Society there which is in the evil of their own love : the ways which tend in other directions they do not see ; and if they do see them, they do not want to go in them.

481⁶. When any evil Spirit is brought into Heaven, he pants like one who labours in agony.

487. Spirits in the World of Spirits who are bound to the Hells cannot see their own evils and falsities.

496. In this first state (after death) evil Spirits speak truths and do goods equally as good ones . . . But evil Spirits are known from good ones especially by this : that the evil ones eagerly attend to what is said about external things, and little to what is said about internal ones . . . They hear them, but without attention and joy. They are also known by this : that they frequently turn to certain quarters ; and, when left to themselves, go in ways which tend thither.

508. (Evil Spirits in the second state after death. Des.)

—⁶. (The uses performed by evil Spirits.)

509. As evil Spirits, when in this second state, rush into evils of every kind, they are wont to be frequently and grievously punished. Ex.

510. When an evil Spirit is in the state of his interiors, he is by degrees turned to his own Society, and at last directly to it, before this state is finished ; and when it is finished, the evil Spirit himself casts himself into Hell where his like are . . . Some evil Spirits in this second state by turns enter the Hells and go out again . . . The very Society, in which, as to their interiors, they had been in the world, is shown them when they are in the state of their exteriors, in order that they may thus know that even during the bodily life they were in Hell ; but still not in a like state to that of those who are in Hell, but in a like state to that of those who are in the World of Spirits. Ex.

511. The separation of evil Spirits from good Spirits takes place in this second state ; for in the first state they are together . . . The separation of the good from the evil ones is effected in various ways. Des.

527^c. The Angels confess that it is more easy to turn an owl into a dove . . . than an evil Spirit into an Angel of Heaven. P.338⁷.

550. Evil Spirits in the World of Spirits are severely punished, in order that by means of penalties they may be deterred from doing evils. (See EVIL, here.)

551^c. Every evil Spirit is reduced into this state before he is cast into Hell.

553. All Spirits in the Hells, when looked at in any light of Heaven, appear in the form of their own evil. Des.

—⁴. But it is to be known that infernal Spirits so appear in the light of Heaven ; but among themselves they appear as men. This is of the Lord's mercy . . . But this appearance is a fallacy . . .

558^c. There are evil Spirits, whose habitations are in the quarter intermediate between the north and the west beneath the Heavens, who are skilled in the art of letting upright Spirits into their proprium. Ex.

574. It has been shown above, that an evil Spirit casts himself into Hell of his own accord ; and therefore it shall be told in a few words how this comes about, when yet there are such torments in Hell. Ex.

576. On the wickedness and nefarious arts of infernal Spirits. Gen.art.

577. In the same degree in which there is wisdom and intelligence with the Angels, there is wickedness and cunning with infernal Spirits . . . because . . . when released from the body . . . an infernal Spirit is in his own evil . . . and, therefore, as an angelic Spirit thinks, wills, speaks, and acts, from his own good, so does an infernal Spirit from his own evil . . . It was otherwise when he lived in the body ; the evil of the spirit was then in bonds . . . (See EVIL, here.)

—³. The Lord cannot protect man unless he acknowledges the Divine, and lives the life of faith and charity ; for otherwise he turns himself away from the Lord, and turns himself to infernal Spirits . . .

583. The Spirits who are in the plains and valleys see each other ; but when they have been separated—which takes place when they are intronitted into their interiors—the evil Spirits do not see the good ones ; but the good ones can see the evil ones . . .

584. The infernal Spirits, who are in the Hells, are in a lumen such as comes from burning coals : their eyes are accommodated to the reception of this lumen, because, while they lived in the world, they had been in thick darkness as to Divine truths, denying them ; and as it were in lumen as to falsities, affirming them . . . Hence, too, it is, that the light of Heaven is thick darkness to them ; and therefore, when they go out of their caverns, they see nothing.

585. The gates to the Hells . . . are not opened, except when evil Spirits from the World of Spirits are cast in thither ; and when they are opened, there exhales either as it were fire with smoke . . . or as it were a flame without smoke ; or as it were the soot from a chimney on fire, or as it were a mist and dense cloud. I have heard that the infernal Spirits do not see these things, nor feel them ; because, when they are in them, they are as it were in their own atmosphere, and thus in the delight of their life.

591^c. The equilibrium in which are kept . . . the Spirits in the Hells. (See EQUILIBRIUM, here.)

594^c. The ejection of superfluous evil Spirits into deserts.

600. The conjunction of man with Heaven and Hell is . . . mediate through the World of Spirits ; these Spirits are with man ; and none from Hell itself . . .

Through the evil Spirits in the World of Spirits man is conjoined with Hell . . .

N. 40. A merely natural man is in society with Spirits who are in Hell.

188. There are with every man evil Spirits and good Spirits ; the evil Spirits are in his evils . . . When the evil Spirits come near, they bring out his evils, and the good Spirits his goods ; whence a collision and combat . . . 196.

L. 33. With men who undergo spiritual temptations there are evil Spirits from Hell, who induce these temptations.

48^r. (The term 'spirit' also means) the infernal Spirits themselves, by whom men are troubled. III.

W. 140. He who has been cast into Hell is called a satan or a devil ; but so long as the same are in the world of Spirits, he who is being prepared for . . . Hell is called an infernal Spirit. Meanwhile, an . . . infernal Spirit is conjoined with Hell. All the Spirits who are in the World of Spirits are adjoined to men . . . and through these Spirits they communicate with Heaven or with Hell, according to their life.

266^r. I have heard evil Spirits, who within were devils . . . when the affection of knowing . . . was excited by glory, perceived the arcana of angelic wisdom equally as well as good Spirits . . . Nay, these diabolical Spirits said, that they could indeed will and do according to these things, but that they would not. When they were told that they would will these things provided they shunned evils as sins, they said they could do this, but they did not will to do so.

270^r. An evil Spirit cannot gyrate his body from left to right, but from right to left. Ex.

343. As to his affections and cupidities, and the thoughts thence, and as to his acts from the former and the latter, man is in the midst either of Angels of Heaven, or of Spirits of Hell.

P. 208. (Such) are like the Spirits of Hell . . .

288. All the Spirits of Hell say that no one can think from any other than himself . . . But experience will teach . . . that everything of thought and affection even with the Spirits of Hell flows in from Heaven ; but the good is turned into evil and the truth into falsity. (Shown by experiment.)

298^r. Every evil Spirit is let into the marriage of evil and falsity before he is sent into Hell ; and when he is in it, he does not know what good is ; for he calls his evil good, because he feels it as delight ; and he then also turns away from truth, and does not want to see it ; because he sees the falsity that agrees with his evil as the eye sees beauty . . .

301. The reason the Spirits of Hell are concupiscences of evil and imaginations of falsity thence, is that they are in the love of self, and in their own intelligence . . .

312^r. Evil Spirits have often injected evils and falsities into my thought, which to me appeared as if they were in me and from me . . .

340^r. By permission, there ascended certain Spirits from Hell, and said to me . . . Write also something from us. (See DELIGHT, here. —7.)

R. 926^r. For infernal Spirits are able, by means of phantasies, to represent magnificent things, by closing the interiors of the mind, and opening its exteriors only. Examp.

M. 71^r. Evil Spirits love what is homogeneous to their own affection, however unclean it may be . . .

235^r. The Spirits of Hell freeze with intense cold, when the heat from Heaven inflows to them ; and yet, among themselves, when the heat of Heaven is excluded, they burn with great heat.

444^r. I will call hither some evil Spirit, who turns himself from God, and I will speak to him behind ; and you will see that the things which are said will be turned into the contrary. (Shown by experiment.)

461^r. But the Spirits of Hell invert all things in themselves . . . delight constantly remaining . . .

T. 71. (A Spirit who is immediately afterwards called a satan.)

115^r. For men in the world are so conjoined with Angels of Heaven and with Spirits of Hell, that, both ways, in the interiors of the mind they make one.

380^r. He who leads himself into evil affections by means of confirmations of falsity and a life of evil, adjoins to himself Spirits from Hell ; and when they are adjoined to him, the man enters more and more as it were into brotherhood with satans . . .

607. That . . . an unregenerate man is in communion with Spirits of Hell. Gen.art. . . Because man is born to become spiritual, and this is not possible, unless he is in a certain conjunction with those who are spiritual. . . . But of this conjunction neither the man, nor the Angel, nor the Spirit knows ; because man, so long as he lives in the natural world, is in a natural state ; and an Angel and a Spirit is in a spiritual state ; and the one does not appear to the other on account of the difference between what is natural and what is spiritual . . . From which it is evident that they are not conjoined as to the thoughts, but as to the affections ; and upon these scarcely anyone reflects . . . The conjunction by means of affections of love between men on the one side and Angels and Spirits on the other, is so close, that if it were severed, and they were thus separated, the men would at once fall into a swoon ; and, if the conjunction were not restored, they would expire.

651. A Spirit of Hell cannot do anything but evil to another, because he has in him a nature of evil from the devil ; and the essence or nature which anyone has appropriated to himself in the world cannot be changed after death.

767^r. But an evil Spirit perpetually turns himself away from the Lord ; and constantly looks to his own love ; and this, too, in every turning of his body and face . . .

798^r. I rejoined . . . Begone, evil Spirit . . .

D. 47 (Index, art. Spiritus). It is given to man to command evil Spirits ; and not to be commanded by them.

58 (Index). Evil Spirits do not want good to be said of the good ; nor do they want the presence of the good ; nor do they know of the presence of another Spirit.

— Evil Spirits do not want anything to be revealed about themselves.

96 (Index). Evil Spirits continually study to precipitate man into dangers of death; and thus to inflict injuries; and these things are from them, whether they know it, or whether they do not know it.

125 (Index). Various companies of evil Spirits were convinced of truths; yet were afterwards the same as they had been before.

148 (Index). The evils which happen to man are each and all from evil Spirits; although not with premeditation, because such is their nature. (See 2372, below.)

148½ (Index). Evil Spirits especially suppose that they are the Holy Spirit; and that the Lord can do nothing without them.

152 (Index). When the bonds are loosened with evil Spirits, they then, from phantasies, commit horrid things.

153. On the pertinacity of evil Spirits in bringing evil upon men.

— (Index). Evil Spirits, when permitted, inflicted various pains on the members of my body.

154. On evil Spirits, that they can 'lie down and feed' with those who are faithful; according to Is.xi.4-7.

180. The phantasies of evil Spirits are direful and cruel, delighting themselves in cruelly treating men . . . 189.

192. By this kind of phantasy evil Spirits continually desire to excite enmities among each other; and, when it is permitted, they represent their companions in the forms of various animals, as serpents; and when their companions are thus represented, they cannot deliver themselves from this phantasy . . .

193. On the permission granted to evil Spirits; and on their restriction or inhibition; that they are less than nothing.

217. That evil Spirits constantly endeavour to act against order, although they perceive that they can never do anything.

218 (Index). On the captivity in which good Spirits are kept, while evil Spirits are at liberty.

— The reason evil Spirits are in the World of Spirits, is for the sake of mankind, lest they should perish by the pangs of conscience; but still they are cast down . . .

220 (Index). An experience that evil Spirits are thrust down out of the World of Spirits.

225 (Index). An experience that the infernal crew . . . are so hostile and dangerous, that, when they were a little loosened they even struck terror into the evil Spirits in the World of Spirits.

253 (Index). Some evil Spirits learn evils, which they afterwards commit as it were from nature; and they can thus make their nature worse. Compare 3708.

316. That evil Spirits can enter into Heaven . . .

— (Index). Evil Spirits sometimes by permission enter Heaven, as it were by their own machination . . . yet they are encompassed by such a sphere of Spirits; otherwise they could not approach even afar, without their cold being perceived.

325 (Index). Evil Spirits can be reduced to confess that it is truth; and, in fact, as if from persuasion.

326 (Index). Some evil Spirits are reduced into such a state, that they have nothing intellectual, except as much as rules the Natural, in which they are as it were irrational . . . without external bounds.

379, 399. That evil Spirits can induce on man almost any external joy, as it were heavenly, which yet is filthy; although souls would suppose that it was in the highest degree heavenly. 755.

406 (Index). That infernal Spirits are Known from the cold which seizes on various parts of the body; and that they suppose themselves to be most intelligent and powerful.

408, 409 (Index). On certain evil Spirits who deceitfully insinuated themselves into Heaven; and were cast out thence into a lake.

415 (Index). On evil Spirits, who skilfully turn good into evil; and transfer evil into others.

457. That a great crowd of evil Spirits desire to steal. . . Many times they wanted to excite me to steal (moving my hand when in shops).

590 (Index). That evil European Spirits in the other life study to pervert everybody . . .

597^e. There are evil Spirits who excite the pleasure diu sedendi in sententiis . . .

617 (Index). How cunningly evil Spirits pervert affections of good and thoughts of truth into evil and falsity; and insinuate these things into man; and persuade that they belong to the man; so that he can never escape being perverted, unless the Lord guards him.

620 (Index). That evil Spirits suppose that they rule themselves; and that they are mighty and strong; and that they spurn those who are so from the Lord . . .

644 (Index). That evil and deceitful Spirits have imbed nature with such cupidity and delight, that they cannot desist, as they confessed; but as an excuse this does not avail; because all evil Spirits make this confession, but for the sake of deceit.

661. That evil Spirits desire to kill and torment every man, but, with the men with whom they are, they are prevented from doing so in two ways.

—². The evil Spirits who fly about at liberty are of the same character, but still are adjoined to men, in order to excite their life . . . Yet as they know no otherwise than that they are the same men as the man with whom they are, they do not desire to inflict any harm on him, because that would be like inflicting harm on themselves . . .

—³. The second reason why they do not torment and destroy men, is that good Angels are also present; and the Lord rules them according to permissions and concessions.

824. That evil Spirits pretend to have dominion over the falsities and evils of man.

932 (Index). Evil Spirits are in a state of good affection, as the evil in the world are wont to be brought (by misfortunes).

[D.]1043. That evil Spirits, and devils, are the causes of all evils. (Their attempts to throw me under carriages, etc.) 253. 2171. 3821.

1056. Evil Spirits desire with avidity to know these things . . .

1085. That nothing from evil Spirits can inflow into the heavenly Societies . . .

1168. That there are (evil Spirits) who can speak as volubly and as quickly as heavenly Spirits.

1205 (Index). Evil Spirits as it were struggle with the Angels concerning man's thoughts.

1246^o. (The infernals are to be pitied, and not to be spoken to harshly ; we ought to wish them well.)

1307. That evil Spirits are able to think so that they scarcely come to the perception of man.

1308. Evil Spirits think in a certain manner ; namely, they think only within themselves, so that they do not suffer it to pass into the merely corporeal thought . . .

1491. A Society of such (evil Spirits) acts softly, as good Spirits do . . . Ex.

1591. He who is not led by the Lord, not only acts in consort with evil Spirits, but also excites evil Spirits so to act ; for he believes his cupidities and thoughts to be his Own : but he who is led by the Lord is excited by evil Spirits ; and the Lord acts, so that he does not consent.

1592. Evil Spirits estimate such a man as nothing, — so, also, do they call him, and know no otherwise ; they have him for an instrument as it were dead . . . because they suppose that they are the man . . .

1940. That when evil Spirits intend evil to the good, the communication is at once closed.

1942. Evil Spirits cannot intend one whit of evil to the Angels, because they are in a still more interior degree . . .

1844 (Index). Evil Spirits admitted into an angelic sphere did not want to remain . . .

1910 (Index). That evils are from evil Spirits . . .

1934 (Index). Evil Spirits occupying the whole of my body, attended with a great tremor and bristling of all the fibres ; and the presentation of direful visions ; but still I was kept safe by the Lord, fearing nothing.

1966. That evil Spirits cannot be with those who believe in the Lord.

— It was before shown that evil Spirits are tortured when Angels look at them ; and the case is almost the same when a man is in faith . . . then the evil Spirits cannot approach ; they begin in like manner to be tortured, and desire to flee away. I have sometimes heard them complaining and lamenting when they were present where there was faith.

2035. Although evil Spirits continually wanted to infest (this novitiate Spirit), and to draw him into their Societies, and, by their arts, to snatch away his goods, still he was safe ; and the evil Spirits were permitted continually to plot such things, until he felt fear and some straitness ; as is wont to be done with those who are in faith, in order that they may know that the Lord alone protects them . . .

2284. That evil Spirits especially hate little children.

2342. On a state of quietude, and of wrath of evil Spirits.

2372. That whatever evil happens, even the least, comes from evil Spirits. 2923.

— Evil Spirits sometimes said that they were not the cause of some evil happening, because it was as it were fortuitous ; and they did not know that they were [the cause of it] ; thus they did not want to acknowledge that it was from them. But they were answered, that still it was from them, although it was as it were fortuitous and they did not act it from their will ; because the general evil which flows from them has these things as consequences which are as it were continuous with it. Examp.

2395. Once, an evil Spirit, who was only slightly looked at by the Angels, began to lament and supplicate, as it were in the death agony. One appeared to me to be turned into conglomerations of snakes, by a mere look, and the consequent penetrating force.

2398. That evil Spirits are just like brutes which have a faculty of reasoning, thus like rational brutes.

— (Index). That evil Spirits are worse than brutes . . . because they are endowed with the faculty of reasoning . . . 2485.

2403. In certain states, Souls and Spirits are able to be in a Society of the celestials ; as was said of the evil Spirits who were lulled by the singing.

2659. Evil Spirits desire nothing more ardently than to rule man completely, both his interiors, and especially his body ; for thus they seem to themselves to return into the life of the body ; for they quite suppose that they have returned. (See OBSESS, here.)

2797 (Index). That interior good Spirits have no communication with interior evil Spirits, except at the good pleasure of the Lord.

2840. That evil Spirits suppose that they can do much.

2851. I was thus able to know how evil Spirits took out these things from the ideas of my memory, each one according to his own state and his own nature . . .

2872. That evil Spirits cannot desist from attacking the good.

— The evil Spirits who were throwing a shade and contempt upon the things that were being written, were asked whether they were able to desist from attacking. They said they were not ; and therefore I told them, that if their nature is loosened they cannot desist, but if it is held in bonds, they can. This they did not want to admit, although they well know that the case is so. In a word, the moment the bond is loosened, they rush into all wiles, cunning, malice, cruelties, and wicked things, in the same proportion that it is loosened . . .

288o. That evil Spirits could not live, unless they served for temptations, penalties, and the like ; from which comes good.

— The life of evil Spirits consists in thinking and committing evil ; for in these things they place the delight of life . . . and therefore if restraint were put upon them in these things, and they were forcibly held to good, they not only could not live, but they could not even be reformed, that is, bent to good ; and therefore they are permitted to be of service in such things . . .

—^e. They also have their comfort from hope ; namely, when they intend anything of fraud ; and desire and have hope of doing evil, then they have comfort, and are in quietude . . .

2888. On the interior evil Spirits of the World of Spirits. That ability is given to resist the evil, even with violence.

2902. That evil Spirits cannot operate anything with those who are persuaded.

2906. On Spirits who in life appear good in the eyes of men, and who within are evil.

2911. I observed how man is thus bent by the Lord, by cupidities, by means of persuasion from uses ; thus into cupidities by the evil, and out of cupidities by means of the good ; which, in this state, it was given me to perceive with perfect ease ; the evil Spirits could not flow in without its being at once bent.

2912. The evil Spirits said—when they were thus as it were separated from me—that thus they can do nothing, supposing that in that case they were cast out.

2918. How man is led to good ends even by the evil.

2922b. That there is no one except for the sake of use, even evil Spirits . . .

2924. That evil Spirits regard man as a vile slave, except those who suppose that they are the man.

2943. That when evil Spirits and others are kept in a bond, they suppose they are upright from themselves.

3037. That evil Spirits are the cause of evil coming to them.

3047. On the nature of evil Spirits.

— The interior evil Spirits are such that their malice and deceitful nature cannot be described . . .

3078. I was permitted to tell evil Spirits that their life is no other than the life of wild beasts ; for they act from instinct ; and they know no otherwise than that they live a life as wild animals do . . . The ferine life of evil Spirits is worse and more obscure in this respect : that they are carried by instinct against good and truth, which they derive from the fact . . . that they were born men.

3088. On the more subtle evil Spirits in the line of the zenith, at various heights.

3101 (Index). Evil Spirits know no otherwise than that they are in the life of the body ; and that they are not Spirits . . .

VOL. II.

3133. In general, evil Spirits cannot endure a sphere of faith . . .

3232. From this it was given me to know, that evil Spirits are compelled to sleep when man does ; and thus to cause the man to sleep well, although he is surrounded by evil Spirits. Otherwise, they would lie in wait for the man . . . for they would perceive, if not asleep, that they are Spirits separate from the man. To prevent this, the Spirits must sleep.

—^e. When they know no otherwise than that they are the man, they do not injure him ; this would be to injure themselves ; whereas, when the man sleeps, and they are awake, they are able to know it. See 3418.

3350. (When any subject is mentioned, evil Spirits think only of the vilest things in connection with it.) Examp.

3398^e. The interior evil Spirits . . . have their head for a tail, and their feet upwards.

3458. I said concerning (evil Spirits) when reformed, that there are horrors, terrors, shames, and the like, which are excited in them by means of punishments and vastations ; until at last they have acquired such a habit, that at the least advertence they are on their guard and are thus held back . . . (but) the same nature still remains. 3849.

3525. With every man there are two angelic Spirits . . . whose office it is to moderate and rule the evil Spirits who come to him . . . and, besides, there are Spirits who suppose themselves to be the man ; one, two, three, who are the subjects of the World of Spirits . . .

3549. That evil Spirits are dispersed from those who are kept by the Lord simply in the Knowledges of faith. 3614.

3572. On evil Spirits who want to enter into the mysteries of faith.

3573. That evil Spirits snatch away truth and good although they do not know it.

3624^e. These are reflections of thought ; and the longer anyone is kept in them, the more is he infested by evil Spirits.

3640. The evil who are in the interior sphere cannot be looked at by the Angels, because they are thus turned into serpents and direful insects ; and therefore they have no communication with Heaven, nor with the Grand Man, except an external one ; they are ruled by the Lord by means of an influx of external things . . . and therefore Heaven is closed to them. Hence it is evident that their ideas . . . are bound to various objects, and thus are phantasies which cannot be described . . . in fact they are bound to filthy and obscene objects ; and thus they think like delirious and insane persons, not knowing what they think . . . 3845.

[D.] 3642. If (evil Spirits) in the other life knew their companions, and were not held to common ends, they would rush at one another ; for every one desires to command and to destroy another.

3645. In a Society of evil Spirits, each one supposes another to be nothing, because they are in an almost similar idea ; thus each one supposes that it is he who thinks . . . Thus all evil Spirits say of their companions that they are nothing . . .

3653. That the endeavour of the interior evil Spirits is to kill. (See KNIFE, here.)

— I spoke to them, and showed them that their perpetual endeavour is to kill me, but that they are withheld by the Lord ; so that they scarcely know that they are endeavouring to do so ; but the moment the bond is relaxed they rush, which they confessed with shame.

3686. There are Societies (of good Spirits and Angels) ; they see each other, converse together, and dwell together in the greatest light . . . But it is otherwise with evil Spirits, who do not appear to each other except on stated occasions.

3755. (How evil Spirits are used by the Lord to strengthen and appropriate delights to man.)

3756. That evil Spirits know neither what is true nor what is evil.

—^e. I therefore concluded that they know and perceive nothing. Hence it is evident, that they have no life.

3821. That evil Spirits are continually in the endeavour to do evil.

3835. Evil Spirits cannot endure them, because they cannot apply anything to themselves ; they understand the interiors of their idea ; and therefore the evil Spirits complained of them . . . I perceive that the evil Spirits are infested by them ; and that the evil Spirits also infest them in a certain manner . . . I perceived the sphere of the evil Spirits to be in the highest degree contrary to them . . .

3842. How the interior evil Spirits flow in.

—^e. When they perceived that I was reflecting upon their influx, they were very indignant, and wanted to withdraw, but knew not whither.

3843. They flatter every cupidity which arises ; and when they can keep man in any cupidity, they are in their life and delight . . . They then suppose that they live as man ; for they then appropriate his life as their own. But when they . . . are with one who will not allow himself to be perverted by them . . . they cannot live with him . . . They intensely inspire adulteries and hatreds . . .

3851. On evil Spirits endeavouring to infest me.

3855. A certain one who . . . was in such a sleep, that he cared nothing whatever for the infestations of evil Spirits . . . The evil Spirits infested, but confessed that they could do nothing.

3893. On evil Spirits.

— It was given him to perceive how much evil Spirits flow in ; and he wondered that on every side he perceived the endeavour to inflict evil ; but as they do not come to my perception, I perceived that there are endeavours of evil from the surrounding sphere, but that they are prevented by the Lord from flowing in . . . and therefore, that if the Lord did not protect me, I should perish every instant ; and so would all the men of this Earth.

3909. That evil Spirits acquire force from numbers.

3965. But the evil Spirits said that they were not their Subjects . . .

3977. But afterwards, when the Knowledges of faith are confirmed, the Lord endows him with conscience, so that he believes them without the confirming things ; and he then rejects all reasonings. This sphere is angelic ; and evil Spirits cannot be in it ; whereas, so long as he is in the state of the confirmation of them, and when he reasons about them in order to convince himself concerning truths, the Spirits can be present . . .

3990. Evil Spirits, as is their wont, are continually in falsities and denials concerning the Lord . . .

4004. The ideas of evil Spirits are represented by circumflections of the body ; and by such things as appear.

4034. I observed that evil Spirits are kept speaking the things which are to be taken note of by me . . . From which it is evident, that even the things which I have learned through evil Spirits, I have learned from the Lord alone.

4038. [Evil Spirits] are not reformed ; but remain in the state in which they had been ; and only the filthy things, and the false things of the corporeal memory, and of the ideas of interior things, are subdued by means of vastations and punishments, and become as it were dead . . . so that [the evil Spirits] may serve for uses. Examp. 4111.

4044. Evil Spirits are as it were in a chain with the particulars of the memory with those who think evils . . .

4079. I have very frequently observed that whatever evil Spirits infuse is as their Own . . . For they want to rule man ; and do not allow man to be anything . . .

4086. Certain evil and deceitful Spirits are in Hell, but appear in the World of Spirits ; as, for example, the most deceitful over the head are in Hell under the buttocks . . .

4125. The evil Spirits at once knew whatever evil I had thought and done . . .

4129. That evil Spirits must obey.

— From this it was given to know that when the Lord rules man's thoughts and speech through Angels, the evil Spirits cannot but think in like manner ; and they then know no otherwise than that it is from themselves. And the case is the same with a preacher of evil life; while he is preaching good things, the evil Spirits think the same things, and excite them; but when the preacher is in his own life, the evil Spirits have the dominion.

4130. On evil Spirits.

— Evil Spirits continually and for years, with the most consummate skill and malice; with wiles, threats, and plots innumerable, have laboured to destroy these things [which I have written] concerning the interior sense of the Word.

4138. I perceived that no misfortunes or fortuitous evils can happen to the man who is with the Lord; for there were evil Spirits present when any horse threatened harm; and they were suddenly cast down. They who were with me said that from such things they could perceive what kind of Spirits they are who bring misfortunes along with them; which was afterwards confirmed.

4139. I perceived why evil Spirits are more cunning than good ones; and also why the evil Spirits attack, and the good ones defend; because the evil ones think nothing but evil, and to injure; in this consists their delight.

4164. Evil Spirits can be remitted into the state of their infancy and childhood . . .

4189. Certain evil Spirits above the head . . . supposed themselves to be subtle; to whom it was given to say, that they are grosser than all the rest. The more subtle the evil are, the grosser they are . . .

4204. I observed that whenever the idea of this returns, the evil Spirits blow it up . . .

4213. When evil Spirits flow in with their ideas, either speaking or not, they make them as it were alive . . .

4228. If he thinks or speaks evil (he should say), It is not mine, but belongs to evil Spirits; and therefore it is not appropriated to me . . .

4268. The means of reducing into order are indefinite in number; one is, that certain evil Spirits are admitted among the upright . . .

4279. That evil Spirits, too, can speak what is good; and thus be of service.

— Evil Spirits can be let into a state to speak good and pious things, by the removal of corporeal things in certain states, so that they are as it were out of themselves, as also evil men can when in fear . . . They can also do so when let into a state of the love of self and of the world . . . They can do so when they are obscured, so that they do not know what they are saying . . . They can also do so when bereaved of rationality, as is often the case. Thus are Spirits led into good in the other life, and are vastated.

4299. The life of evil Spirits consists in cupidities; and in proportion as they are removed from cupidities they are removed from their life . . . and therefore in order that they may live and be prepared for some use, they are sometimes permitted to pass their time in their cupidities; nay, in the hope of doing evil; so long as there is the hope of doing evil . . . they are kept in their life. This was shown in the case of some Spirits into whom there was injected what is contrary to hope . . . they receded in the proportion that the hope was diminished.

4316. There was an evil Spirit, who, when he said what was good, could only do so tacitly . . .

4318. That the faculties even of evil Spirits are more excellent.

4334. That evil Spirits are insane, and endeavour with all their might to lead away others to their own Hell, and thus torment them.

4339. The phantasies of evil Spirits appear quite real . . .

4370. On deceitful and evil Spirits who desire to torment innocent little children . . .

—^e. They are punished; and, when they wanted to thrust themselves into an innocent state, there came other punishers, who were more subtle; and who tormented them until they desisted.

4375. That the evil esteem no friend; they all want to torment.

4379. How many evil Spirits there are around me; looked at by the Angels.

— On awaking, I saw around me innumerable serpents . . . who were evil Spirits that were looked at by the Angels. At other times, I have seen a host of evil Spirits around me as wandering stars . . . and still I was kept safe by the Lord . . .

4395. On a certain kind of explorers who excite the filthy things of evil Spirits.

4471. On the state in general of evil Spirits before and when they are let down into Hell.

— Evil Souls or evil Spirits first return into their own life, and then exercise their wickednesses in the World of Spirits according to their natures; and then, when they go beyond the delight of their life, they are punished, and this frequently, until they are deterred; which may be done up to 20, 50, 100, 200 times, and more. But still it is provided by the Lord that they shall not do evils to the good; and the things they endeavour to inflict are turned by the Lord into good, being the temptations by means of which the good are strengthened. After a few years of this kind of life, in the exercise of their wickednesses, they gather their evils together, and become nothing but the evils of their own kind, and goods are then taken away from them; and so at last their wickedness is consummated, and they are completely frightened from doing evils; and thus they cast themselves headlong into the Hell where their like are; and there they torment one another in various ways, with all the power of their magic; and meanwhile they sit like skeletons, or deformed in body and face; and are sometimes inwardly tormented; and now and then are remitted into delights among themselves; but they return to the things above said. They then dare not rise up into the World of Spirits; for they at once know that grievous punishments await them; therefore they recede into their Hells. At last, after many ages, during which they have been tormented in this manner, their corporeal delights can be to some extent lulled; and they are then sometimes elevated into the World of Spirits, in order that they may serve for the lowest uses, having a little life, and with scarcely any delight . . . Such is the lot of the evil. 4472. D.Min. 4791.

[D.] 4472^e. When horror of the penalty prevails, it is their consummation.

4531. Even the worst infernal Spirits have the capacity of understanding truth, so that they completely apprehend and Know it. They are let into this state now and then . . . but still after that state they were the same as before. 4532, Ex. 4540.

4545. Evil Spirits are sometimes let down into the Hells, and led about; and thus their quality is shown to the Angels . . .

4571. (Evil Spirits the cause of diseases.) 4572. 4585. See 4591.

4573. (How evil Spirits can keep themselves in the World of Spirits.)

4585. The infernals are only permitted to flow into the cupidities and falsities with man, and not into his members (except in diseases).

4593^e. Evil, infernal, or diabolical Spirits at once feel aversion at the first perception of that which is truly Divine; not so at that which agrees with them.

4629^b. Hence it is that evil Spirits and Genii, because they do not correspond, appear in the light of Heaven as monsters . . .

4716^c. (The wakefulness and life) with evil Spirits are utterly obscure, because they know nothing except to act from the nature of evil.

4734. Around the cities here and there, and also elsewhere, there appear marshes or lakes; and also great ruins of houses. The habitations of the evil are there; the evil Spirits dwell in caves and darksome places, to which there is a descent by steps . . .

4753. On the devastation and condemnation of the evil, that they are from themselves.

5469. Evil Spirits who care nothing for what is Divine can do nothing by any art or phantasy, unless they have with them in society Spirits who know what is Divine . . .

5509. It is a very common thing, that evil Spirits are permitted to do evil, which nevertheless the Lord turns into good . . .

5596. (How it is that the infernals can, for the moment, acknowledge heavenly truths.)

5645^e. For if evil Spirits knew where man is, and that they are with man, they would completely destroy him; thus they would destroy the whole human race . . .

5656. They can by their art draw to themselves anyone they see, and present him as present among them, however he may resist; and then they reveal his evils; for evil Spirits can do this, especially Sirens; and thus they accuse and condemn.

5778. On the malice of evil Spirits, and on their influx (into man).

— The evil Spirits with man seek for many methods by which they seduce him, and it has been given to know from experience how the case is. Ex.

5838^b. Then some of those who went forth bound themselves to the evil Spirits below; the evil Spirits bound them to themselves by their arts; they, when they entered the Society, were bound to the evil Spirits; for he who is once bound to them, is kept bound by them wherever he is; and therefore the evil Spirits communicated with those who were within the Society, and thus could do harm to the Society . . .

6032. It was granted to a certain evil Spirit to be led by Heaven to do goods . . . almost like an automaton . . . By which it was shown, that there is no reception, appropriation, and conjunction by the good which a man does not receive in will or affection from himself . . .

—². This may be illustrated by the fact, that an evil Spirit cannot be led from evils except by means of penalties. Examp.

D. Min. 4563. That evil Spirits have rationality.

4600. That evil Spirits are not to be dispersed.

— I thus learned by experience that (diabolical Spirits) are not expelled, but that they depart of their own accord. They are obstinate, and take delight in combats . . . but when they are let alone, they depart of their own accord.

4694^a. Although evil Spirits know that they speak through others . . . still they are not willing to know that they think and are carried along by others . . .

4718. Thus the exterior and interior evil Spirits would be removed . . .

4807. (On a number of evil Spirits who had hated me during their life on earth.)

E. 121. (The persecution of the good by evil Spirits.) Sig. and Des.

140^b. The disagreement of (the will and the understanding) appears manifestly in evil Spirits; when they are turned to good Spirits, they, too, understand truths, and acknowledge them, almost as if they were enlightened; but the moment they turn away from them, they return to the love of their will, and see no truth; nay, they deny those which they had heard. 547^c. 832^a.

209^b. He who believes that there is power from Man's proprium against evils and falsities, is much mistaken; for it is evil Spirits who are conjoined with the Hells who inject into men evils and the falsities thence; and these Spirits are numerous, and each one is conjoined with a number of Hells, in each of which there are also many . . .

581⁶. That the cunning and malice of infernal Spirits does not injure those whom the Lord protects. Sig.

586. By 'demons' are meant infernal Spirits . . .

—². There is such insanity with infernal Spirits, that they believe themselves to be gods . . .

642². When an evil and infernal Spirit attacks anything Divine . . . that evil Spirit at once deprives himself of the Lord's protection; and he then falls into evils and falsities of every kind which are from Hell; and then at the same time he falls into the hands of those who are thence, and are called punishers . . .

783². Falsities have power against falsities . . . This is very evident from the power of infernal Spirits among each other . . .

—⁴. Infernal Spirits believe themselves to be more powerful than all others; but this is because they prevail against those who are in evils and the falsities thence; thus an infernal Spirit against an infernal Spirit . . . But this power may be compared to that of an ant against an ant . . . And, further, infernal Spirits are elate in mind, and on the slightest occasion want to be called robust, mighty, and heroes.

C. 53. If simple Spirits come among diabolical Spirits, they are allured to do them good . . . This is the great strength which evil Spirits acquire; without aid from and as it were conjunction with them, they have no power whatever . . .

Evolve, Unfold. Evolvere.

Evolution, Unfolding. Evolutio.

A. 964. There is instilled into them an ardour of unfolding themselves. As he is wrapped in a single fold, he supposes that it can be easily unfolded; but when he begins to unfold himself, he goes on for a long time, the unfolding continually lasting, until he despairs.

996. As external things are unfolded or unwathed . . .

7542². In the other life these things are unfolded in the order in which they are disposed . . .

8455². In the other life exterior things are successively unfolded even to inmost things . . .

H. 450. These Angels seemed as it were to unfold the coat of the left eye . . . This unfolding from the face is also an appearance; for thereby is represented that he is coming from natural into spiritual thought.

576. A man can consider, evolve, and conclude more things in a minute, than he can utter or write in half-an-hour.

S. 63. These two senses are unfolded from the natural sense of the Word . . . This unfolding is instantaneous.

65. How the unfolding of these senses is effected, Ex.

67⁶. Thus it may be seen how what is spiritual and celestial is unfolded and drawn out from the natural sense of the Word . . .

W. 220. As such is the evolution and putting forth of the degrees . . .

M. 132². The arcana of wisdom written on the paper, which they would now discuss and unfold. —³.

133⁶. The ends and causes through which they might unfold and disclose this arcanum.

Exacerbate, Exasperate. Exacerbare. Exacerbation, Exasperation. Exacerbatio.

A. 6420. 'They exacerbate him' (Gen.xlix.23)=resistance by falsities . . . For in proportion as there is resistance there is exacerbation, when there is combat. E.448⁶.

9306. Lest He be angry on account of evils, that is, lest He be exasperated on account of transgressions.

9308. 'Lest thou exasperate Him' (Ex.xxiii.21)=turning away from Him through falsities from evil; as is evident from the signification of 'to exasperate' or excite anger, when said of the Lord . . .

P. 186. If a man were to perceive that he is continually being withdrawn from his delight, he would be exasperated as against one who wanted to murder him. 211².

M. 360. When the will is attacked, it exasperates itself in the understanding . . .

361². Such is the exasperation of love which is called zeal.

E. 677². He is then exasperated against truths and goods . . .

SSS². Thus truth and falsity are presented together as if they were conjoined, by which the Angels of Heaven are exacerbated, and turn entirely away.

A. 2832⁴. Hence it is so often said 'to exalt the horn;' for 'exaltation'=power from what is interior. E.316⁵.

2868⁶. 'Her name was called Reumah' (Gen.xxii.24) involves . . . exaltation, which is meant by 'Reumah.'

8261⁵. Songs involved the exaltation of the Lord . . . on account of His victory over spiritual enemies. Gladness of heart, with the exaltation of the Lord, is what is meant by 'glorification.'

[A.] 8264. 'Because exalting He hath exalted' (Ex. xv.1)=that He has manifested His Divine in the Human . . . for the Divine is the Highest . . . 8342.

8271. 'I will exalt Him' (ver.2)=that now He has Divine worship. 'To exalt,' when it is said of a man that he will exalt Jehovah, = worship; for Divine worship consists in the exaltation of the Lord relatively to self; which takes place according to the degree of the humiliation of self before the Lord . . . Whereas, if a man exalts himself in the Lord's sight, he closes the interiors of his mind against the reception of good and truth from the Lord.

10582^e. This is meant by . . . 'to exalt one's self as the eagle' (Obad.4).

H. 517². Which love is exalted by the hope of becoming an Angel.

S. 72. The points and signs over the letters exalt the sense.

W. 410^e. The life of the love is according as he had exalted his affections by means of truths . . . For the affections of love are exalted and perfected by means of truths . . .

R. 279². Because a song exalts . . .

—3. That songs existed for the sake of the exaltation of the life of love, and thence of the joy. Ill.

M. 69^e. They are exalted according to the wisdom in the husbands.

144. The Angels perceive these deliciousnesses to be exalted and inilled in themselves when they ascend from chaste married partners . . .

183. As the speech was concerning marriage love, there was keen attention, and full reception, and a consequent exaltation as from the fire of love in the discourse of the Angels.

T. 349. That the abundance of truths . . . exalts and perfects faith. 351.

353². The exaltation of faith by means of the abundance of Truths may be illustrated by a comparison with the exaltation of the sound . . . from a number of musical instruments . . .

D. 2293^e. Thus its sense is exalted . . .

E. 405⁹. 'To exalt the paths' (Is. xlix.11)=to be in genuine truths; for 'paths'=truths, which are said to be exalted from good; and the truths which are from good are genuine truths.

411⁹. 'The God of my salvation shall be exalted' (Ps. xviii.46)=that He is to be worshipped by means of truths from good. . . 'To be exalted,' when said of God, is said of worship from good through truths.

684²¹. Truth is said 'to be exalted' when it becomes interior; in the same degree also it becomes powerful.

714²⁴. 'To set on high' (Ps. xci.14)=to lead to interior truths.

799⁶. 'To set up upon a rock' (Ps. xxvii.5)=to instruct in interior truths.

6206^o. The spiritual sphere with a man or Spirit is an exhalation flowing out from the life of his loves.

6571^o. This is manifest from the sphere that exhales from such from afar. 7454^o.

6872^o. That a man is altogether as his love . . . is manifest from the Angels, . . . who when seen appear as forms of love. The very love not only shines forth from them, but also exhales, so that you would say that they are nothing but loves.

7766. Damnation is felt through the stench that exhales from them . . .

8146^o. They are exhalations from their life.

8343^o. Falsities and evils are exhalations from the Hells.

9606. Spheres proceed from every angelic Society in Heaven, and from every Angel in a Society; these spheres exhale from the life of the affections of truth and good of each one . . .

10188^o. They who are in Hell are in externals and not in internals; there also exhale from their externals evils and falsities thence which appear around them like smoke from a furnace.

H. 429. Through those caverns are exhaled nauseous and fetid stenches . . .

574. From every Hell there exhales a sphere of the cupidities in which they are who are there.

585. When they are open, there exhales thence either as it were fire . . .

588^o. Many Hells communicate with each other by means of exhalations . . .

W. 293. Each thing is encompassed with something like that which is within it, and this is continually exhaled from it.

P. 23. From Hell there is continually exhaled evil and falsity; and from Heaven there is continually exhaled good and truth . . .

196. According to these spheres exhaled from their affections through their thoughts . . .

M. 263. From his body there exhaled a stinking and unclean heat.

T. 331. In the Spiritual World there is exhaled from everyone the sphere of his love.

365^o. Sympathies and antipathies are nothing but exhalations of affections from minds.

D. 2623. In the other life, delights are . . . as it were their exhalations.

2868. That thought is perceived by Spirits like an exhalation.

4631^o. That mist is an exhalation from them.

D. Min. 4786. An exhalation from deep Hells exhaled from him while he was speaking.

—e. The exhalation from this Hell, when it is opened, is such, that it infects those who encounter it . . . for it excites their interior evils.

4829. Many spheres produce an effect like that from exhalations.

E. 374^o. To cause his soul to exhale (Job xxxi.39)= to empty out the spiritual life.

632^o. There arises an exhalation thence, and its contagion infects those who walk over it.

1098. That their Hell is such, is evident from the exhalations thence, which are profaned truths and goods . . .

Existence, Coming forth, Manifestation. Existentia.

See under BE.

A. 42. Nothing exists—datur—in the universe which is not under some general, in order that it may exist and subsist.

932^e. It can never be but that a Church shall exist somewhere on the earth.

1034^e. It has been provided that such a man shall never exist again . . .

1096². This is the order of the existence of all things.

1432. Each and all things come forth and subsist from the Lord; and from the union of His human essence with the Divine one; and from the conjunction of both . . . with His Kingdom in the Heavens and on earth.

1619. Nothing ever exists before the sight of the Angels which is not representative . . .

1685². Such combats never exist before . . .

1807³. The reason that each and all things are representative, is that they have come forth, and continually come forth, that is, subsist, from the influx of the Lord through Heaven; (like) the human body, which comes forth and subsists through its soul; and therefore each and all things in the body are representatives of its soul.

1970. By genuine visions are meant visions . . . of those things which really exist in the other life.

—². When this sight is opened . . . the things which actually exist with Spirits are seen . . .

2621. (See the first of the important extracts under BE, here.)

2628. 'Born to (Abraham)' = to come forth from the Divine.

— (Thus) the Lord's Divine Human came forth from the Divine Itself. Tr.

2886. That which is unconnected does not come forth.

3158. A free state of deliberation . . . exists every moment while man is being reformed and regenerated.

3404². The eternal is the infinite as to manifesting.

3562. Unless what is lower exists—sit—from interior things, as an effect from its own efficient cause, it does not exist.

3627. It is a general rule, that nothing can come forth and subsist from itself, but from, that is, through another thing.

3674. 'Isaac sent Jacob' = the beginning of the manifestation . . . of the Lord's Divine Natural.

3680. 'He sent him to Padan Aram' = the beginning of the manifestation by means of the Knowledges of that good.

3937². It is the reception of life of which manifesting is predicated.

—³. Manifesting is predicated of the Lord also, but only while He was in the world; and He there put on the Divine being. But when He became the Divine being, manifesting could no longer be predicated of Him otherwise than as something proceeding from Him. That which proceeds from Him is that which appears as manifesting in Him; whereas it is not in Him, but is from Him, and causes that men, Spirits and Angels come forth, that is, live. To come forth, with man, Spirit, and Angel, is to live . . .

[A.] 422². (Thus) before the organic forms of the body came forth, there was use . . . Use flows in from the Lord, through Heaven, according to the order and form according to which Heaven is ordered by the Lord, thus according to correspondences: thus man comes forth, and thus he subsists.

434⁵. There does not exist—datur—anything in the nature of things which does not come forth and subsist from other things. That which comes forth and subsists from other things is called a general; and the things of which it consists and subsists are called particulars.

—³. Corporeal things have come forth and have subsisted from the things which are of his spirit . . .

469². The Lord's Divine Human is the Divine manifesting—existens—from Divine being . . . and He Himself is Divine being; for Divine being and Divine manifesting—existens—are one. Sig. . . For the Divine manifesting—existens—is the Divine Itself proceeding from Divine being; and is in image a man . . .

472³. For without influx through Heaven, by which it becomes the Divine manifesting—existens, Divine being could not have been communicated to any Angel . . . That as to the Divine Itself the Lord is Divine being, and as to the Divine Human Divine manifesting—existens, see 4687. The Lord's Human itself could not receive any influx from Divine being, unless the Human in Him had been made Divine; for that must be Divine which receives Divine being. (Thus) the Divine truth does not proceed immediately from the Divine Itself, but from the Lord's Divine Human.

498⁵. For 'form' = the essence of a thing; and 'aspect' = the manifestation thence; and as good is the essence itself, and truth is the manifestation thence . . .

508⁴. It is a fallacy of merely natural sense, that from the first creation there has been impressed on seeds the quality of growing into trees and flowers, and of prolificating themselves, and that thence is all coming forth and subsistence. And if they are told that nothing is able to subsist unless it continually comes forth, according to the canon, that subsistence is a perpetual coming forth; and also that everything which is unconnected with what is prior to itself falls into nothing, the Sensuous of the body . . . does not apprehend it; nor that each and all things subsist just as they have come forth, by influx from the Spiritual World, that is, through the Spiritual World from the Divine.

527². It is the Divine truth, which proceeds from the Divine good, that is, from the Lord, from which all things have come forth and do come forth . . . 688^{0e}.

5711. Whatever in universal nature has no correspondence with the Spiritual World does not come forth; it has no cause from which it may come forth, consequently from which it may subsist . . . Effects cannot subsist unless the cause is constantly in them.

—². So is it with the cause relatively to the end; unless this cause also comes forth from its cause, which is the end, it is not a cause . . . Hence it is evident, that as each and all things in the world have come forth from the Divine, so they do come forth from the Divine.

6040. Influx is circumstanced as are coming forth and subsistence; nothing comes forth from itself, but from what is prior to itself, thus at last from the first; that is, from being and manifesting—existere—from itself. It is also evident that all things subsist from the Same; for subsistence is circumstanced in the same way as coming forth; because to subsist is to perpetually come forth. H.g. W.303.

6451. The gathering or manifestation of spiritual good in the goods and truths of the Natural. Tr.

649^e. That which is called fortune, is from the influx of Providence into the ultimates of order, where it so comes forth.

6574^e. See END.

7381³. The ideas of space come forth from measurement by times.

7384^e. The Natural comes forth through the Spiritual.

7488. All evils come forth from (these loves) . . . All goods come forth from (these loves); and as all goods, so do all truths come forth thence.

7520. From the presence (of Heaven), there is the manifestation of such things with the evil. Sig.

7643. Evil is not from the Lord; but it comes forth from man . . .

7695. All haste comes forth from some affection that has been excited.

7879. The evils which are there all come forth through influx from the Hells . . . and they come forth according to the state of the evil in which are the Spirits who are being devastated; and the state of evil comes forth according to the privation of good and truth.

7906². The purification of truth from falsity in man can never exist without fermentation . . . But after this combat has come forth . . .

8162. Horror comes forth from the mere influx of falsity and evil with those who have conscience.

8164. The anxieties which then come forth . . . They come forth from the hurting of the natural life.

8211². Whatever comes forth in the natural world, derives its origin and cause from those things which come forth in the Spiritual World.

8237². The Angels (can see) all things which come forth (in the Hells).

8470². As these things involve those which come forth in the Societies in Heaven . . . 8472.

— . All there communicate with each one ; hence comes forth the good of all in general . . .

8603². Each and all things in universal nature come forth from interior things in their order . . .

8695^e. The truths of good are truths which are from good, and in themselves are goods ; because they derive their manifesting from good.

8812. The correspondence of such things as come forth in the natural world with those which are in the Spiritual World.

8864^e. That which is inmost reigns universally in the things which are round about . . . for thence is the essential of the manifestation of all things.

9128³. The case is the same with sight as it is with every thing which comes forth—existente, that nothing comes forth from itself, but from what is prior to or higher than itself, thus at last from the First or Highest . . .

9186². Nothing comes forth in Heaven except from (good conjoined with truth).

9224. Faith comes forth from (the good of charity).

9235. This comes forth from (the following circumstance).

9267. The reason 'words'=truths, is that in the Original Language 'word'=that which is something, and that which really exists. Hence it also=truth ; for everything which really exists from being has relation to truth.

9278. The works of the six days, and the rest on the seventh=the things which come forth with man in the first and second states of his regeneration ; and also those which come forth with him when he is regenerate.

9293. Attends not to the deeds, but to the will, from which, through which, and for the sake of which, the deeds come forth.

9327². For the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord is that reality through which all things have come forth, and through which all things subsist.

9331². All falsity which injures . . . derives its manifesting from evil ; for falsity from evil is evil appearing in a form.

9679. The manifestation of the inmost Heaven within that uniting medium. Sig.

9737. 'In carrying it'=manifestation and subsistence. (For 'to carry'=to hold together in a state of good and truth, thus to come forth and subsist.

—^e. Here 'to make'=that it may come forth ; 'to carry'=that it may subsist ; and 'to bear'=that it may perpetually come forth.

9809. For the Heavens come forth from Him . . .

9847. Manifestation and subsistence from good. Sig. . . . (For 'to be encompassed with sockets of gold'=to be continued from good, and to derive manifestation ; and as it=to derive manifestation, it=to derive subsistence ; for that from which anything comes forth it also subsists by ; for subsistence is a perpetual coming forth.

9987. Everything which really comes forth, and which is anything, is from Divine truth. Sig.

10076². From (the Divine truth which proceeds from the Divine Good of the Divine love of His Divine Human) the Heavens have come forth ; and from it they perpetually come forth, that is, subsist ; or, what is the same, from it the Heavens have been created, and from it they are perpetually being created, that is, preserved ; for preservation is perpetual creation, as subsistence is perpetual coming forth.

10158. 'God'=the Divine manifesting ; and the Divine manifesting is the Divine of faith, thus the Divine truth ; for all truth comes forth from good ; for truth is the form of good.

10200. For the things which come forth in the world are images of the things in the Heavens ; because everything natural comes forth from what is spiritual ; that is, from the Divine in the Heavens.

H. 1. Afterwards a New Heaven with a new earth will come into existence.

89. Therefore whatever in the natural world comes forth from the Spiritual World is called a correspondent. It is to be known that the natural world comes forth from the Spiritual World, precisely as an effect does from its efficient cause.

108. That all things which are in the world come forth from the Divine . . .

109. These take place successively and come forth simultaneously in such admirable order . . .

117. From this origin are all things which come forth and appear in the Heavens . . . The reason the Lord in Heaven appears as a Sun, is that it is the Divine love from which all spiritual things come forth ; and, by means of the sun of the world, all natural things. 172.

173. The things which come forth in the Heavens, do not come forth in a similar way to those on earth ; in the Heavens all things come forth from the Lord according to correspondences with the interiors of the Angels . . .

178. Because they correspond, they really come forth.

264. For they place the existence of every thing in what is material.

281^e. Marriage love derives its existence from innocence . . .

1111³. One Divine by itself is not possible, but there must be a trine: this trine consists of being, manifesting and proceeding. Being must by all means come forth; and when it comes forth it proceeds . . . (Thus) the being of an Angel is that which is called his soul; his manifesting is that which is called the body; and the proceeding from both is that which is called the sphere of his life. Without the latter, an Angel neither comes forth, nor exists—est.

—⁴. The Divine called the Father is Divine being; the Divine Human called the Son is the Divine manifesting from that being; and the Divine called the Holy Spirit is the Divine proceeding from the Divine manifesting and from the Divine being. 1116³. —⁴.

716³. Because it here treats of expiation, which is of the Lord alone.

901². If the third day and the seventh were not representative . . . of what is holy, that is of expiation . . .

2776². It is the general belief that . . . by His passion the Lord expiated all iniquities. L. 18. T. 134.

2818. They sacrificed their children, thus believing that they were expiated, and God propitiated.

3400. The separation of sin through good from the Lord is redemption, which is also represented by the expiation by the priest, when he offered the sacrifice of guilt. III.

4503¹⁰. Therefore the inquisition and expiation by means of a calf . . .

—^e. Why such an expiatory process was commanded.

4735¹¹. In like manner in the rest of the . . . expiations. III.

7918². 'To expiate with hyssop, and to become clean' (Ps. li. 7) = external purification.

9262². The whole land was (then) condemned, until it was expiated . . .

—⁶. The reason 'beheading' = expiation, is that by the slaying of various beasts, as by the sacrifices, were signified expiations.

9468⁹. 'The waters of separation and of expiation' (Num. xix. 9) = purification and withdrawal from evils and falsities by means of truths and goods from the Word.

9506. That the propitiatory = cleansing from evils and the remission of sins, is evident from the passages in the Word where propitiation or expiation is mentioned. III.

—⁷. The reason it also = the reception of all things of worship, is that they who are propitiated or expiated, that is, cleansed from evils, are alone heard . . . and not they who are in evils, that is, who are not expiated or propitiated. Therefore Aaron was not allowed to approach the propitiatory until he had cleansed and expiated himself and the people. III.

—⁴. But it is to be known, that these expiations were not real cleansings from evils, or remissions of sins; but that they represented them. 9990³.

9670⁵. The glorification of the Lord's Human up to the Divine good which is Jehovah, is also described . . .

by the process of expiation when Aaron entered into the Holy of holies within the veil. (Lev. xvi.)

9937¹¹. 'That to carry iniquities' = to expiate, thus to remove sins. III.

—⁸. That expiation is a cleansing from evils, thus removal from sins.

9938. (The gifts) were offered for expiations, thus for removals from sins; which are effected through love and faith to the Lord from the Lord.

9950³. The reason Aaron was then clothed in linen garments . . . called the garments of holiness, was that he was then engaged in the offices of expiating the temple, the people and himself from uncleannesses; and every expiation which was effected by washings, burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, represented the purification of the heart from evils and falsities, thus regeneration; and (this) is effected through the truths of faith.

9990². Therefore, from the very animals that were sacrificed, it may be evident what purification or expiation was represented.

10042⁵. The pardoning of sins, expiation, propitiation, and redemption, are nothing but purification from evils and falsities, the implantation of good and truth, and their conjunction; thus regeneration. Refs.

10109. 'They shall eat those things in which there is what is expiated' (Ex. xxix. 33) = the appropriation of good with those who are purified from evils and the falsities thence. . . 'What is expiated' = what is purified from evils and the falsities thence.

10127⁴. As to propitiate and to expiate = (purification from evils and the falsities thence,) it also involves the implantation of good and truth, and the conjunction of both by the Lord. Ex.

10175¹. By the expiation of everyone by silver (Ex. xxx.) is signified the ascription of all things of worship to the Lord, and nothing to one's self, that no one may have merit.

10208. 'Aaron shall expiate upon its horns' (ver. 10) = purification from evils through the truths of faith which are from the good of love. 'To expiate' = purification from evils.

—². The reason the altars were thus expiated, was that the holy things were polluted through the sins of the people . . . III.

—⁴. The reason expiations were made by blood upon the horns of the altars, and not upon the altars themselves, was that the horns were their extremes, and nothing of man is purified unless the extremes are purified. Ex.

10210. 'Of the blood of the expiations of sin' (ver. 10) = through the truths which are from the good of innocence. . . 'The expiations of sin' or of the sacrifice for sin through which there was expiation, = purification from evils and the falsities thence.

[A.10210]⁹. That all expiation was made by means of blood . . . III.

10218. 'They shall give everyone the expiation of his soul in numbering them' (ver.12)=purification or deliverance from evil through the acknowledgment and faith that all the truths and goods of faith and love, together with their ordination and disposition, are from the Lord, and nothing from man. 'To give the expiation of his soul'=to be purified or delivered from evil through the truth of faith, which, here, is to acknowledge that all truths and goods are from the Lord. 10220.

10228. 'To expiate upon your souls' (ver.15)=in order that evils may be removed. (For) 'to be expiated upon their souls'=to be purified or delivered from evils through the truth of faith. 10232.

10229. 'Thou shalt take the silver of expiations from being with the Sons of Israel' (ver.16)=the purifying truths from good which are of the Church. . . 'Expiations'=purification from evils. . . Thus 'the silver of expiations'=truth purifying.

10500. 'Perchance I shall expiate for your sin' (Ex. xxxii.30)=a possibility from the Lord's Divine power with those who have so completely turned themselves away. (For) 'to expiate'=to cause it to be no longer reflected upon, thus that their worship is nevertheless accepted and heard. That expiation also=the hearing and reception of all things of worship, see 9506.

—⁴. Hear (I said), what is meant in the Word by expiation, etc.

— . It is this Human which is called the Son of God; and this it is which expiates, etc.

—⁵. Expiation means the removal of sins, into which man would rush, if he were to approach Jehovah unclothed.

E. 283¹⁴. The propitiatory=hearing and reception of all things from the good of love, and at the same time expiation.

316²³. As all expiations and purifications are effected by means of truths from good, he expiated upon the horns of the altar. III.

412²⁴. 'To expiate the faces (of Esau)' (Gen.xxxii.20) =to captivate his mind-animus.

475⁴. The purification of the external things of the Church, was represented by the sprinkling of the water of expiation, etc.

—¹⁴. As the waters of expiation were prepared from hyssop, it is said, 'Expiate me with hyssop, and I shall be clean.'

496³. By this was represented that all propitiation and expiation is from the Lord's Divine love.

654²⁷. Redemption is signified by 'expiation' . . .

730⁴³. These things (concerning the scape-goat) were commanded, in order that by them there might be represented expiation, that is, purification from evils and falsities.

750²⁵. As all deliverance from evils and falsities, which is expiation, is effected by means of Divine truth and a life according to it, it is said 'to expiate your souls, for it is the blood that expiateth for the soul' (Lev.xvii.11).

805³. That to be saved by the Lord, and also by the passion of His cross, and thus by the Lord, is propitiation and expiation.

800. 'All flesh creeping upon the earth expired' (Gen.vii.21)=that those who were of the last posterity of the Most Ancient Church were extinguished. 805³,Ex.

2901. After the former (Spiritual Church) had expired. . . 'Sarah,' here, = the truth Divine which had expired. 2902.

2908. When all faith, that is, charity has expired . . .

3253. 'Abraham expired and died' (Gen.xxv.8)=the end of the representation by Abraham. 'To expire, and die'=to cease or have an end.

4618. 'Isaac expired and died' (Gen.xxxv.29) = ex-suscitation in the Divine Natural.

6464. '(Jacob) expired' (Gen.xlix.33)=new life there . . . 'To expire' or die=new life.

9336². If the life of Hell with a man were suddenly destroyed, he would completely expire; and if the life of Heaven were suddenly implanted, he would also expire.

H. 590. From Hell there continually breathes forth . . . 591.

W. 172⁹. Even from sand it breathes forth.

T. 470³. From the expiration of exhalations from plants . . .

503². In a loud voice, he blew out . . .

569. All love with man breathes forth delight . . .

585⁹. Every particle of dust or powder breathes forth from its essence a subtle something . . .

600. He expires in the ruins.

D. 3296. I felt something within me like an expiration of air.

5634⁹. The love of self breathed forth with them.

E. 183⁵. 'I have gathered their breath, he expired' (Ps.eiv.29).

257². 'She who hath borne seven shall languish and breathe forth the soul' (Jer.xv.9)=that the Church to which all truths have been given will perish. 721⁷.

750¹² 'To expire' (Lam.i.19)=to exist no longer.

A. 1889. Evident from the explication . . .
1904⁵. The rest of the arcana . . . cannot be unfolded and explained to the apprehension. 1914².

2395. The explications of the Word as to the internal sense . . .

3596. The reason why these things are so briefly explained . . .

3677². To explain these things to the apprehension is very difficult . . .

3982. Evident without explanation. 7294. 7302. 7312.

— The things heretofore stated are such as cannot be clearly explained to the understanding . . . 4269. 4644. 4675. 4988. 5228.

4136². Therefore, if these things were more fully explained, they could not be comprehended.

4893. If further explained, they would fall into shade.

5089. It is not allowable to explain these things more at large . . .

6705². For as everyone wants to appear blameless . . . he either explains or changes the laws of doctrine in his own favour. 6959².

6827. As the supreme sense transcends the human understanding, it is allowable to explain the Word as to its internal sense . . .

6963³. As the things described by leprosy are profane, it is not allowable to explain them particularly . . .

7492². With these . . . the good of love and the truth of faith are explained wrongly . . .

8868. Explained in favour of self-dominion and gain.

9025². These things arise from the former by means of explication . . .

9094. The things contained in this verse . . . can with difficulty be explained to the apprehension.

9424³. Everyone in the Church who thinks from doctrine . . . explains the things which do not coincide with it . . .

9632². As these things with most people are in shade . . . it is needless to explain them further.

H. 311^e. Not illustrated and explained by genuine doctrine from the Word . . .

R. Preface. The explainers (of the Revelation) have conjectured . . .

349⁴. Lest by an explication badly contrived they might profane . . .

E. 17. (These) explications must appear disjointed . . .

1061. The reason the Angel did not explain the vision . . . is that the explanation also constitutes the Word in the letter . . .

Explore. Explorare.

Exploration. Exploratio.

Explorer, Spy. Explorator.

A. 233. To explore the mysteries of faith by means of scientifics is as impossible . . .

448^e. Now, when they want to explore from headstrong reasoning what spirit is . . .

S71. There is no exploration with the Lord, because He knows everything.

925². Therefore, when it is pleasing to the Lord, there is no need to explore by many things the quality of a Spirit; for he can be Known at his first coming.

1085². Those who want to explore spiritual Truths from scientifics. Tr.

1151⁵. Scientifics, by means of which they want to explore spiritual things. Tr. 1163.

1195. Those who by means of reasonings want to explore spiritual and celestial things.

1475. Knowledge—scientia—is such, that it desires nothing more than to introduce itself into heavenly things, and explore them . . .

1640². So that there is no need that many things should be explored; his image is in every word and idea.

1909². Everyone can see what quality of life he possesses, provided he explores the quality of his end.

2242. Visitation is nothing but an exploration of the quality . . . and this exploration is expressed . . . by Jehovah's coming down and seeing.

2323³. Visitation or the exploration of their quality then precedes . . .

2329⁵. In the other life (the learned) have been examined as to what idea they had concerning the one God . . .

2714⁵. They explored the Land of Canaan . . . (See CANAAN, here.)

2982^e. He who wants to know the quality of his trust, let him explore in himself the affections, and the ends, and also the exercises of the life.

3088. Exploration by Divine good. Sig.

3110. Further exploration concerning innocence. Sig.

—². In connection with the initiation and conjunction of truth with good . . . there is the most exquisite exploration . . .

3111. Exploration concerning the good of charity. Sig.

3116. In these three verses it treats of the exploration of the truth which is to be initiated and conjoined with good . . . 3125.

—². The exploration exists with every man who is being reformed, and also with everyone who is receiving remains; but concerning this exploration man knows nothing whatever . . . This exploration is a most exquisite balancing, lest the least of falsity should be conjoined with good, or the least of truth with evil . . .

[A.] 3204. Exploration by the Divine Natural. Sig. . . . 'To say,' here, = to explore, because he interrogated him . . .

3796². These things man is able to explore in himself, but he cannot do so in others; for the ends of everyone's affection are known to the Lord alone. Sig.

4951. They clandestinely explore minds with a purpose of doing harm . . .

5381. They who constitute the province of the kidneys, ureters, and bladder in the Grand Man are of such a genius, that they want nothing more than to explore and search out the quality of others . . .

5383. The methods by which they explore or search out the minds of others are very numerous. Examp.

5385. 'O Jehovah, examine my reins and my heart' (Ps.xxvi.2). . . 'To prove, examine, and search the reins' = to prove, explore, and search the quantity and quality of truth . . .

5424. '(Joseph) said to them, Whence come ye' = exploration.

5432. 'Ye are spies' (Gen.xlii.9) = that they are only after gain. Ex.

—³. These truths of the Church, or those who are of such a character in the truths of the Church, are signified by 'spies coming to see the nakedness of the land.' Ex.

—⁴. That they are spies, may be sufficiently evident from the fact that they seek for nothing but blemishes in those who are in truths from good, in order to accuse and condemn . . . When once they have confirmed in themselves the doctrinal things of their own Church, are they anything but spies? for they laugh at and condemn the veriest truths if they come from any other source . . . because they have no affection of truth for its own sake, still less for the sake of life; but for the sake of gain. When such read the Word, they search it with the sole end of confirming doctrinal scientifics, for the sake of gain; and many of them search the Word in order to see the nakedness of the land . . . 5438. 5447.

5454. 'Let Pharaoh live, ye are spies' (ver.16) = it is certain that ye have truths solely for the sake of gain. 5512. 5513.

6047². The doctrinal things of the Church are first to be learned; and then exploration is to be made from the Word as to whether they are true . . .

6813. When the Spirits of Mercury come to other Societies, they explore from them what they know . . .

7273. After they have first been visited, that is, explored. Explorations take place to the intent that they themselves may apperceive that they cannot but be damned.

8390. He who makes only a universal acknowledgment that he is a sinner, and does not examine himself, that is, see his sins . . .

8394. After man has examined himself . . .

8419. 'To try,' here, = to explore.

8855. It is this which one man explores in another . . . 10153².

10381. He could dexterously explore everything of my thought . . .

10454. 'Minister' . . . here, = truth examining—lustrans, exploring, and apperceiving.

10736². The preacher who was with me was then explored, as to what idea he had concerning one God and three Persons . . .

—^e. In the other life an idea of thought . . . can be presented to view, and thereby everyone is explored as to the quality of his faith.

H. 313. The learned have been explored . . .

426. In the World of Spirits . . . all are explored and prepared. 481².

487^e. These things are said to the end that man may examine himself . . .

496. (Novitiates) are examined by good Spirits . . .

518. They were examined as to whether their Knowledges resided in the memory, or in the life.

525. When they were examined it was found that they believed . . .

563. They were examined by the Angels as to what quality they were inwardly . . .

574². He is examined as to the quality of his cunning . . .

590. By means of this (equilibrium) all are examined as to their quality . . .

N. 164. The man who examines himself in order to perform repentance must examine his thoughts and the intentions of his will . . . This is to examine himself.

Life 6. To examine your lives and conversations by the rule of God's commandments.

64. It is a general principle in all religion that man ought to examine himself . . . 106.

P. 101². They who do not think about the evils in themselves, that is, who do not examine themselves . . . cannot but be ignorant of what evil is, and thus love it on account of its delight . . .

121. Still, all these things do not at all purify man, unless he examines himself . . .

147. As soon as, after examination, a man acknowledges evils to be sins against God . . .

149². Few examine themselves and see their sins; and he who does not see them is in the freedom of them . . .

152. It follows that not only is the external to be examined, but also the internal. If the external alone is examined, the man sees nothing but what he has actually committed . . . Thus he explores the evils of his body, and not those of his spirit; and yet in order for anyone to be reformed, the evils of the spirit must be explored . . . and the spirit can be explored only by a man attending to his thoughts, and especially to his intentions . . . Such is the examination of the internal man, from which, essentially, is the external man examined.

278. The meaning is . . . that man must examine himself, not only his deeds, but also his thoughts, and what he would do if he did not fear the laws and disgrace; especially what evils he regards in his spirit as allowable . . . In order that man may examine himself, an understanding has been given him, and this separate from the will . . .

278a. He says, I am a sinner . . . but still he does not examine himself, and thus does not know any evil . . .

321^r. If a man reflects upon the evils in himself, which is the same as to examine himself . . .

R. 79. 'And hast tried them that say they are apostles' (Rev.ii.2)=that they scrutinize those things which in the Church are called goods and truths. E.100.

153^s. The novitiate Spirit is . . . carried into various Societies . . . and is examined as to whether he is affected with truths . . . or falsities . . .

186. 'I will keep thee from the hour of temptation that will come upon the whole world, to try them that dwell upon the earth' (Rev.iii.10)=that they will be protected and preserved in the day of the Last Judgment . . . They who underwent it were let into temptation, and were examined as to their quality.

211. 'Gold tried in the fire' (ver.18)=the good of celestial love.

519^s. Such fear more than others to examine themselves . . .

525. The Knowledge of sin, and the examination of some sin in one's self, begin repentance. Gen.art.

— Unless a man examines the acts of his life . . .

526. What is better known . . . than that a man ought to examine himself . . .

527. Still, there are some who cannot examine themselves . . .

—². But they who know what sin is . . . and do not examine themselves . . .

528. That actual repentance is to examine one's self . . . Gen.art.

532. True repentance is to examine not only the acts of one's life, but also the intentions of one's will. Gen.art.

—². A man examines the intentions of his will, when he examines his thoughts . . .

533. To explore these two loves is very difficult. Ex.

534. They who do not examine themselves are like . . .

—². They who interiorly examine themselves are like . . .

535. They also perform repentance who do not examine themselves, but still desist from evils because they are sins . . . Gen.art.

539. There are two duties incumbent on man after examination; supplication, and confession.

—^e. Thus is he introduced into the habit of examining himself . . .

561^e. Lead him away from . . . self-examination.

562. Some said, Who can examine himself when he knows himself to be mere sin?

— Some said that whenever they intend to examine themselves, dread and terror seize them.

568^s. The quality of your internal man—of which you know nothing, because you have not examined yourselves, and after examination have not repented . . .

[T.] 570³. See EXAMINE—rimari.

646. After he has stayed (in the other life) for some days, everyone is examined as to his quality, thus what had been his quality in the former world as to religion. When this has been done, the examiners report this to Heaven, and then he is transferred to those who are like him . . .

796⁵. I have been told by the Angel examiners . . .

D. 885. (On the examination of Souls after death.) 921. 926. 932. 2034. 2201, Gen.art.

4482. 'A Land broad in spaces' = the extension of the truth which is of doctrine.

—². 'The stretchings out of his wings shall be the fulness of the breadth of the Land' (Is. viii.8).

5146². See DEGREE.

5478². The truths with those who are in good, extend themselves into Heaven; whereas the truths with those who are not in good do not extend themselves into Heaven.

5658. Gravity in the natural world corresponds to good in the Spiritual World; and extension corresponds to truth; (for) in Heaven there exists neither gravity nor extension, because not space. There do indeed appear with Spirits things which have gravity and are extended, but they are appearances originating from the states of good and truth in a higher Heaven.

6004³. Then the thought extends and diffuses itself widely . . .

6040². A general idea is thus held, which extends itself more widely than if there is adjoined to it the idea of a person.

6147. Extension through the whole Natural where scientifics are. Sig.

6285. Extension from the inmost. Sig. . . The greater the extension thence is, and the better this is according to heavenly order, the more perfect is the state.

6317^c. As they have not confirmed themselves . . . against the things of the Church, their perception is more extended and clear.

6599^c. The capacity of understanding and perceiving is according to the extension (of the thought) into those Societies; that is, according to the influx thence.

6600^c. He who is in the good of charity and faith has extension into the Societies of Heaven, according to the degree in which he is in them . . .

6601. The rest of the Societies . . . to which the thought extended, were not so manifest, being further away.

—². The case with the extension of thought from the objects which are thought of is the same as with the objects of sight. Ex.

—^c. (Thus) the quality of a man's life is exactly according to the Societies into which his thought and affection extend themselves, and according to the quality and quantity of the extension.

6602. That the spheres of the thoughts and affections extend themselves around into the spheres of Societies which are remote . . .

6603. All thoughts and affections enter into, the spheres of the Societies with which they agree. Hence there exist extensions in every direction in freedom, like the extensions of rays from objects in the world . . .

6604². For the extension of the affections and thoughts has its limits . . .

6610. So long as a man lives, the ideas of his thought . . . are multiplied and divided, and are thus extended to various and new Societies; with those who are in evil, to infernal Societies, and in like manner with those who are in persuasions of falsity; but with those who are in persuasions of truth, that is, in persuasive faith, the ideas of thought are mightily contracted. But with those who are being regenerated, the thoughts and affections are continually being insinuated into new Heavenly Societies, and the extension increases . . .

6611. The extension of the sphere into these Societies is given . . . especially by means of temptations . . . He thence receives a more extended and elevated capacity of perceiving.

6612. (Thus) the more exteriorly a man thinks, the less extension he has; and the more interiorly, the greater. . . The difference is like that between the extension of sound and the extension of light.

6614^c. The abundance of the ideas contained (in the thought) is according to the extension into Societies.

6648^c. Each thing which belongs to wisdom is of infinite extension.

7281. 'In stretching forth My hand upon the Egyptians' (Ex. vii.5) = when they observe the Divine power in themselves.

7298^c. The truth which is thus impressed becomes persuasive truth, and is devoid of any extension . . . From (the introduction of truth rationally into the mind) is effected the extension to the spiritual sight as to that truth, even to the opposites . . .

7417. 'Stretch out thy rod' (Ex. viii.16) = that he might show the Divine power. 'To stretch out' = to exercise and show.

7568. 'To stretch out the hand' (Ex. ix.22) = to advert; for by the extension of the hand a thing is adverted to and shown. 7572.

7673. 'Stretch out thy hand' (Ex. x.12) = the dominion of power. (For) 'to stretch out' is predicated of dominion. Ex. and Ill. 7678. 7710. 8183. 8200. 8222. 8305.

—⁴. It is said of Jehovah, that 'He stretches out the heavens;' and then also by 'to stretch out' is signified omnipotence. Ill.

7984³. The limits and degrees of the extension of this measure . . .

8063. 'Boundary' = the extension of truth from good, for all truth has its extension, which extension is sometimes manifested by a sphere; and as it has extension, it has its boundaries. The sphere of the extension of truth is according to the quality and the quantity of the good; for good is like a flame and truth is like the light. The sphere of the extension in the Spiritual World is to the Societies which are round about. Wherever the sphere extends itself, so far there is communication. According to the sphere of the extension in Heaven, that is, according to its quantity and quality, everyone has intelligence and wisdom, and also happiness.

8212. The extension thence of the Divine influx towards those who were endeavouring to inflict violence by means of falsities. . . 'To look,' when predicated of Jehovah, = the extension of his influx. Ex.

8214. That thence the extensions of falsity from evil relapsed upon them. Sig.

8794. Extension into Heaven no further than to the spiritual spheres of good. Sig. (For) 'to set bounds round about' = the extension of the sphere into Heaven to certain fixed limits, which are determined by the good of each person.

—². All the good which is given to man through regeneration has an extension to the Societies in Heaven: this extension differs with everyone in quantity and quality; as to quantity when it goes to more remote boundaries; as to quality when more to the interiors or more to the exteriors of Heaven.

—³. The communication with certain Societies was once taken away, and then so much and such a quality of life remained, as was the quantity and the quality of the extension into the remaining Societies. . .

— . Every Angel, Spirit, and man has a spiritual sphere, and this according to his extension into Societies. This extension is not into the Societies themselves, but into the spheres of their good.

—⁴. Farther, the extension of the life of those who belong to the Spiritual Church is to the angelic spheres in the Second Heaven . . . but not to the Third Heaven.

—⁵. As those who are in good have extension into angelic Societies according to the quality and quantity of their good; so they who are in evil have extension into infernal Societies according to the quality and quantity of their evil . . . His ruling love determines it; for it is this which constitutes the sphere of each person's life, and extends itself according to its quality and its quantity.

8802². They who are intermediate between the Celestial and the Spiritual Kingdoms . . . have that extension into the celestial Societies which is signified by 'they shall go up into the mountain.'

9002². Every affection . . . is of the widest extension, so wide indeed as to surpass all human understanding: the human understanding does not go so far as to know even the genera of its varieties . . .

9340. Extension from truths which are a matter of knowledge to the interior truths of faith. Sig. —³, Ex.

9534. How the case is with the extension and the termination of the sphere of good from the Lord which encompasses and thus protects Heaven . . .

9731. The extension of the Sensuous. Sig. . . This Sensuous . . . extends itself with man from the head down to the loins, and there ceases. It is this extension which was represented by the extension of the network even to the middle of the altar.

9961. 'They shall be from the loins down to the thighs' = the extension of the exterior things of marriage love . . . thus its extension from interiors to exteriors.

—². It is said the extension of marriage love from interiors to exteriors; for there is an extension of all things of love and of all things of faith . . . in the Heavens, because all are conjoined there according to the affinities as to truths of faith and goods of love. Such is the extension in each Heaven. This extension is also into the Heavens which are below, since all the Heavens make one; nay, they even extend themselves to man, so that he also makes one with the Heavens. It is this extension which is meant by the extension from higher or interior things to lower or exterior ones . . .

10675. The multiplication and extension of truth from good. Sig.

10784^e. From a comparison made with the extension of the Heaven which is around our Earth.

H. 49. All communicate through the extension of the sphere which proceeds from each one's life . . . This sphere extends itself in both length and breadth into the surrounding Societies . . . according as the affections are more interior and perfect. The Angels have intelligence and wisdom according to this extension. They who are in the Inmost Heaven . . . have an extension into the universal Heaven. 79. E.99.

—^e. All the extension of the affections and thoughts proceeds according to (the heavenly form). 201. 203, Des. 212^e.

85. The extense which exists in Heaven is not like the extense in the world. In the world the extense is determinate and thus measureable; but in Heaven the extense is not determinate and therefore is not measureable . . .

204. The extension is according to the amount of the confirmation.

266³. Spaces and times . . . take away the extension of the intellectual sight.

419. It has been granted to see the extension of the inhabited Heaven, and also of that which is uninhabited; and I saw that the extension of the uninhabited Heaven is so great, that it cannot be filled to eternity. J.11.

477². According to the ordination (of man's loves) he has extension of thought and affection there; extension into heavenly Societies if his reigning love consists of loves of Heaven; but into infernal Societies if it consists of loves of Hell.

513. These places (of instruction) extend themselves there to a great distance. 514.

J. 9⁷. There is an extension into Heaven of all affections of good and truth . . . and there is an extension into Hell of all affections of evil and falsity . . . The extension of the affections into the Spiritual World is almost like that of the sight into the natural world . . .

12². The extension is according to the increments of wisdom, thus according to the plurality of the Knowledge of truth which are implanted in the understanding, and according to the abundance of the affections of good which are implanted in the will.

W. 9. To think about God from space, is to think about the extense of nature.

209. This doctrine is of more ample extension.

[W.] 307. In their extent these ends are all things of the vegetable kingdom.

333. In their extent these uses may be described by . . .

R. 906. The extension of Heaven from east to west is meant by the length; and the extension of Heaven from south to north is meant by the breadth.

M. 220². The soul is a spiritual substance, which has not extension, but impletion . . .

T. 29². This would be possible if there were no substantial extense there; but as there is, the Angels . . . dwell more distinctly from each other than men do who have a material extense.

31. What is immense is predicated of . . . what is spacious in extense.

56. (Thus) His omnipotence proceeds and operates within the sphere of the extension of good, which is infinite . . . 57².

78². For God is not extended, but still He is everywhere in the extense . . .

475². The lands of the Spiritual World . . . are of spiritual origin, and are therefore not in an extense, but in the appearance of an extense.

D. 978. The extension of the sphere in the Spiritual World . . .

2323. The sphere of their activity does not extend itself far. —^e.

3470. On spirit, that it is extended.

—². In itself, sight is not extended; but the eye is extended; and the objects of sight are also extended.

3704. They have no extension of the understanding . . .

4399. Every affection is of much extension.

4845. All thought has extension into the Societies of another Heaven . . .

6033. Before he returned to his own Societies, into which was the extension of his thoughts . . .

D.Min. 4728. Of little extension or sphere . . .

4750. Relatives have their extension according to the perception that is given of opposites.

4752. He had no extension of his mental view . . .

E. 283³. 'He stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain' = to fulfil Heaven and those who are there with Divine truth, and thereby with intelligence.

304³¹. The extension of intelligence and wisdom. Sig.

388². As the sight of the body has extension into the natural world . . . so the sight of the spirit, which is thought from affection, has extension into the Spiritual World . . .

569¹³. The extension of the Church from one end to the other with them. Sig. . . The extension of truth from one end to the other, is signified by 'from sea to sea;' and the extension of good, by 'from mountain to mountain.'

644¹⁹. 'To stretch out' = the formation and extension of the Heavens in general, and the extension of intelligence and wisdom with everyone who receives.

724^e. The idea of person bounds the thought and its extension into Heaven . . .

775³. From this it is evident that when the mind is in its thought . . . and in its affection, it has extension into each thing of the whole body . . .

799⁵. The fructification of good and the multiplication of truth is signified by 'to enlarge,' and 'to stretch out.'

820⁷. 'To stretch forth the hands' (John xxi. 18) = not to be in freedom. Ex.

837². The wisdom of the Angels is according to the extension (of their thoughts and affections).

944². The proceeding heat, which is Divine good, is the Divine love in its extension.

1076^e. This sphere has an extension into the Heavens in every direction according to the quality and the quantity of the love . . . but into the Hells, if the man is evil. . . But the sphere of the Lord's love . . . has an infinite extension, and creates the Heavens themselves.

1092⁴. That there is such an extension and determination of all a man's thoughts . . . —. 1093².

1093^e. His quality is Known merely from the extension of his thoughts into Societies.

1174². The affections of man, from which are his thoughts, have extension into the Societies there all round . . .

Ath. 68. They think from the idea of an extense or of space; when yet the Divine itself is not to be thought of from the idea of an extense or of space; for thus, instead of God, the purest of nature . . . is thought of . . . The idea of an extense of space does not exist in the Spiritual World.

—^e. Of the proceeding Divine, from which was the universe . . . the idea of an extense can be held, especially in the natural world.

70. Concerning life itself there cannot be held the idea of an extense and of space, as concerning the receptacles of life.

—^e. From Him . . . is the whole of the life of Heaven, concerning the extension of which there can be no thought; but from the extension of the forms of life.

145. The extension of the Divine into the universe is what can be predicated of the proceeding Divine . . . But still the idea of extension falls only into the natural world, and not into the Spiritual World: in the latter, extension, like space and distance, is only an appearance.

191. The proceeding Divine is that which is extended in the universe . . . This is an extense in the created universe . . .

D.Love xii². As in the Spiritual World there is a communication and extension of all the thoughts and affections . . .

D.Wis. iii. 4². Therefore, there cannot take place an extension into any form except the human one; nor can the extension exist except by means of rays of light from wisdom through the medium of heat from love, thus by means of vivified fibres . . .

Inv. 11^e. (The Lord) is in space and in what is extended, but not by means of space and what is extended.

—². The external itself is truth, (because) internals cease in externals, and rest on them as their supports, and supports are truths.

10177⁵. A holy external devoid of an internal penetrates no further than to the first threshold of Heaven, and is there dissipated; but a holy external from an internal penetrates right into Heaven, according to the quality of the internal; thus it penetrates to the Lord . . .

10188². They who are in Hell are in externals and not in internals . . .

10393. That that people was entirely in externals devoid of any internal, is signified by the golden calf . . . 10397. 10407.

10400². All those are in externals devoid of an internal who are in the loves of self and of the world. Ex.

10412². They who are in externals devoid of an internal want to be worshipped as a god . . .

10420. They who are in externals separated from an internal all turn themselves away from what is Divine . . . Sig. and Ex. 10422. 10429. 10533, Ex.

10481². The reason they who are in externals separated from an internal have no power to resist the evils and falsities which are from Hell. Sig. and Ex.

10483. All who are in Hell are in externals separated from what is internal, because they are in the loves of self and of the world . . .

10484. Those who are in externals from what is internal. Sig.

10489. What is external separated from what is internal is Hell with man.

10494. Lest what is true and good from Heaven should enter into the external when the internal is closed. Sig.

10500². When what is internal is completely closed, the internal of the Church . . . is neither denied nor acknowledged . . . and then a holy external can exist . . .

10506. They who are in externals separated from what is internal cannot receive anything from Heaven; for it is the internal which receives thence, and the external devoid of it receives from no other source than Hell.

10536. The quality of their external, that it is devoid of what is Divine. Sig.

10546. Whether you say the external of worship and of the Church, or Hell, it is the same. Ex.

10547. The external of worship, of the Church, and of the Word, in which are internal things. Sig.

10559². All who are in externals devoid of what is internal, if they reverence, adore, and as it were love God . . . do so for the sake of themselves . . . and if they do not obtain what they desire, they desert God. Sig.

10571. That what is Divine must be in the external of the Church, of worship, and of the Word. Sig.

—². The external which Moses represents is an external not so separated from what is internal, as is the external in which is the nation itself . . .

10575. Everything Divine of Heaven and the Church upon what is external separated from what is internal. Sig.

10582. What is obscure and false of faith such as exists with those who are in externals devoid of what is internal. Sig.

[A.] 10584. That the externals of the Word, of the Church, and of worship will be seen, but not the internals. Sig.

10593. The external which encompasses man in the world is accommodated to uses in the world; it is this external which is rejected when the man dies: whereas the external which is accommodated to uses in the other life does not die. This external, together with the internal, is called the spirit. . . .

10602. To be in externals and not in what is internal is to worship external things as holy, without any acknowledgment of the Lord, and without love to God for the sake of God, but for the sake of self. . . . But as they could be in a holy external for the sake of themselves, and this could be marvellously converted into a holy external for the sake of God by means of the Spirits who were with them. . . . that nation was received.

10603. The external of the Word, of the Church, and of worship, such as it was for the sake of that nation. Sig. and Ex.

495. Not considering that the evil and the good lead a similar life in externals. . . .

496. Evil spirits are distinguished from the good chiefly by this, that the evil attend eagerly to what is said about external things. . . .

534. By this was represented those who in externals live alike sincerely and justly. . . .

J. 38. In proportion as man from internal becomes external, spiritual light is darkened with him. . . .

—e. When worldly, corporeal, and earthly things are loved more than spiritual, celestial, and Divine things, in the same proportion the man is external.

P. 117. See EVIL.

174. In external things man is led and taught by the Lord to all appearance as by himself. Gen.art.

— . This is so done in man's externals, but not in internals. . . .

— . These are the externals in which man is together with the Lord. And as externals make one with internals. . . . no disposition can be made by the Lord in internals except in accordance with the disposition that is made in externals by means of the man. 181.

277. These things make the external of life even with the evil. Into this external of life every infant is born. . . . but as the child grows. . . . he comes from that external to more interior things.

R. 153. At first they are kept by turns in externals. . . .

1207. On those who are honest in externals. . . .

1741. Insanities, that is, phantasies, reign with all those who constitute the externals of man; for externals are of such a character that they act against internals, and yet they are kept in their connection and order by internals . . .

3577^s. When external things are removed internal things appear . . . But still external things are not altogether rejected; but are so disposed by the Lord that they may be subservient to interior things . . .

3849. That natures are induced through externals.

4324. They are sometimes remitted into externals . . .

4325. That in the other life externals are nought . . .

4482. They who are elevated into the Second and into the Third Heaven have all these externals with them . . .

4746^e. In the other life externals are by degrees put off . . .

5513. When the external is taken away from an evil person . . .

5548^e. In this they have an external, like all Spirits; but it is quiescent with them, and they do not know that they have it; it is quiescent in the same way as is the external of man while he sleeps. Still, this external is full of their internals . . .

5549. The Angels who are in the Spiritual Heaven are not in internals, but in externals; this external is also tripartite, being internal, middle, and external. The external which approaches the sensuous external in the world is quiescent . . .

5814. On those who are in a holy external.

D. Min. 4645^e. After the life of the body no one receives external things, but interior and internal ones.

587¹⁸. That the external without the internal is not to be worshipped. Sig.

614². The understanding of the Word perishes as the man of the Church . . . becomes external; and he . . . becomes external as he recedes from charity . . .

670. This external, which exists also with the impious and evil, is what is here meant by 'a cloud.'

794³. (Thus) whatever man does from the external alone is unclean.

1013³. This breaks forth when the externals are laid aside, as takes place after death.

1061². There is no external which does not proceed and come forth from internals . . .

1133. 'To stand afar off' = to be in externals.

—². Fear is the principal cause of an evil man's coming from internals into externals. Ex. 1163, Sig.

1155³. Still, man is further reformed through external means when he had before been reformed through internal means. Ex.

D. Love xv. As soon as the external of their mind is taken away, they think, speak, and act insanely. . . But . . . they are remitted by turns into their externals, and thereby into their civil and moral life . . .

Can. Redemp. iii. i. As evil increases in the Church, so the man of the Church becomes external.

1780. The Lord's complaint concerning the Church, that it is only external. Tr.

1795. 'The steward of my house' = the external Church. . . The external Church is no other; for all stewardship belongs to the external of the Church; as the administration of rituals . . . The external things of the Church, without the internal, are of no account . . . Nevertheless, the externals of the Church are like the externals of man . . .

2177². These things represented . . . things of the Spiritual Church, and also those of the external Church.

5640. 'He said to him who was over his house' = that which is of the external Church.

6375. 'He binds his ass's colt to the vine' = truth in the Natural for the external Church.

6380. For they who belong to the external Church cannot elevate their thought higher than to the Lord's Divine Natural.

6789². The truth which is a matter of knowledge, which is here represented by Moses, is the truth of the external Church.

8977. The men of the external Church, who are represented by the Hebrew servants, are they who learn truth from no delight, but only because it is the truth of the Church through which they believe they can be saved . . . In the other life such are at the entrance to Heaven, because they correspond to the skin.

—². Delight is instead of good in the man of the external Church.

—³. Spiritual good . . . cannot be conjoined with those who are in the externals of the Church . . . for they who are in the externals of the Church cannot be affected by the truths of faith otherwise than principally for the sake of themselves . . . Sig. 8981², Ex.

A. 27^e. The external man himself is called 'the dry land,' and presently 'earth.'

40. See CREEP-repere.

47^e. Thus regeneration begins from the external man, and proceeds to the internal. 64.

94^e. 'Man was made a living soul'= that the external man also was made living.

95. It here treats of the life of the external man; in the two former verses, of the life of his faith . . . in this one, of the life of his love. Before, the external man did not want to obey and serve the internal, but continually fought against him; and therefore the external man was not then man. But now, when he is made celestial, the external man begins to serve the internal, and also becomes man; and, in fact, through the life of faith and the life of love. The life of faith prepares him, the life of love makes him man.

111. External men know of scarcely anything but knowledge, which they call intelligence and wisdom, and also faith; they do not even know what love is . . .

156. 'Bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh'= the proprium of the external man . . .

268. 'Ground'=the external man. . . It is the external man, that is, his affection and memory, in which are implanted the seeds of good and truth . . . 990^e.

—². The Rational also belongs to the external man, being in itself a kind of medium between the internal and the external man . . .

278. 'To return to the ground from which he was taken'= that the Church would return to the external man such as he was before regeneration.

909^e. 'The earth,' here, =nothing else than the external man.

911². Spirits constitute the external man (of the Grand Man).

913^e. The fructification of good and the multiplication of truth take place in the external man; the former in his affections, the latter in his memory. The external man is here called 'the earth into which they spread themselves, and upon which they fructify and multiply themselves.'

933⁴. He comes into straitnesses and temptations, until he is reduced into such a state, that the external man becomes compliant to the internal . . .

978. (Thus) man's thought is not of the internal, but of the external man.

— . See BODY.

984. 'To replenish the earth'=with the external man. Ex. 1016.

1460. In the external man there are recipient vessels, which are called those of the memory, which are formed by means of Knowledges . . . according to the influx of the internal man.

— . (Thus) with the Lord, equally as with other men, there was, in childhood, a scarcity of Knowledges in His external man. 1464, Sig.

1461. The external man can only be reduced to correspondence with the internal man by means of Knowledges. The external man is corporeal and sensuous, and does not receive anything celestial and spiritual unless Knowledges are implanted in it as in their ground . . . 1487.

1475^e. His external man also was made Divine. 1489^e.

1480. This food . . . is communicated to the external man, to the end that the external man may be adapted to the internal.

1486. All things whatever in the external man are mere things of service . . . to the internal man. Sig.

1488. By means of scientifics to build up the external man . . .

1535. In (Gen. xiii.) it treats of the external man with the Lord, which was to be conjoined with His internal man. The external man is the Human essence; the internal man is the Divine essence. The former is represented by Lot; the latter by Abram.

1536. There is here described the state of His external man as it was in childhood . . .

1537. That there were still many things in His external man which hindered conjunction. Tr.

1538. There appeared to the Lord the external man as he is in his beauty when conjoined with the internal man; and also as he is when not conjoined. Tr.

1539. A promise that when the external man was conjoined with the internal, or the Human essence with the Divine one, all power would be given to Him. Tr.

1563. The external man receives his life principally from the internal man, that is, from the spirit or soul . . . But this life cannot be received by the external man particularly or distinctly, unless his organic vessels are opened . . . These are opened through the medium of the senses by means of scientifics and Knowledges, and also by means of pleasures and delights . . . Therefore it must needs be that scientifics and Knowledges will insinuate themselves into the external man which cannot agree with spiritual truths; and pleasures and delights which cannot agree with celestial goods . . . and when these things are regarded as ends they draw the external man outwards and downwards . . . And therefore unless such things are first dispersed, the internal man cannot possibly agree with the external man. (Sig. by the separation of Lot from Abram.)

1564. The things with which the external man abounds. Sig.

— . There are two kinds of things in the external man; those which can agree with the internal man, and those which cannot. (The latter are here sig.) 1568.

1568. There are in the external man many things with which the internal man can dwell; as affections of good and the delights and pleasures thence originating . . .

—². But there are also many things in the external man which do not agree . . . as all things which spring from the love of self and the love of the world . . .

—³. In order to know what effects the correspondence and agreement of the external man with the internal, and what effects disagreement, it is merely necessary to reflect upon the ends which reign, or, what is the same, upon the loves which reign . . .

—⁴. The things in the external man which agree are from the internal man, that is, through the internal man from the Lord . . .

1573. 'The Canaanite and the Perizzite were then dwelling in the Land' = the (hereditary) evils and falsities in the external man.

1576^e. The things which agree are 'Abram,' even those which are in the external man; for these constitute one thing with the internal man, and belong to it.

1577³. With the external man everything is natural; for the external man himself is the same as the natural man . . .

—⁵. As in the internal man there are two principles, the celestial and the Spiritual . . . so in the external man; his Celestial is called natural good; and his Spiritual, natural truth.

1581. The evil which is in the external man cannot be separated in any man, except in the Lord . . . When it thus becomes quiescent, then for the first time goods flow in from the Lord, and affect the external man . . .

1584. The external man enlightened by the internal. Sig.

—^e. The Lord, when a child, was often in such Divine vision as to His external man, because He alone was to conjoin the external man with the internal . . .

1585. 'He saw all the plain of Jordan' = those goods and truths which were in the external man.

—². The things at the boundaries of Canaan represented the external man. Ill.

1587. 'Before Jehovah destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah' = the external man destroyed by cupidities of evil and persuasions of falsity. . . For these two things are what destroy the external man, and separate it from the internal. Ex.

1588. The Rational is the intelligence of the external man.

1589. There are three things which constitute the external man; the Rational, the Scientific, and the external Sensuous . . .

— . Nothing lives in the external man except affection. Ex.

—³. The good of love continually inflows through the internal man into the external man; but if a man is in the affection of evil he perverts this good . . .

1592^e. The ugliness of the external man when disjoined from the internal, is described in these three verses. 1593.

1598^e. Regarded in himself, the external man is a mere instrument to serve the internal man . . . 1603.

1603². The Lord became life as to the external man also.

1607³. His Human essence or external man is that which is called 'the Son of Man.' See 1733².

1713. All things in the external man, before it is delivered, are called 'servants.'

1717. That the interior man reduced all things in the external man into a state of agreement. Sig.

1718. It is supposed that the things of the body alone constitute the external man . . . but these constitute the outermost man, which is merely corporeal. The external man is properly constituted of the scientifics which are of the memory, and the affections which are of love with which the man is imbued; and also the sensuous things which are proper to the spirit, together with the pleasures which also belong to the spirit.

A. 2657. 'Cast out this handmaid and her son' = that the things of the merely human Rational were to be extirpated . . . How the case stands here ; namely, that the first Rational was to be extirpated, when the Divine one succeeded it. Ex.

—^e. The Lord utterly extirpated the first Rational, so that nothing of it remained behind ; for what is merely human and what is Divine cannot be together.

4564. The evil with man, both hereditary and actual, is not so extirpated as to vanish away, or become none at all, but is only separated . . .

5206. 'The cows that were evil in look and thin in flesh devoured' = that the falsities which are not of faith and not of charity extirpated. 'To devour' = to consume ; here, to extirpate, because the truths which are in the Natural, before they have been vivified by means of the Celestial of the Spiritual, and thus regenerated, are as it were extirpated by means of falsities. 5270.

5207. As to the fact that truths are extirpated out of the Natural by the falsities in the boundaries. Ex. 5208.

4407. The eye is the most noble organ of the face, and communicates more immediately with the understanding than the other sensory organs of man. It is also modified by a more subtle atmosphere than the ear; and therefore the sight penetrates to the internal sensory by a shorter and more interior way than speech. . . And hence it is that some animals, being short of understanding, have as it were two subsidiary brains within the orbits of their eyes. . .

4408. The objects of the world. . . enter through the eye. . .

4410. The sight of the left eye corresponds to the truths which are of the understanding, and the right eye to the affections of truth which also are of the understanding; thus the left eye corresponds to the truths of faith, and the right eye to the goods of faith.

8022. The Angels of Jupiter came to me . . . They had an influx into the face, so that the face concurred with every particular . . . 8113.

8242. The faces of the inhabitants of Jupiter are like the faces of the men of our Earth, white, but more beautiful; sincerity and modesty shine out from them.

8244. They also believe that after death they will perceive a fire which will warm their faces. Ex.

8245. On this account they frequently wash and cleanse their faces; and also carefully preserve them from the heat of the sun . . . 8379².

8246. They said that the faces of the men of our Earth are not beautiful; and wondered that the faces of some are full of warts and pimples, and are in other respects disfigured; and said that none such appear among them.

[A.] 8247. In their Earth the faces of almost all are smiling and cheerful; because they have no solicitude about future things, and have no care for worldly things. . . . The reason their faces are prominent about the lips, is that the most of their speech is effected by the face . . . and also because they never dissemble . . . therefore they do not force their faces. 8248.

8249. The face was formed wholly to effigy the things which man thinks and wills; hence the face is called the effigy and index of the animus.

9233. (The Spirits of the moon) appeared of a face not unhandsome, but longer than the faces of all other Spirits.

9297. 'Faces,' when predicated of Jehovah, = the Divine good of the Divine love, or mercy. And as the Divine good of the Divine love is Jehovah Himself or the Lord, 'to be seen at the faces of the Lord Jehovah' (Ex.xxiii.17) has a like signification to being seen by the Lord.

9306. 'Take heed of his face' (Ex.xxiii.21) = holy fear. . . . It is said 'take heed of his face,' because by the face are signified the interiors which are of the life, thus which are of the thought and affection, and especially which are of the faith and love. The reason is that the face is formed to the image of the interiors of man, to the end that those things which are of the internal man may appear in the external, thus that the things which are of the Spiritual world may appear before the sight in the natural world. . . . And therefore, in the Original Language, 'face' is a general term which is applied to describe the affections. . . . Hence it is, that in that language, with adjunctives, it means nigh to, with, before, on account of, and also what is contrary; thus whatever is in himself, from himself, for himself, and against himself; for the face is the man himself, or that which is in him and appears.

—². Hence it may be known (that) 'the face of Jehovah' = the Divine good of the Divine love, and the Divine truth from this Divine good; for these are in Him, and are Himself. III.

—³. Hence it is that the Lord as to the Divine Human is called 'the Angel of the faces of Jehovah' (Is.lxiii.9). Ex.

9516. 'Their faces, of a man to his brother' (Ex.xxv.

20) = the conjunction of truth and good. 'The face' = the interiors; here, mental view and conjunction.

9517. 'To the mercy-seat shall be the faces of the cherubs' (id.) = the interiors constantly looking to good, thus to the Lord.

—². They who are elevated by the Lord (and the Angels) continually turn their faces to the Lord, because the Lord keeps them conjoined with Himself through the good of love; but they who are not elevated turn their faces from the Lord. 9828². 9864². 10420².

9545. 'The bread of faces' (Ex.xxv.30) = the Lord as to celestial good. . . . 'Faces,' when predicated of the Lord, = everything which is from the Divine love; as innocence, peace, joy; thus Heaven itself with man and Angel. 9546. 9571.

9546. 'To My faces continually' (id.) = thus the Lord's presence with peace and with heavenly joy from mercy.

—¹. 'Faces,' when predicated of man and Angel, = the interiors which are of the will and of the understanding thence, thus which are of love and of faith thence. Refs. 9936, Ex. (as to the various parts of the face). E.427.

9818²². 'The Angel of faces' = the Lord as to Divine good; for 'the face of Jehovah' = love, mercy, good. 9936. 10433.

9888. 'Overagainst its faces' (Ex.xxviii.25) = to eternity. Ex. 9935.

10300⁷. 'To turn the face to anyone,' in the internal sense, = to love.

10554. 'To speak faces to faces' (Ex.xxxiii.11) = to be conjoined; for the faces = the interiors, and when the interiors mutually regard each other, and see what is like, they conjoin themselves.

—³. One thing is signified by 'to speak faces to faces,' and another by 'to see Jehovah face to face.'

10567. 'My faces shall go' (ver.14) = that what is Divine of the Church, of worship, and of the Word will be there. 10568.

10570⁶. 'The faces of the ground' = wherever the Church is. —^c.

10575. 'To pass by upon his faces' (ver.19) = upon the external separated from what is internal in which was Moses and the nation he was over. . . .

10578. 'Thou canst not see My faces' (ver.20) = that the Divine interiors of the Church, of worship, and of the Word cannot appear to the Israelitish nation. 10584.

10579. For the Lord is the face itself of Jehovah. Ex. —³, III.

10616. 'Jehovah passed upon his faces' (Ex.xxxiv.6) = Divine internal things upon external ones.

10638. See DRIVE OUT.

10691. 'The sparkling of the skin of Moses' face' (ver.29) = the internal of the Word giving forth light in its external. 6752². 10705.

10837². From their faces (in the Sixth Earth) they see whether they agree in minds—animis.

H. 47. All who form one angelic Society have a face that is like in general, but is not like in particular. Ex.

— In Heaven all the interior affections appear and shine forth from the face; for the face there is their external and representative form; to have another face than that of one's own affections does not exist in Heaven. 48.

—². A face as of an Angel appeared to me, which was varied according to the affections of good and truth, such as exist with those who are in one Society. The variations lasted a long time; and I observed that the same face in general remained as a plane, and that the rest were only derivations and propagations thereof. . . D.2094. 2203.

91. See CORRESPOND.

123². The interiors make the face of an Angel and a Spirit; and in the Spiritual World. . . it is the face which determines (the quarters). 131. 143.

223. If anyone dissents, he must turn away his face.

272². As heavenly loves open the interiors to the Lord, all the Angels turn their faces to the Lord; for in the Spiritual World it is the love which turns the interiors of everyone to itself, and wherever it turns the interiors it also turns the face; for the face there acts as one with the interiors, it being their external form. 479². W.105^o. 129, Gen.art. P.326⁵.

369². Especially when they look at each other face to face . . .

457. When the spirit first enters the World of Spirits . . . he has a like face . . . But afterwards the face is changed, and becomes . . . like his ruling love . . . For the face of the spirit differs very much from the face of the body; the face of the body is from the parents; but the face of the spirit from the affection . . . I have seen some who were recently from the world, and knew them from their face and speech; but when they were seen afterwards, I did not know them. They who had been in good affections were seen with a beautiful face; but they who had been in evil affections, with a deformed face; for, regarded in itself, the spirit of man is nothing but its own affection, the external form of which is the face. The reason the faces are changed, is that in the other life it is not allowable for anyone to counterfeit affections which are not properly his own, thus neither to induce on himself faces contrary to the love in which he is. . . Hence it is that the faces of all are the forms and effigies of their affections. . . 493. P.224^o. M.273^o.

458. The faces of hypocrites are changed later than the faces of the rest . . .

459. Therefore the more interior the affection is . . . the more beautiful is the face.

479⁴. So far as anyone acts and speaks according to another's love, the latter appears . . . with a full, cheerful, living face; but so far as anyone acts and speaks contrary to his love, his face begins to be changed, to be obscured, and not to appear. 553. W.369. E.837.

486. Hence the face of one can never be exactly like that of another; for the face is the image of the animus; and in the Spiritual World it is the image of the reigning love. W.318^o.

489^o. They who have not acted clandestinely, but have wanted all things they thought to appear openly . . . in Heaven have faces which shine; and in the face, from that light, each of their affections and thoughts appears as in form. . . While they are speaking, the face is a little obscured, but when they have done speaking, the same things which they spoke appear simultaneously in the face in full view.

562. 'The face (of the serpent)'=cunning.

—². 'The face,' in the Word, =that which is with man interiorly, because the face is the type of his animus formed to correspondence; hence 'the face of the serpent'=anger, hatred, and cunning.

926⁴. The Angels were impelled to fall on their faces.

938. 'They shall see His face' (Rev.xxii.4)=that they will turn themselves to the Lord. . . 'To see the face of . . . the Lord' does not mean to see His face; because no one can see His face, as He is in His Divine love and Wisdom, and live . . . for to see His face, as He is in Himself, would be as if one should enter into the sun . . . But the Lord sometimes presents Himself to be seen out of His Sun. Ex. . . But by their seeing His face is not here meant to see His face in this manner, but to see the truths which are in the Word from Him; and through them to Know and acknowledge Him. Ex. 939, Ill. 3861. The general natural influx projects itself especially into the face, and into the region of the loins. The other parts depend more upon the will . . . but not so the face . . .

3863. The general natural sense first occupied the whole face, afterwards the left side of the face, and at last only the ear . . . The changes of the affections, or of celestial things, are of the right side of the face, (and) those of spiritual things, are of the left side of the face . . . It is not allowable to proceed from . . . spiritual to celestial things, and therefore the right side of the face is guarded by the Lord, to prevent the influx from the left side extending itself thither . . .

Life 101. These two faculties, freedom and reason . . .

W. 23. The very faculty of thinking rationally . . . is not man's . . . Upon this faculty depends human reason . . . Man by this faculty either is in the light of Heaven . . . It is otherwise if the man by this faculty should have perverted the lower parts of his understanding; such a man indeed possesses this faculty . . .

30. (Therefore) man has two faculties of life, from one of which he has an understanding, and from the other a will. The faculty from which he has understanding . . . and the faculty from which he has will . . . The fact that a man is not justly wise, and does not love rightly, does not take away the faculties, but only closes them . . . If, therefore, these faculties were taken away, it would involve the destruction of everything human . . . Hence it appears that the Divine resides with man in these two faculties, which are the faculty of being wise, and the faculty of loving; that is, in the ability.

116². The reciprocity considered in its faculty . . .

162^e. The faculty of thinking and willing alone remaining; the faculty of thinking, from rationality, and the faculty of willing, from freedom; which two faculties every man has from the Lord, nor are they ever taken away. These two faculties are possessed equally by devils and by Angels . . .

185². The distinction between the interior faculties of the mind . . . Or the distinction between the exterior faculties, which belong to the body . . .

240. There are two faculties from the Lord with man, by which he is distinguished from beasts. One faculty is, that he is able to understand what truth is and what good is; this is called rationality, and it is the faculty of his understanding. The other faculty is, that he is able to do what is true and good; this faculty is called freedom, and it is the faculty of his will. . . By virtue of these two faculties a man is a man . . . Man has these two faculties from the Lord, and has them continually from Him; nor are they taken away; for were they taken from him his humanity would perish. In these two faculties the Lord is with every man, both with the good and with the evil; they are the Lord's dwelling in the human race; hence it is that every man . . . lives to eternity. But the Lord's dwelling with man is nearer in proportion as the man by means of these faculties opens the higher degrees . . . P.73, Gen.art. 96².

247. The faculty of receiving spiritual light . . . From this faculty of rationality it is that man . . . is able not only to think, but also to speak from thought; and afterwards from his other faculty, which is called freedom . . . he is able to do those things which he thinks . . .

255. The natural degrees, without the higher degrees, possess no faculty of thinking . . .

—^e. This power (the sensuous man) gets from a faculty proper to every man, the faculty of being able to understand truth if he chooses; this faculty makes all the distinction. Still, many, by the abuse of this faculty, have rendered themselves lower than the beasts.

258. Every man is born into the faculty of understanding truths to the inmost degree.

—^e. Rationality, which is the faculty that is capable of elevation . . .

264. That the origin of evil is from the abuse of the faculties which are proper to man, and are called rationality and freedom. By rationality is meant the faculty of understanding truths and thereby falsities . . . and by freedom is meant the faculty of thinking, willing, and doing these things freely. . . Every man . . . has these two faculties, and they are from the Lord; and they are not taken away from him; and from them comes the appearance that man thinks, speaks, wills, and acts as from himself; and the Lord dwells in these faculties with every man . . . and through these faculties . . . man is able to be reformed and regenerated . . . P.16. 82, Gen.art. 96².

266. That an evil man enjoys these two faculties equally with a good man.

—². In the faculty or in the power of being able to will.

267. That an evil man abuses these faculties to confirm evils and falsities ; and that a good man uses them to confirm goods and truths. P.286.

404². The affection of truth and the perception of truth are two faculties of the understanding . . .

425. That the faculty of understanding, which is called rationality ; and the faculty of acting, which is called freedom, still remain.

P. 15. Man has the faculty of acting, which is called freedom, and the faculty of understanding, which is called rationality. It is from the abuse of these faculties that man can seem in externals different from what he is in internals . . .

83. Man is born . . . with the capacity of becoming spiritual . . .

87. That by means of these two faculties a man can be reformed and regenerated, so far as he can be led to acknowledge that all good and truth . . . are from the Lord. 90.

88². (Thus) these two faculties . . . are from the Lord, and not from man.

92. That the conjunction of the Lord with man . . . is effected by means of these two faculties.

96. That the Lord guards these two faculties in man unimpaired and as sacred . . . (For) without these two faculties man would not have understanding and will . . . And without these two faculties man could not be conjoined with the Lord . . . And, further, without these two faculties man would not have immortality . . . Ex. seriatim.

98. These faculties are as it were implanted in man ; for his humanity itself is in them.

99. Still, they have not lost the faculties themselves. (From experience.) 204.

A. 10. The fourth state is when he is affected with love, and illuminated with faith.

12. The sixth state is when from faith and thence from love, he speaks truths and does goods.

30. The very essence and life of faith is the Lord alone . . .

— The progress of faith with those who are being created anew. . . They receive life from the Lord through faith; first through the faith of the memory, which is scientific faith; next through faith in the understanding, which is intellectual faith; and afterwards through faith in the heart, which is the faith of love, or saving faith. (These kinds of faith here represented.)

But faith from love is circumstanced as is the light of the sun in the time of spring . . . No faith, and faith without love, are also compared by the Lord to 'winter' . . .

35. Those who say they have faith, but live otherwise . . .

36. They who have separated faith from love, do not even know what faith is. When they are in the idea of faith, some know no otherwise than that it is mere thought; some that it is thought directed to the Lord; a few, that it is the doctrine of faith. But faith is not only the Knowledge of all things embraced in the doctrine of faith, and the acknowledgment of these things, but it is especially obedience to all things which it teaches . . . If a man is not in the love of the Lord and in the love of the neighbour, he is not in faith.

344. What is it that is done by faith, or knowledge, Knowledge, and the doctrine of faith, but that man does as it teaches! The primary thing it teaches is charity.

353. Faith, too, is celestial when it is from love.

362. When men are thinking about a single article of faith, they make it the principal thing. (Hence heresy.)

398². They made no distinction between love which is of the will, and faith which is of the understanding; because love was everything, and faith was of love. But after faith was separated from love, as was the case with those who were called 'Cain,' the will had no longer any rule; but as . . . faith reigned in that mind instead of love, it is said that he 'dwelt towards the east of Eden;' for faith was distinguished, or had a mark set on it, that it might be preserved for the use of mankind.

409. Lamech, who was the sixth in order, altogether denied even faith.

419. It belongs to faith to understand not only what is true, but also what is good; the Knowledges of faith involve both; but to be such as faith teaches is celestial.

577. 'Twelve'=faith, or the things which are of love and of faith thence in one complex.

598. 'Noah' (also)=the faith of that Church, which was the faith of charity. So the Lord foresaw, that the human race could be saved through the faith of charity.

620^e. As love is the containant of faith, and faith is the containant of the Knowledges of faith.

668. Faith is only the form of love . . . and the faith is thence formed according to the quality of the love or charity.

896. 'To see'=to understand, and to have faith. (9165, Refs.) To know Truths, to acknowledge Truths, and to have faith in Truths, are three completely different things. To know is the first of regeneration, to acknowledge is the second, and to have faith is the third. . . Infidels can acknowledge, and when in certain states, can from zeal preach, confirm, and persuade; but none can have faith except the faithful. They who have faith know, acknowledge, and believe; they have charity; they have conscience; and therefore faith can never be predicated, that is, it cannot be said of anyone that he has faith, unless he is of this character. Merely to know what is of faith, belongs to the memory without the consent of its Rational; to acknowledge what is of faith, is a certain Rational consenting, being induced to do so by certain causes, and for the sake of certain ends; but to have faith is of the conscience, that is, of the Lord operating through the conscience. . . In the other life, many who only know (and also many who only acknowledge) are in Hell . . . But they who have had faith are all in Heaven.

1025. By faith . . . is meant charity from which is faith; for no other faith exists, which is faith, except the faith of charity.

1047. When on account of the voluntary proprium of man, the faith of charity does not appear. Sig.

1071. 'Wine'=the faith (which is derived from charity), and all things which are of faith. . . 'He drank of the wine'=that he wanted to investigate the things that are of faith . . . by reasonings. Ill.

—³. For faith is no other than of charity; and, essentially, is charity itself . . . 2034.

1072. It is as impossible to acquire faith from these (reasonings) as . . .

1076². As they are devoid of charity, they do not know what faith is. When asked, they can only reply that it is a kind of thought; some, that it is confidence; others, that it is the Knowledges of faith; a few, that it is a life according to Knowledges; and scarcely any that it is the life of charity or of mutual love.

1162. Faith is the acknowledgment of those things which belong to faith; and the acknowledgment is never external but internal, and is the operation of the Lord alone through the charity with the man.

1176. They do not know that love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour are faith itself; and that the Knowledges which they call faith have no end but (the reception of these loves); and that this is the faith which saves.

1201. The first-born of every Church, in the internal sense, is faith.

1251. 'According to their languages'=according to the differences as to faith.

1388. A good Spirit is known not only as to the goodness, but also as to the faith in which he is. 1389.

1577². There are two things in the internal man, love and faith; and these two constitute a one when faith is from love.

1667. Faith and the things of faith are nothing but truths. 1685.

1737². The conjunction of men with the Lord is effected through . . . the implantation of faith in love. Unless faith is implanted in love; that is, unless a man, through the things which are of faith, receives the life of faith, that is, charity, there is no conjunction.

1798. By the faith which is the internal of the Church is meant no other than that which is of love and charity; that is, which is from love or charity. In a general sense, faith is everything doctrinal of the Church; but what is doctrinal separated from love or charity never makes the internal of the Church. . . That (the former) is the faith which is the internal of the Church, may be evident from this fact alone, that he who has the life of charity knows all things of faith.

1808^e. When there is no faith, that is, no charity . . .

1824^e. The Celestial Spiritual . . . is faith in which there is charity, or faith which is generated from charity. 2184⁴.

2116². The saying that those are saved who have faith is true, but by 'faith' nothing else is meant in the Word than love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour, thus the life thence. The doctrinal things and dogmas of faith are not faith, but of faith . . .

2146^e. Holiness is never predicated . . . of faith, except in the proportion that there are love and charity in the truths of faith. 2343^e.

2190². In the good of charity with man are . . . all things of his faith.

2219². The love of the world is diametrically opposite to the spiritual things of faith; and the love of self, to the celestial things of love.

2225. The essential things of faith, being necessary to salvation, are expressed in the letter such as they are in the internal sense.

2228². Many say that man is saved by faith; or, as they say, if only he has faith; but most of them do not know what faith is; some suppose that it is mere thought; some, that it is the acknowledgment of something that is to be believed; others, that it is the whole doctrine of faith which is to be believed . . . Thus they err in the mere Knowledge of what faith is.

—^e. It is this heavenly life which is regarded by all those things which are called faith; and it is procured by all things of faith. Hence it may be evident what faith is, namely, that it is charity; for to this lead all things which are called the doctrines of faith . . .

2231³. Faith from charity is like the light in the time of spring and summer, by which all things germinate and flourish ; (for) love and charity is celestial flame, and faith is the spiritual light thence.

[A.] 2235³. 'Judgment' = faith ; 'justice,' love. . . 'Judgment' precedes, because love comes through faith ; but when 'justice' precedes, it = that faith is from love. 2826⁹.

—³. 'I will betroth thee unto Me in faith' (Hos.ii. 19) . . . Both ('justice' and 'judgment') are here called 'faith,' or fidelity.

2240². The desolation of faith, which is effected by falsities. Tr.

2243⁷. They do not even know that the fundamental of faith is love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour.

2261². Hence, faith itself, in the internal sense, is nothing else than charity.

2325. 'To see' = to have faith. . . The reason it here = conscience, is that those who have faith have conscience too ; the former is inseparable from the latter, and in fact so inseparable, that whether you say faith or conscience is all the same. By faith is meant the faith by which comes charity, and which is from charity, thus is charity itself ; for faith without charity is no faith.

2335. 'Evening' = the state of the Church before the last, when there begins to be no faith.

2342³. As the conjunction of the Lord with mankind is effected through love and charity, and the faith thence . . .

2343³. For the good of charity is the very ground of the seeds of faith . . . and therefore in proportion as a man is in . . . charity, he is in faith, especially in this principal of faith, that all salvation is from the Lord.

—⁵. That no one can have faith unless he is in charity, is evident from John i.12,13 ; etc.

—⁶. From these passages it is evident that love to the Lord, and charity towards the neighbour, is the life of faith. Ex.

2354. Here is described the first state of the vastated Church, when there begins to be no faith, because no charity.

2401³. They may suppose that they can easily receive faith (after death), when they see that the Lord rules the universal Heaven . . . but it is as far from being possible for the evil to receive faith . . . as Hell is from Heaven . . .

2432^e. That they are saved who are in the affection of truth, that is, who are in faith, provided it is the faith of good. Sig. 2442.

2504^e. The spiritual things of faith are all the truths which are from good.

2572². The good of doctrine is love and charity ; the truth of doctrine is faith.

2588². Those think from the affirmative who believe that they are truths because the Lord says so in the Word, thus who have faith in the Lord.

2588⁵. They who are in love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour are able to . . . have faith in the Word ; but not they who are in the love of self and of the world . . .

2652². Persuasive light . . . induces a faith of falsity by truths, and a faith of truth by falsities.

2701². 'The eye' = the understanding, the Spiritual of which is faith. —³.

—³. They apprehended with the understanding and had faith, which is 'to see with the eyes.'

— . The sight of the understanding is from the light of Heaven flowing into those things which are of the light of the world ; but the sight of faith is from the light of Heaven.

2702^e. 'Water' = the Spiritual of faith ; and 'spirit,' its Celestial.

2776². It is this union (of the Divine and the Human) by which they can be saved who have the faith of charity in Him. 2836^e.

2831. The confirmation of an idea by many things causes . . . that faith can be insinuated into it.

2848. 'Seed' = the faith of charity, or . . . those who are in the faith of charity, that is, the spiritual.

2853². No others are in the faith of charity than they who are within the Church ; for the faith of charity is the truth of doctrine adjoined to the good of life.

2875. The truth of doctrine, or faith, is insinuated by an external way, and is carried into the memory ; and is called forth thence by the Lord in its own time and order, and is conjoined with the affection of good. This is effected in the freedom of man . . . Such is the insemination and inrooting of faith : whatever is effected in freedom is conjoined . . .

—^e. (Thus) the truth of doctrine or faith can only be received by the affection of it.

2901. The reception of faith with those who are of the Church. Tr. 2913³.

2905³. When there is no longer any faith, that is (or because there is no) charity. 2908. 2909³. 2910². 3398⁴. 3652.

2935. What is obscure of faith. Sig. 2945. 2946.

2943². 'A city' = faith ; and its 'gates,' doctrinal things ; because these introduce to faith.

2955. They are here said to be 'vivified' because they are in the progression of receiving faith ; for from faith, namely, from its good, they receive life, of which this is the only source.

2982². Quite different is the case with the Churches which say that faith is the essential of the Church . . . They say, indeed, that the veriest faith which saves is trust, but this trust is possible only in the good of life . . .

3121. In the proper sense, Truth signifies the same as faith ; in the Hebrew language, too, faith is expressed by such a word ; so that that which is called 'Truth' in the Old Testament is called 'faith' in the New Testament ; and therefore it has been so often said that truth is of faith . . . But, in the internal sense, faith is nothing but charity ; and there is no faith except by love. Refs. . . . For all faith is from charity . . .

3145. Unless truth is learned from affection, thus in freedom, it is not . . . exalted towards the interiors, and there made faith.

3146². Such is the rooting of faith, or of the truth which is of faith, that unless it is coupled with good in the Rational, the truth of faith never receives any life, nor is any fruit produced thence; for that which is called the fruit of faith is the fruit of the good which is of love and charity through the truth which is of faith.

3157^e. When the truth of faith is received by the . . . faith is of charity, or as to life is charity itself.

3158². Unless the truth of faith . . . is received by the good of love . . . it is not faith.

3167². Causes . . . the truth (in the natural man) to receive the rays of light, that is, faith.

3187. 'Seed'=those who are in charity through faith, that is, the spiritual.

3236^e. In order that the spiritual man may have the truth of faith, or faith, it must come from the new understanding with which he is endowed by the Lord, and the new understanding must have its light from the new will.

3240. They who are of the Spiritual Church are in faith, namely, in its good and truth. . . The truth which the spiritual have is that of faith, so far as this is doctrine concerning charity.

—². See DOCTRINE. 3242. 3325¹¹. 3419³. 5402². 5637^e. 89So. 991S. J.3S. P.101^e. T.245.

3242. No one is admitted into the Lord's Kingdom unless he is in the good of faith . . . Still, they who are in the truth of faith, that is, who profess faith, and call it the essential thing . . . and yet are in the good of life . . . are in the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom.

3267². The Lord's Spiritual Kingdom in the Heavens is . . . various as to the things which are of faith.

3289. The struggle as to whether . . . charity which is of good or faith which is of truth is the prior. Tr.

3324⁴. To look from faith, and not from love and charity, is to look behind, and to return back.

3325⁶. '144'=those who are in the faith of charity.

—¹¹. The Church then recedes successively from charity, and turns aside to faith . . . Sig. 3773².

3343. These ideas surpass not only apprehension, but also faith.

3365². 'Gerar'=faith. 3368.

3384. The state of the Lord as to the things which are of faith relatively to the rational things which were to be adjoined. Sig.

3387. If truths Divine themselves were opened, they would not be received by those who are in the doctrinal things of faith, because they surpass all their rational apprehension, thus all their faith. Sig.

3398². The man who . . . cannot do otherwise than profane, is withheld as far as possible from the acknowledgment and faith of truth and good.

3427⁴. They who are in the mere doctrinal things of faith, and not in the good of life, cannot but be in persuasive faith . . . But in proportion as anyone is in persuasive faith, he is stupid; but in proportion as anyone is in the good of life . . . he is in intelligence, that is, in faith from the Lord.

3451⁴. Conjunction is effected with those who . . . although they make faith the essential thing as to doctrine, still make charity the essential thing as to life; for with these there is confidence or trust in the Lord, which they call faith itself. . . Tr. 3459. 3463.

3459². Love and charity is spiritual conjunction, but not faith, except through love and charity.

3487^e. That faith in the Lord would expire, according to the degrees in which charity would cease. Sig.

3574. 'To kiss the Son'=conjunction with Him through the faith of love.

3834². States of faith are according to states of charity. Examp.

3862². When the order begins from love, everything which follows thence in genuine order appears flaming; but when the order begins from faith, everything . . . appears lucid . . .

3863. The universal which 'Reuben' signifies is faith. The reason faith is the first universal, is from the fact that when man is being regenerated . . . he must first learn and imbue the things which are of faith, that is, which are of spiritual truth . . .

—². Regarded in itself, faith is faith in the understanding and faith in the will; to know and to understand the truth which is of faith is called faith in the understanding; whereas to will the truth which is of faith is called faith in the will. Faith in the understanding is that which is signified by 'Reuben;' and faith in the will is that which is signified by 'Simeon.' That faith in the understanding, or the understanding of truth, precedes faith in the will, or the willing of truth, may be evident to everyone . . .

—⁴. That 'to see,' in the internal sense, = faith from the Lord, is evident from the fact, that the interior understanding has no other objects than the things which are of truth and good, for these are of faith. —⁵, III.

—⁹. 'To see God'=to believe in Him, thus to see Him by faith; for they who are in faith, from faith see God; for God is in faith; and God is that in the faith which is truly faith.

—¹². 'To see'=to have faith; for the Lord is seen only by faith; for faith is the eye of love; for by love through faith the Lord is seen; and love is the life of faith; and therefore it is said 'Ye shall see Me; because I live, ye shall live also.'

—¹⁴. (Thus) 'to see'=faith from the Lord; for no other faith exists, which is faith, except that which is from the Lord; this, also, gives man to see, that is, to believe. But faith from self, or from the proprium of man, is not faith; for this causes him to see falsities as truths, and truths as falsities; and even if he sees truths as truths, still he does not see them, because he does not believe them; for he sees himself in them, and not the Lord.

—¹⁵. The light of Heaven, being from the Lord, has with it intelligence and wisdom, consequently faith in Him; for faith in the Lord is within intelligence and wisdom; and therefore to see from that light . . . can signify nothing but faith in the Lord. . . It is this light which shines in the consciences of those who have faith in Him . . .

[A.] 386^o. By faith, when it is distinguished from charity, is meant truth, such as is that of doctrine, or such as is contained in the confession which is called the Apostolic Faith; and this according to the general meaning of the word in the Church; for to have faith in truths is believed to be the faith by which there is salvation.

387^o. The state of faith if the will does not correspond to it. Sig.

388^o. The cardiac motions with them are according to the states of love; and the respiratory ones are according to the states of faith.

390^o. See CHERUB.

390^o. See ACKNOWLEDGE. 390^o. 8694^o. 8882^o. 10205. 10218. 10370. S. 58. F. 9. 11. 30. —.

—^e. The truths of faith which are not learned for the sake of acting . . . are not of faith with him who learned them, but interiorly are against faith.

391^o. 'The twelve tribes' = all things of faith and love. 392^o. 3939^o.

392^o. The holy of faith. Sig.

—². The reason 'God hath judged me,' and also 'hath heard my voice,' in the internal sense, is the holy of faith, is that faith which is predicated of truth corresponds to the Divine justice . . . And the reason, why, in the external sense, it = the good of life, is (that) the holy of faith corresponds to the good of life.

392^o. They who reason about truth from . . . the negative, destroy all things of faith. Sig.

—⁶. That they were in the negative as to all things of faith. Sig.

393^o. The works of faith, which from the appearance may also be called its fruits.

394^o. Faith as to its state of love and charity. Sig.

400^o. They have not the truth of faith who believe that they have faith from self, thus are wise from self; but they have it who believe from the Lord; for to them faith and wisdom is given . . .

404^o. They had depended upon the faith of others . . .

410^o. Therefore man is in Heaven as to his interiors, when he is in spiritual love and faith.

410^o. Consequently, he acknowledges all things which confirm love and charity, which are called the things of faith . . .

417^o. The evil which a man has confirmed . . . even to faith and persuasion, cannot be amended.

417^o. 'Day' = a state of faith or truth; and 'night,' a state of no faith or truth.

419^o. The gentiles who have lived in mutual charity . . . in the other life receive faith more easily . . . than those within the Church who have not lived in such charity.

425^o. 'Seed' = the faith of charity.

431^o. The inward quality of those who have only a scientific faith, shown.

4364^o. He can confirm this by a number of his own experiences, if he is once in the faith that it is so.

4368^o. 'The rock on which the Church will be built' = the faith of charity.

440^o. With the spiritual man, this light falls into the things which are of faith with him . . . but with the celestial man, into the good of love.

441^o. Hence it was evident why they who lead a life of evil, can never, from a sincere heart, have faith in Divine truths . . .

4581^o. 'Under every green tree' = from the faith of all falsities.

463^o. 'Who took their lamps' = . . . faith in which is charity . . .

466^o. For he who is in the works of charity, or, what is the same, in the life of faith, is in the capacity of receiving faith, if not in the body, still in the other life; but he who is not in the works of charity . . . is in no capacity whatever of receiving faith, neither in the body, nor in the other life . . .

467^o. Every Church which commences from faith is such (as to quickly turn aside) . . . It has no other director than the understanding; and the understanding no other than that which is hereditary to man . . .

—^e. For faith is from Him through good.

467^o. 'Joseph's brethren' = the things which are of faith; (for) they represent the Church which turns aside from charity to faith; and afterwards to faith separated from charity. 4721.

468^o. Those who were in faith, namely, in the faith of some charity. Sig.

469^o. The (ancients) did not know anything about faith, as the Christian Church does, but about Truth. Truth to them was the same as faith is to Christians; and in the Original Language there is the same word for both. 4765^o. 4769^o. 6180. F. 6. R. 111. E. 837^o.

—². But the Christian Church gives the name of faith to those doctrinal things which are the interiors of the Church, and are said to be what must be believed; for by faith the common people mean no other than the faith of creeds . . .

471^o. 'The brethren' = those who teach from faith.

471^o. Those are said to fall from the general truth of the Church who acknowledge faith as essential, but not charity.

472^o. It treats of the Church which commences from faith, which from the very beginning it thus separates from charity . . .

472^o. But if the Church would acknowledge the life of faith as a principle, it would acknowledge charity towards the neighbour and love to the Lord, and hence the works of charity and love . . .

473^o. The Church which commences from faith would cease to be a Church, unless this Divine truth remained in it, that the Human of the Lord is Divine. Sig.

476^o. When (those who are in the affirmative) consult scientifics, they . . . corroborate faith . . .

476^o. That there was no longer any faith. Sig. 4765^o.

4769^o. 'It cast Truth to the earth' = that it cast down faith itself which in itself is charity ; for faith regards charity, because it proceeds from charity.

4793⁴. Unless man is in the affection of good, and thence in faith in the Lord.

4812. The sons by Tamar = the two essentials of the Church, namely, faith and love ; 'Pharez,' faith ; and 'Zarah,' love. Their birth represents that love is actually the first-born of the Church, and that faith is only apparently so.

4830. 'For Er his first-born' = the falsity of faith.

4930^e. Unless there were light from good within man, he could never see truths to acknowledgment and faith.

5068^e. To receive Divine truth is not only to have faith but also to act faith . . .

5130. The reception of faith. Sig.

— . The case with faith is this. He that receives it, and that has it, is continually in the remembrance of the Lord, even when he is thinking or speaking about something else . . . for the remembrance of the Lord, on the part of those who are in faith, reigns universally . . .

—². The sphere of faith from charity is the sphere which reigns in Heaven . . .

—³. The reception of faith is treated of, because the Sensuous, like the Rational, is re-born by faith, but by that faith into which charity flows ; for unless charity flows into faith, and gives it life, faith cannot universally reign ; since that reigns which a man loves . . .

5131³. When the faith of charity is the end . . . if there is correspondence, then faith from charity flows into the thought . . .

5134. When faith is received in the exterior Natural . . . correspondence is effected, and charity is received . . . Tr.

5138^e. Hence from the life it may be known what is the quality of the faith ; for good and evil are of the life, and truth and falsity are of the faith.

5168². Therefore when there is no subordination (of the exterior Natural), a man cannot have any . . . faith.

5169. Conjunction is effected by means of faith.

5199. 'Beautiful in look' = the things which are of faith. . . Spiritual look is faith. —^e, Ex.

5201. This image, being interior, appears only to those who are in faith from charity.

5203. 'Evil in look' = the things which are not of faith.

5232. Acknowledgment through faith, and adoration. Sig.

5432². They who are in the affection of truth for the sake of truth and of life . . . have indeed faith in the doctrinal things of the Church ; but still they search the Word . . . and thence have their faith and their conscience.

5440. That all things of faith are thus conjoined together. Sig.

5461. That faith in the will will be separated. Sig. and Ex. 5482.

5526. When there is faith in the will, truths become goods. Sig. and Ex.

5747³. See CONFESS.

5990^e. Destroying whatever is of faith.

6015². To trust to scientifics in the things of faith, and not to have faith in any spiritual truth, unless what is scientific and sensuous dictates it. Sig.

6047³. Faith is corroborated by scientifics.

—^e. (Thus) what is scientific is by no means to be rejected from the truths of faith, but they are to be conjoined ; by the prior way, however, that is, by the way from faith ; and not by the posterior way, that is, by the way from scientifics.

6222³. Such have faith in those whom they believe to be enlightened.

6344. How it is to be understood that through faith there is power in good, and the first power in truth. Ex. and Sig.

6383². See ZEBULON.

6548. At the beginning of regeneration, faith is in obscurity. Sig.

6564. The Lord continually flows in through the internal of man with good and truth ; the good gives life and its heat, which is love ; and the truth gives enlightenment and its light, which is faith.

6610. With those who are in . . . persuasive faith, the ideas of thought are exceedingly confined.

6765. Chiding, because one wanted to destroy the faith of another. Sig.

6767. Dost thou want to destroy my faith ? Sig. . . Faith is of the Church ; and these two things are so united, that he who destroys faith with anyone, destroys the Church with him ; and this is to kill him ; for he who takes away faith, takes away spiritual life.

6805. That He endowed the Church with faith. Sig.

6939. That if the Spiritual Church had not hope and faith they would be dragged down by falsities, evils, and profane things. Tr. 6946. 6949. 6959.

6945³. Hence it is that no faith can ever be implanted in those of the Spiritual Church, unless with a mighty force they are withheld by the Lord from falsities. Sig. and Ex.

6956. That they may have faith concerning the Lord's Divine Human. Sig.

6959². They who are of the Spiritual Church, in childhood, and afterwards in adolescence, have faith in the doctrinal things of their own Church ; but at that time they have faith from their parents and masters, and not from themselves ; and therefore if they afterwards recede from faith, they profane truth only slightly . . . Whereas if a man has faith in the doctrine of the Church and in the Word from himself, that is, by means of confirmations with himself, if he afterwards recedes . . . he profanes truth . . .

6964. Providence, what would be the quality of those of the Spiritual Church if they had faith. Sig.

6970. To have faith, here, does not mean faith from the signs . . . for this faith is concerned with worldly things ; but faith, that if they do not remain in truths, they will become merely sensuous and corporeal, and at last profaners of truth. . . Faith in worldly things is quite different from faith in spiritual things. Examp.

[A.] 7082. Light in the natural world corresponds to faith in the Spiritual World . . . and faith is actually the light of man.

7216. That they did not receive from faith and obedience. Sig.

7231². The Spiritual Church with man begins through faith in knowledge and afterwards in understanding, which is represented by Reuben and his sons. Afterwards, when the Church grows with man, that faith passes into the will, and from the will into act; and then the man wills the truth of faith, and does it, because it is so commanded in the Word. This [state] of faith is represented by Simeon. At last the affection of charity is perceived in his will, which is new, so that he wills to do good, not as before, from faith, but from charity towards the neighbour . . . This . . . is represented by Levi.

7233³. As the case is so with the Spiritual Church, it is not wonderful that with most, faith is the essential of the Church, and not charity.

7290³. That miracles contribute nothing to faith. Ill.

7317. 'Pharaoh' represents those who have professed faith, and have also persuaded themselves that faith saves, and yet have lived contrary to the precepts of faith; in a word, who have been in persuasive faith, and in a life of evil. Ex. (Their state in the other life.) 7418.

—². By these are meant those who have been in miraculous faith, and not in the faith of the Church.

7490. In proportion as a man is in the loves of self and of the world . . . he does not know what faith is, until at last he does not know that it is anything.

7724². In order that this Scientific may become of faith, it must be conjoined with good, and it then passes into the internal man, and becomes faith.

7756⁶. That which enters by an external way is perceived . . . Hence it is, that everything of the Church is attributed to faith.

7770. It is the affections of truth and of good which constitute faith.

7778³. Everyone's faith is such as is his life. If, therefore, the life is damned, so is the faith; for when the life is evil it is the faith of falsity.

—⁴. This persuasive is also supposed to be faith, but it is not faith; for it is impressed from the end that it may serve as a means for securing gain, honours, and reputation. Sig.

7779³. Who does not know . . . that it is the life of faith which makes man spiritual . . .

7857. Every spiritual good proceeds either from faith, that is, through faith, or from love. . . He who is in the first state cannot enter into the second until he is regenerated; and he who is in the second state ought not to betake himself to the first . . . He relapses into the state of faith which had served to introduce him to good, and also beyond it. Sig.

—². The sacrifices = the worship of the Lord from faith; and the burnt-offerings . . . from love.

8034. Faith is an internal affection, which consists in this, that a man wills from the heart to know what is true and what is good, not for the sake of doctrine, but for the sake of life.

8038. It treats in (Ex. xiii.) concerning faith in the Lord . . . Faith in the Lord is signified by the sanctification of the first-born. 8042.

8042. When faith is mentioned, there is meant all the truth which is for the Spiritual Church . . . and therefore the Spiritual Church itself is meant . . .

—². When man is being regenerated, he is led by faith in the understanding or by doctrine, to faith in the will or life . . .

8043. That which is (as it were) conceived in the womb, and born from the womb, is not man as man, but is the faith of charity; for this constitutes the Spiritual of man . . .

8078. That faith merely natural is not to be ascribed to the Lord; but the truth of innocence which is therein. Sig. and Ex. 8079.

—'. The opening' = that which is first born from a regenerate man, thus faith.

—². Faith merely natural is faith which is insinuated by an external way, and not by an internal one; as sensuous faith, which exists when a man believes that it is so, because the eye has seen it and the hand has touched it. (Sig. by the Lord's words to Thomas). Also the faith of miracles, which exists when a man believes that it is so merely from miracles; and also the faith of authority, which exists when a man believes that it is so, because some one else, in whom he has faith, has said so. But spiritual faith is that which is insinuated by an internal and at the same time by an external way; insinuation by an internal way causes it to be believed, and then that which is insinuated by an external way causes it to be confirmed. The Spiritual of faith is the affection of charity, and thence the affection of truth for the sake of good use and for the sake of life; these cause faith to be spiritual. The insinuation of faith by an internal way is effected by the reading of the Word, and at the same time by enlightenment from the Lord, which is given according to the quality of the affection, that is, according to the end in the knowing of truth.

8080. That the truths of faith are not to be ascribed to the Lord, but its goods. Sig.

—³. For the Lord gives faith mediately by its good.

8088. That therefore the faith of charity which is of the new generation, is to be ascribed to the Lord. Sig.

8148². The falsities here signified by 'Pharaoh,' etc. are chiefly the falsities of those who are in persuasive faith, that is, who persuade themselves that the doctrinal things of the Church in which they are, are true, and yet are in a life of evil. Persuasive faith exists together with evil of life, but not saving faith; for persuasive faith is a persuasion that all things which are of the doctrine of the Church are truths . . . for the sake of profits . . . and reputation. 9364.

—³. Saving faith is given by the Lord ; but (persuasive faith) is from the man himself ; the former remains to eternity, the latter is dissipated in the other life : it is also dissipated in the world, if they gain nothing by it ; but so long as they gain by it they fight for it as if for Heaven itself . . . They who are in this faith in the world, can with difficulty be distinguished from those who are in saving faith ; for they speak and preach in favour of what is doctrinal with an ardour as of zeal, but it is an ardour from the fire of the love of self and of the world. . . In the other life they are vastated as to this faith.

8152. An endeavour to subjugate those who are in faith conjoined with charity. Sig.

8172. 'To stand still and see'=to have faith.

8240. Trust is of love through faith ; consequently, trust in . . . the Lord exists only with those who are in love to the Lord and towards the neighbour, because no others have faith.

8267. That everything of faith and of the glory thence is from the Divine truth which is from Him. Sig. . . For all the glory which man has is from faith in the Lord ; and thus the Lord is in faith, and therefore so is glory itself. (For) the Divine truth, from which and through which is faith, appears . . . as light.

8313⁴. In the other life everyone retains the principles of his faith which he had in the life of the body . . .

8330². The interior (Angels of the Spiritual Kingdom) are those who are in charity itself, and thence in faith ; but the exterior ones are those who are in faith, but not yet in charity : the latter do good from obedience ; the former from affection.

8360. The faith of the Lord's precepts. Sig.

8391. He who leads a life of faith performs repentance daily . . .

8479. No faith, and consequently no obedience. Sig.

8581. 'Rock'=faith, here, faith from the Lord, or the Lord as to faith, III.

—³. The reason (the power of opening and shutting Heaven and Hell) belongs to faith, is that faith is from the Lord, thus also is of the Lord, that is, the Lord Himself is in it : all power in the other life is through the truth of faith from good.

—^e. The faith which is from the Lord is from the Divine law, that is, from the Word ; for by means of this the Lord teaches what faith is, and also gives faith.

8585. Faith is given through truths, and, in fact, through the primary ones ; for enlightenment is effected from these . . .

8604. 'When Moses lifted up his hand'=when faith with those of the Spiritual Church looked to the Lord.

— . As spiritual power is faith . . .

8606. 'When he let down his hand'=when faith with them looked downwards, or from the Lord to self and the world.

— . The reason the faith which looks to the Lord conquers, is that the Lord then fights ; for the Lord is faith, because faith is from Him . . .

8607. They who are of the Spiritual Church cannot be in faith which continually looks to the Lord ; but are alternately in faith which looks to self and the world. Sig.
VOL. II.

8628. They who have used knowledges as a means to annihilate the things which are of faith, have utterly destroyed their Intellectual . . .

8639. He who does not know that the Lord is the Saviour of the world, cannot have faith in Him . . .

8640. (Thus) the life of the regenerate man is the life of faith.

8708. Faith in act. Sig.

— . Action from the light of intelligence, thus from faith ; for faith from the Lord is in the light of intelligence. Sig.

8711. 'Truth'=faith.

8750². Hence there is a correspondence . . . of light in the world with faith, which is thence called spiritual light.

8762. They who believe . . . that the essential of worship is the life of faith, that is, charity towards the neighbour and love to the Lord, belong to the internal Church.

— . They belong to the external Church who do good to the neighbour and worship the Lord solely from the obedience of faith . . .

8764⁴. 'The eagle,' here, =faith.

—⁷. 'The dove'=faith.

8773². Love to God and love towards the neighbour . . . can exist only by means of faith.

8783. That there may be a permanent faith of truth. Sig.

8788. A veiling over of the interiors so that they may appear in the holy of faith . . . Sig.

— . For there to be a Church there must be with the man of the Church faith in the Lord, and also love to Him and love towards the neighbour.

8819. The obscurity of faith, such as that of those of the Spiritual Church . . . Sig.

8881. In order that truths may be of faith . . . they flow in from the Lord. . . When they are taken out of the memory, and through the Intellectual are insinuated into the will . . . and thence into act, they become living, and are of faith. This is effected by the Lord when the man desists from evils.

8904². They who find the delight of life in adulteries can no longer receive anything of faith . . .

8910³. The eye corresponds to faith ; the left eye to the truth of faith, and the right eye to the good of faith ; in the opposite sense, to the evil which is of faith.

8938. The state of faith with everyone. Sig.

8987³. The Church at this day is predicated and so called from faith . . . and few know what faith is. Most believe that faith is to know those things which the doctrine of the Church teaches, and to be persuaded that they are truths ; but not that it is to live according to them . . . But the learned believe that that faith is confidence or trust that they are saved by the Lord having suffered for them . . .

8988³. Love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour is the very being of Heaven and the Church, and faith is the manifesting thence.

[A.] 899S. Not to those who are not from the faith of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

902^S. A weak state as to the faith of truth. Sig.

903². Passages in the Word where faith is mentioned, and not love. Ex.

903³. Man has his spiritual life through faith from the Word.

903⁹. That which has become of the faith of anyone, even if not true, is not to be rejected, except by a full view. If it is done sooner, the initiation of his spiritual life is extirpated. Examp. and Sig.

9050. 'Heart'=the life of love; 'soul,' the life of faith. . . To the will appertains love . . . to the understanding appertains faith. When these two lives of man are one, the things which are of faith are also of love, for they are loved; and, on the other hand, the things which are of love are also of faith, because they are believed.

—². They who are in faith in the Lord, and thence in charity towards the neighbour, constitute the province of the lungs.

—³. The reason faith appertains to the intellectual faculty, is that this is enlightened by the Lord when the man receives faith; hence, when he is reading the Word, he has light . . . in such things as are of faith.

—⁶. For faith without love is not faith, and love without faith is not love; for love has its quality from faith, and faith has its life from love; hence faith without love is dead, and faith with love is alive.

— In the Word where faith is treated of, love is also treated of.

—⁸. 'Soul,' here=the life of faith, and therefore faith itself with a man, because this constitutes his spiritual life.

9051. It is the interior understanding which is enlightened by the Lord when a man receives faith; for this is in the light of Heaven, and in this is the spiritual life of man . . .

9093². This is by faith to serve the Lord, and by love the world . . . Sig.

9127³. Let those who are sensuous remain in their own faith, provided they believe that . . .

9139⁹. 'A vine'=faith in the Lord; thus it=the Lord as to faith; for the Lord is faith, because faith is from Him; for faith is not faith, except that which is from Him.

9141². The fire of life is man's love, and the light of life is his faith. . . The love of truth and the faith of truth constitute the light of life with a good man and an Angel . . . and the love of falsity and the faith of falsity constitute the lumen of life with an evil man and a Spirit of Hell. 9637⁶.

9146. The goods of the Church are the being and soul of faith; for from them faith is faith, and lives.

9188². Truths once made of faith. . . cannot be eradicated, and the falsities which afterwards become of faith conjoin themselves with them.

9224. That all things of faith also, which are by them, are to be ascribed to the Lord. Sig. . . All things of faith, which are signified by 'the first-born sons,' are those which are from the good of charity; for faith comes forth from this good. For truths, whether taken from the Word or the doctrine of the Church, cannot possibly become of faith, unless there is good in which they may be implanted. Ex. Therefore he who supposes that faith is faith with man, before he wills these truths, and from willing does them, is very much mistaken. . . Truth becomes good, or faith charity, in the will.

9239. On the doctrine of charity and of faith. Gen. art. 9363. 9443. 9585. 9701. 9796. 9974. 10167. 10318. 10386. 10519. 10591. 10714, etc.

9245. That those only are in faith who live according to the precepts of faith, the Lord teaches in John iii. 19-21. 'To come to the light'=to come to faith in the Lord, thus to faith from the Lord.

9274⁶. In the second state (of regeneration) goods . . . go forth out of Heaven through the will into the Intellectual, and there appear in the form of faith. It is this faith which is saving, because it is from the good of love, that is, through the good of love from the Lord; for this faith is charity in form.

9297⁴. See AFFECTION OF GOOD.

9309. Truths from good are the truths of faith, because faith is of good.

9366. (Thus) persuasive faith is a faith of the lips and not of the heart.

9367. They who are in persuasive faith do not know from any internal enlightenment whether it is truths or falsities which they are teaching; nay, they do not care, provided they are believed by the common people; for they are in no affection of truth for the sake of truth. They also defend faith alone more than others, and only make any account of the good of faith, which is charity, in proportion as they can make profit by it.

9368. They who are in persuasive faith recede from faith if they are deprived of honours and gains, provided their reputation is not endangered; for persuasive faith is not within man, but stands outside, being in the memory alone, from which it is taken out when it is being taught; and therefore this faith together with its truths vanishes away after death; for there then remains only that of faith which is within man, that is, which is rooted in good, thus which has become of the life. 10182⁵.

9369. They who are in persuasive faith, are meant by these passages in Matthew. III.

9411. 'They saw God'=faith.

9424². Then at the same time the Lord flows in with faith, by means of the co-operation of the new will . . .

9434². Love is like a fire . . . and faith is like the light from that fire . . . and also is a light which illuminates the interiors of his understanding. Hence it is evident what is the quality of the light from which is the faith with those who are in infernal love. That from this light comes persuasive faith, which in itself is not faith, but a persuasion that it is so for the sake of self and the world, see above.

9439. It is more easy to make a raven white than to make those believe who have once at heart rejected faith. But let these things . . . be for those few who are in faith.

9548⁷. 'The eye,' here, = faith and the intelligence thence.

9680². In the middle Heaven there is conjunction with the Lord through faith implanted in the good of charity towards the neighbour.

9755⁸. 'A stone like a mill-stone' = the truth through which there is faith.

9783. The light received is faith. But . . . faith is not a lamp, and does not illuminate the mind, unless it is from charity, thus unless it is charity . . .

9818. They who are in the Celestial Kingdom do not know truths from knowledge and the faith thence, but from internal perception.

9828. In Heaven, love is the end of all things of the will, and faith is the end of all things of the thoughts.

9947. 'Thou shalt make coats' = the things which are of faith. . . The proceeding from the Spiritual which is from the Celestial is that which is called the faith of truth.

9977. For the faith which looks to good from self, and not from God, is not true faith . . .

9995². As man is ignorant of this, he attributes everything of salvation to faith, and scarcely anything to charity, when yet faith has its being from charity . . .

10033⁸. When Heaven is closed, there does indeed exist the knowledge of the truths of faith . . . but never faith which is faith; for the faith which is faith comes from above, that is, through Heaven from the Lord.

10035. The things which are of love are perceived as goods, and the things which are of faith are perceived as truths. Even falsities are of faith, and evils are of love, with those who are in falsities and evils.

10082. Life from the Divine is given through faith, the first of which is acknowledgment.

10083³. It was frequently said by the Lord, when the sick were being healed, that they should have faith, and that it should be unto them according to their faith. Ill. The reason was, that the first thing of all is to acknowledge that the Lord is the Saviour of the world . . . E.815³. Ath.16. 64. 204. 213.

10131². Without the good of innocence, there does not exist . . . faith which has life in it.

10143⁵. To do according to the Lord's precepts . . . is truly love and truly faith.

10182⁶. It pleases the Lord that man should have strength through faith from love, as to those things which are of his spirit . . .

10201⁵. The faith of everyone is as his love. Ex.

10225⁵. The third state is called the state of intelligence . . . At this time faith commences; for faith is not the faith of the man himself until he has confirmed that which he believes by the ideas of his Own thought. Before this, faith is not his, but is of another in him; for he has believed in the person and not in the thing.

10333. To represent all things of faith serving the good of love. Sig.

10555^e. Unless faith is conjoined with love . . . there is neither faith nor love.

10569². 'Eyes' . . . = faith . . . for . . . faith is truth which is seen and perceived.

10580. A state of faith in God. Sig.

—^e. That 'a rock' = faith, is from the appearances in the other life; they who are in faith dwell there upon rocks.

10582. What is obscure and false of faith. Sig.

—². What is scientific made persuasive, they call faith.

10642². The faith of truth and the love of good conjoin man with the Lord; and the faith of falsity and the love of evil conjoin man with Hell.

10645. They who are in the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom worship Him from faith . . .

—². Many suppose that they worship the Lord through faith, when they believe the things which are of the doctrine of the Church . . .

10659². The Lord inflows into the life of man, and thence into the faith . . .

10714. There are two things which make the life of man, love and faith; love the life of his will, and faith the life of his understanding. Hence such as is the love, and such as is the faith, such is the life.

10715. The love of good and the faith of truth thence make the life of Heaven; and the love of evil and the faith of falsity thence make the life of Hell.

10716. Heaven exists with everyone according to the reception of love and faith from the Lord.

10721. Love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour make Heaven, and also faith; but the latter only in proportion as it has life from those loves.

10762. The external Church exists with those who do the Lord's precepts from faith; for these are they who believe in the Lord.

10786. They confuse (those of the Sixth Earth) by saying that they ought to have faith . . . But they answered them, that they do not know what faith is . . . because they perceive in themselves that it is so. For they were of the Lord's Celestial Kingdom . . . D.5513³.

10787^e. They who receive truths first in the memory, then in the understanding, and at last in the will, are they who are in faith; for they act from faith, which is then called conscience.

H.1³. That at the end of the Church, when there is no longer love, and consequently no longer faith, the Lord will open the Word as to its internal sense. Sig.

3(o). That a Divine which is not perceivable by any idea is not receivable in faith. Refs.

148^e. In the Spiritual Kingdom there is . . . charity; and the light of truth thence is intelligence, which is also called faith.

199. The Lord is present with everyone according to the love and the faith.

424^e. When a man is such, the things which he thinks from the understanding are of his faith, and the things which he thinks from the will are of his love; and therefore with him, faith and love conjoin themselves, like the understanding and the will.

[H.] 473. For whether you say the faith, or the determinate thought of man, it is the same; for what a man believes, he also thinks.

474. Love makes the man, and faith only so far as it proceeds from love; and deeds or works proceed from both.

480^e. Faith is the affection of truth proceeding from heavenly love which is from the Lord. 482.

482. That faith does not remain if it is not from heavenly love. Gen.art. . . There is no faith at all, neither can any exist, with those who are in corporeal and worldly love (alone); it is only knowledge, or the persuasion that it is true because it serves their love. A number of those who supposed that they were in faith were brought to those who were in faith, and communication having been given, they perceived that they had no faith at all. They also afterwards confessed that merely to believe the truth and the Word is not faith, but to love truth from heavenly love, and to will and do it from interior affection. It was also shown, that their persuasion, which they called faith, was only like the light of winter . . . And therefore the light of the persuasive faith with them, the moment it is touched by the rays of the light of Heaven . . . becomes dense darkness. J.37. Life 49. P.170.

N. 35². It comes to the same thing whether you say truth or faith, because faith is of truth and truth is of faith. Refs. Life 43.

108. On faith. Gen.art.

110. Faith enters man, and becomes his, when he wills and loves that which he knows and perceives; meanwhile it is outside of him.

111. Faith is not faith with man unless it becomes spiritual; and it is not spiritual unless it becomes of love; and it becomes of love when a man loves to live truth and good . . .

112. Faith is the affection of truth from willing truth because it is truth; and to will truth because it is truth is the Spiritual itself of man . . . J.36.

120. (Refs. to passages on the subject of faith.) J.39.

J. 24. Faith in impossibilities has no existence; that is, faith in such things as a man thinks are impossibilities.

36. Mere believing is not faith; but to will and do that which is believed is faith.

—². The understanding is the receptacle of faith.

37. That at this day faith within the Church is so rare, that it can scarcely be said there is any . . .

74^e. They said that at this day interior Divine truths are revealed among that nation, and that they are received in spiritual faith, that is, in life and heart.

C.J. 42. In the western quarter (of that London) dwell those who profess faith.

46². Man ought to shun evils and do good as of himself, yet with the acknowledgment that it is from the Lord; and there is no faith before, and still less that thought which he calls faith.

L. 18². There is the faith of God, and there is the faith of man; they have the faith of God who perform repentance; but they have the faith of man who do not perform repentance, and still think about imputation; and the faith of God is living faith, and the faith of man is dead faith.

Life 36. From the love of truth proceeds the perception of truth; from the perception of truth the thought of truth; and from these comes the acknowledgment of truth, which is faith in its own genuine sense.

42. That in so far as anyone shuns evils as sins, he has faith. Gen.art.

— . Faith and life are distinguished from each other as are thinking and doing; (thus) as are the understanding and the will.

44. As it is of faith to know and think, and still more to understand that it is so, it is possible for a man to believe that he has faith, and yet not have it. The reason he has it not, is that he is in evil of life . . .

—^e. Thus is effected the conjunction of faith and life . . .

45. He who does not shun evils as sins has no faith because he is in evil, and evil inwardly hates truth . . .

46. The faith of an evil man is intellectual faith, in which there is nothing of good from the will; thus it is dead faith. (Described by comparisons.)

—^e. Very different is faith in the understanding in which there is good from the will . . .

47. There are many things which appear to be of faith only. Enum. 48, Ex.

50. Hence it may be seen what is spiritual faith, and what is faith not spiritual; and that spiritual faith exists with those who do not commit sins . . .

52. (Thus) there does not exist with man a grain of faith more than there is of life . . . but faith and life march on with equal step.

107. If there were not reception by man, and then thought as from himself, nothing could have been said about faith; for faith is not from man.

F. Title. The Doctrine of the New Jerusalem concerning Faith.

1. That faith is the internal acknowledgment of truth. Gen.art.

— . At this day, by faith nothing else is meant than thought that it is so because the Church so teaches, and because it is not evident before the understanding. For it is said, Believe, and do not doubt. If you answer, I do not comprehend, it is said that therefore it is to be believed. So that modern faith is the faith of what is unknown, and may be called blind faith; and as it is the dictate of one person in another, it is historical faith.

2. Real faith is nothing else than the acknowledgment that it is so because it is true. For he who is in real faith thinks and speaks thus, This is true, and therefore I believe it; for faith is of truth, and truth is of faith . . .

4. As the Angels are in (the spiritual affection of truth) they utterly reject the dogma that the understanding is to be under obedience to faith . . .

6. (Thus) faith and Truth are one . . .

7. The reason 'faith' is mentioned by the Lord . . . was that the Jews did not believe . . . that the Lord was the Messiah . . . and when truth is not believed, faith is mentioned. Still, it is one thing to have faith and believe in the Lord, and another to have faith and believe in some one else.

8. Faith separated from Truth entered and invaded the Church together with the papal dominion, because the chief security of that religion was ignorance of truth.

9. Blind faith also remained afterwards with many of the Reformed, because they separated faith from charity . . .

12. If anyone should say . . . How can I have the internal acknowledgment of truth which is faith? I cannot: I will tell him how he can. Shun evils as sins, and approach the Lord, and you will have as much as you desire.

28. This storehouse (of Knowledges) is in the highest degree necessary, because without it faith cannot be formed; for the Knowledges of truth and good enter into faith and make it. If there are none, faith does not come forth; for a faith void and empty has no existence. If they are few, the faith is scanty and needy; if they are many, the faith is rich and full according to the abundance of them. 29^e.

29. It is (however) the Knowledges of genuine truth and good which make faith, and not at all the Knowledges of falsity; for faith is Truth; and falsity, being opposite to Truth, destroys faith.

31. The Knowledges of truth and good which precede faith appear to some to be of faith; but still they are not . . . They are only of the thought that it is so . . . And the faith that they are Truths, while it is not known that they are so, is a kind of persuasion remote from internal acknowledgment. The moment, however, that charity is implanted, these Knowledges become of faith, but no further than charity is in that faith.

—². He then becomes truly a man . . . of whom charity makes the life, and faith the form, which is beautiful according to the quality thereof; but his faith is then no longer called faith, but intelligence.

34. The Christian faith in a universal idea. Gen.art. R.67. B.116. T.2. 121³.

38. The modern faith in a universal idea. Gen.art.

W. 253³. Faith in its essence is Truth, and Truth is manifold.

428. (They who are in spiritual love . . . have intelligence (inscribed on their life) . . . Neither do these know what faith is. If faith is mentioned they understand Truth.

429. But they who are in spiritual natural love have neither wisdom nor intelligence inscribed on their life, but they have somewhat of faith from the Word, in so far as this somewhat is conjoined with charity . . .

—². But they who have confirmed themselves in faith in what is unknown, and at the same time have been in some affection of truth, are instructed by the Angels according to their reception of Truths, and a life according to them . . .

P. 116. Without this appearance there cannot be . . . faith.

131. (Thus) the faith induced by miracles is not faith, but persuasion; for there is nothing rational in it, still less anything spiritual . . . It is the same with everything a man does from this persuasive faith . . . For a miracle infuses faith by an external way, and not by an internal way; thus from the world, and not from Heaven; and the Lord enters man solely by an internal way, which is through the Word . . .

142^e. It is therefore vain to think that anyone can . . . receive any faith during sickness; for . . . in that faith there is no charity . . .

168². From interior enlightenment from the Lord, a rational man at the first hearing perceives . . . that love is the life of faith, or that faith lives from love . . . Again, that whatever a man believes from love, he also wills and does, and therefore that to have faith is also to do; and also that a wicked man cannot have the love of God, and thus cannot have the faith of God.

170. There is also another kind of enlightenment, by which it is revealed to man in what faith he is . . .

191^e. The internal faith conquers with those who acknowledge God at heart; but the external faith with these who do not acknowledge God at heart, however they may with the lips.

242². Charity does not exist without faith.

274. The faith that man does not live after death . . .

R. v. (The Roman Catholic doctrine of faith.) B.5. 23. iiiia. (The Reformed doctrine of faith.)

3. (Predictions from the Lord concerning Himself and His Church) for those who are in faith from charity, or in truths of wisdom from the good of love. Sig.

111. 'Thou hast not denied My faith' (Rev.ii.13)= that they acknowledge the Word, that it is Divine Truth. (=constancy in truths. E.136.)

124. 'To the Angel in the Church of Thyatira write' = to those and concerning those who are in faith from charity, and thence in good works; and also to those and concerning those who are in faith separated from charity, and thence in evil works.

129. '(I know) thy faith' (ver.19)=the Truth. E.155-

224². The Angels said, What is faith without light?

388. At this day, instead of . . . intelligence they say faith. 420.

401. That everything living of faith has perished. Sig.

417⁴. The Angel cried to the flock of sheep, Do not listen to them. They have not receded from their former faith . . . which faith is not faith in the Lord. Neither is faith a tree; but man. But do repentance, and look to the Lord, and you will have faith; faith before this is not a faith in which there is anything living.

—⁸. The works which (they call) the fruits of faith, are invisible, done within the man by the Holy Spirit, of which the man knows nothing . . .

593. 'Here is the patience and the faith of the saints' (Rev.xiii.10)=that the man of the Lord's New Church is explored by temptations from them, as to the quality of his life and faith.

638. 'The faith of Jesus' (Rev.xiv.12)=faith in the Lord ; for these have faith from the Lord, which faith is 'the faith of Jesus.'

[R.] 891. 'The fearful' = those who are in no faith.

908. This is the reason why . . . the Church has attributed all things to faith, and not to love.

913°. When there is no truth of faith, but faith without truth, 'iron is mixed with clay, which do not cohere.'

937°. The Lord is present with everyone according to faith, and is conjoined according to love. Faith and the consequent presence of the Lord is given through the Knowledges of Truths from the Word . . .

949°. By faith in the Lord is meant trust that He saves ; and they (alone) have this trust who approach Him immediately, and shun evils as sins.

957°. There are two things in this prophetic Book to which all its contents relate. . . The second is, that no faith is to be acknowledged but faith in the Lord.

M. 24°. (The Angel priest spoke) of the union of charity and faith ; but he said, the union of charity and Truth ; because faith is Truth. B.48.

82°. That saving faith is to believe in Him, demonstrated.

164°. (Faith one of the spiritual virtues.)

415°. Frequent speech from the memory . . . introduces a kind of faith.

B. 13. (The Formula Concordiæ on the fruits of faith.)

41. That then the true saving faith, which is faith in one God, united to good works, is acknowledged and received. Gen.art. 43.

43. That saving faith is to believe in Him. III. 117°. T.3.

54. The rulers of the Church insist that the understanding is to be kept under obedience to faith ; nay, that a faith of what is unknown, which is a blind or nocturnal faith, is properly faith. This is the first paradox ; for faith is of truth, and truth is of faith ; and in order that truth may become of faith, it must be . . . seen. . . The paradoxes flowing forth from such a faith are many. Enum. (Among them are) that man, at his first reception of that faith, is like a statue, a stock, or a stone ; and that faith flows in by the mere hearing of the Word . . .

59. That the understanding is to be kept under obedience to faith . . .

— (How the old Church ministers juggle with faith and works. See under FAITH ALONE, here.)

102. That the faith of the New Church cannot possibly be together with the faith of the former Church ; and that if they are together, such a conflict and collision will take place that everything of the Church with the man will perish. Gen.art. T.647, Gen.art.

103°. (Therefore) they who have confirmed with themselves the faith of the old Church, cannot without danger to their spiritual life embrace the faith of the New Church, until they have first rejected and thus extirpated one by one all the points of their former faith, together with its young or eggs, that is, its dogmas.

117. The faith of the New Heaven and of the New Church in a particular form. T.3. De Just. p.16.

—°. The particulars of faith on the part of man . . . T.3.

T. 8. Such is the transformation of natural faith into spiritual faith.

11°. The faith of God enters into man by a prior way, which is from the soul into the higher things of the understanding ; but Knowledges concerning God enter by a posterior way . . . and there is a meeting of the influxes in the midst of the understanding ; and there natural faith, which is only persuasion, becomes spiritual, which is real acknowledgment . . .

57. What need is there of more than two words, omnipotence and faith . . . 770°.

71°. It is also a law of order, that man by his own exertion and power should procure for himself faith by means of truths from the Word, and yet should believe that not a grain of faith is from himself, but from God.

73°. The laws of order prescribed for man, are that man should acquire for himself Truths from the Word, and think of them naturally, and so far as he can, rationally, and thus procure for himself natural faith. The laws of order on the part of God then are, that He should approach, fill the Truths with His Divine Light, and thus fill with the Divine essence man's natural faith, which is only knowledge and persuasion. Thus, and not otherwise, is saving faith produced.

80°. Those are called satans who have confirmed with themselves falsities even to faith.

137°. What is that faith but the sepulchre of our Lord . . . again closed by the soldiers of Pilate . . .
